No other charm can quite compare

With the allure of lustrous hair!

No other Shampoo leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Only Drene with Hair Conditioner reveals up to 33% more lustre than soap . . . yet leaves hair so easy to arrange, so alluringly smooth!

Does your hair look dull, slightly mousy?

No wonder—if you're washing it with cake soap or liquid soap shampoo! Because soap of any sort leaves a soap film which dulls lustre, robs your hair of glamour! Change to Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner! Drene never leaves any dulling film. That's why it reveals up to 33% more lustre!

Does your hair-do require constant fiddling?

Men don't like this business of running a comb through your hair in public! Fix your hair so it stays put! And remember Drene with Hair Conditioner leaves hair wonderfully easy to manage, right after shampooing! No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to arrange!

Sssssshhhhh! But have you dandruff?

Too many girls have! And what a pity. For unsightly dandruff can be easily controlled if you shampoo regularly with Drene. Drene with Hair Conditioner removes every trace of embarrassing dandruff the very first time you use it!

BACK-VIEW glamour—in this lovely, new evening hair-do! The back hair is set as for a page boy, then pulled together with the stunning beaded hair ornament. The shining smoothness of her hair is due to Drene with Hair Conditioner! No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

This is our 72nd column! Our 40 million readers now know that we never rave without reason.

★ ★ ★ ★

And, brethren and sistren, we're raving about two new films coming around the mountain of the New Year.

★ ★ ★ ★

First, there is "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo", the deeply moving dramatization of Captain Ted Lawson's true account of the surprise thrill of the war—the first bombing of Tokyo by those gallant men who took off from Shangri-La!

Spencer Tracy turns in his most commanding performance as Lieutenant Colonel "Jimmy" Doolittle; handsome Van Johnson (did you read Life?) adds to his laurels as Lawson; and Robert ("Hargrove") Walker is the dead-eye gunner of their B-25 bomber, "The Ruptured Duck."

★ ★ ★ ★

Lovely Phyllis Thaxter (a new dream) plays Ellen, Lawson's bride, warming the picture with a tender romantic note that makes "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" a truly magnificent story of deep-abiding love and inspiring courage.

★ ★ ★ ★

Then, M-G-M has forthcoming a gay, gorgeous, grand and Techniglorious film delight, "Meet Me In St. Louis." It takes you back to the St. Louis Fair as a guest of the Smiths, a family that might be your own—if you have one.

★ ★ ★ ★

Judy Garland is the star—young, vivacious, golden-voiced Judy—as the girl just awakening to love for the boy next door. And with her, as an impish, devilish, utterly lovable kid sister, is that great artist, little Margaret O'Brien.

★ ★ ★ ★

Happy-hearted, brimming with music and the joy of living, "Meet Me In St. Louis" includes seven smash songs, among them that bell-ringing success, "Clang, Clang, Clang, Went the Trolley" that you're hearing on the hit parade.

★ ★ ★ ★

When you "Meet Me In St. Louis" and spend "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo", you'll get a good idea of the great entertainment to expect from M-G-M all through this Happy New Year.

★ ★ ★ ★

Which, by the way, we've wished you.

DREAM-SCHEME:

Sue Ladd hadn't forgotten that Sunday was her birthday—what woman would—but she hadn't made any party plans. The night before, Alan had given her a wide gold bracelet in which was set a tiny watch, and she assumed that it was gift enough. When she said, Sunday afternoon, that she was sleepy, Alan suggested that she take a nap. He personally escorted her upstairs, covered her with a warm robe and drew the curtains. Vaguely she thought, "How gallant of him"—as any wife would—but that was all.

She awakened to the tune of "Happy Birthday" sung by a grinning chorus of friends around her bed. Alan had planned a party for her, several days earlier, and had managed to keep it secret. This was a major victory, because Sue usually senses his "surprises" about twenty seconds after he has planned them, and—by looking inquiring—breaks Alan down to the point where he has to confide his machinations.

The newlyweds! Col Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, and Actress Faye Emerson.

TROUPER ON TOUR

Bing Crosby was gone for nine weeks on his U.S.O.-Hollywood Victory Committee Overseas trip. He traveled back and forth across the Atlantic on troop ships, giving shows to as many as 12,000 men during the voyage. In nine weeks, he figures that he did between 135 and 150 shows—he lost definite count. He was in France four and a half weeks, and managed to get to Paris twice, once for only a day and once for three days.

But the highlights, the precious flashes of quaint experience not again to be recaptured in a lifetime, were these: While he was in Glasgow, he was recognized by a group of children and adults on the street. One little man stopped Bing, and circled him like a terrier circling a porcupine. At last he spoke in a rich, Scottish burr: "Dinna tell me, noo, that th' sweet singer is a wee, fat man!"

In England, Bing was impressed with the valiant, quite daily fortitude of the British. He had some experience with robot bombs, too. "One," he said, "would flatten this entire NBC building, leaving nothing but rubble and breaking every window, and flattening many other buildings for blocks around." The sound, said Bing of an approaching robot, was like the sound of a small plane; then the motor cut out with a glub-glub-glub sound, then complete silence ensued, and after that—whomzowie! "And I rolled under the Ostermore," said Bing, who had been cautioned to get as far as possible from shattering glass.

He was in a restaurant in Soho one night when a crowd, learning that he was dining in a second-floor restaurant, gathered in the street below. The famous London bobbies approached Bing and asked him if he would step to the balcony and say something to disperse the crowd, which was endangering lives as the street was narrow and the danger from bombing, great. Bing went to the balcony and a Cockney called up, "And would you be singing us the Ave Maria from the picture?"

"I'd have to have a spot of background music for that," Bing explained. "Would another song do?" They said it would—"Pennies From Heaven."

Our G.I's. asked Bing to sing, first of all in every program, "White Christmas." Next to that they liked "San Fernando Valley." And when they had a chance to talk to The Groaner, they wanted to know: Did the folks back home really think the war was nearly won? Didn't they realize that the hardest, bloodiest, and most bitter battles were still to be fought? Bing reassured them, but you might write to your own G.I. and tell him that we are under no false impression, that we are backing him to the limit with work and prayer.

After each of Bing's performances, the men whom he had entertained would cluster around the truck or platform on which he had appeared and offer him souvenirs. He accepted a few and brought them home to his four boys. For Dixie he brought some perfume from Paris, and he tried to pick up a pretty from Cartier, but he was told that the price would be absurdly high and the merchandise inferior. "Come back later," the celebrated jeweler advised, "and I will have things. I would rather keep your friendship than sell you what I have to offer at present."

When Bing was asked what he had brought

Sue Carol and Alan Ladd were on hand when the Hollywood Turf Club opened its gates (for the first time since 1941). You'll be seeing Alan soon in Paramount's "Salty O'Rourke".

Clark Gable's back home, but still with the boys overseas on "Command Performance."

back for himself, he said, "I brought myself back." That one statement is eloquent of Bing's understanding of what he heard and saw, tasted and felt and experienced. To be alive is the ultimate achievement among the men with whom Bing had spent those crowded weeks.

When the ship on which Bing was returning to this country came within sight of the Statue of Liberty, every man aboard who could get on deck was there. Men without an arm or a leg, men frightfully shot up. Some had been gone two years, some three. These men stood at the rail and looked at the Lady who had been carrying a torch for them all that time. And they wept.

BAIT:

A friend of the Zachary Scotts telephoned frantically: "May I borrow Waverly for an hour?" the friend wanted to know. Waverly is the Scotts' small daughter.

The friend continued breathlessly, "I know of a market that has just received a shipment of bananas, but the owner won't sell the fruit to anyone except a mother having a small child. I'm desperate for bananas, so I want to borrow Waverly."

These are the conditions that prevail.

GOOD FORM:

When Betty Grable was touring with her husband, Harry James, on his one-night-stand circuit, she was criticized by an editorial writer whose column was published in a small eastern city. It seems that the clerk in the hotel in which Betty and Harry stayed was questioned in regard to Miss Grable's graciousness and charm.

The clerk was quoted by the reporter as saying, "She's snooty. Of course, you couldn't expect Betty Grable to walk up and register like common people. She let Harry James do it."

Just to keep Emily Post from bursting into righteous flame, may we mention a small point of etiquette? Betty Grable would have been showing very bad form (a departure for her) if she had registered. Although small town hotel clerks may not know it, the proper procedure demands that a husband register: Mr. and Mrs. Harry James, Los Angeles, California.

When a pleasant and friendly girl is branded "snooty" because her manners happen to be perfect, it is high time that someone began to distribute books of etiquette with each theatre ticket purchased.

KHAKI WACKY:

While she was working in "Women's Army" at Metro, Susan Peters staggered home one evening, half a pace behind General Exhaustion. She had been rehearsing close order drill all day in WAC gruesome twosomes, and she had twin blisters on her heels large enough to house a turret gunner. Her back ached, her head ached, her legs ached.

Collapsing on the lounge, she slept for thirty minutes, then awakened with barely enough strength and curiosity to reach to the nearby coffee table for the day's mail. The first envelope contained a brisk recruiting folder: "Join the WAC!" it enjoined.

Miss Peters turned over and went back to sleep.

REFORMED HEELS:

On the set for "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes," Mr. E. G. Robinson, late of the Homicidal Set but now operating as a fine-souled Swedish farmer, was expressing his happiness over his current role opposite Margaret O'Brien.

"It's practically the first time in my career he grinned, "that my leading lady's height has presented no problems. I can't tell you how nice it is to play a scene with Margaret wearing her shoes; most of my feminine partners have faced me stocking-footed."

It isn't that Mr. Robinson is so short, but merely that he has—because of his virile roles—usually been cast opposite statuesque female players.

THIS IS THE ARMY:

Ann Sothern (who will be a mother by the time you read this) had been making birthday plans for weeks for her husband, Bob Sterling. She bought gifts and wrapped them. She collected red points so that his favorite steaks would be available. She invited a few friends in for a quiet celebration. She hoped and planned and jubilated. And then she received a wire from Bob saying that his leave had been cancelled.

So Ann had the party anyway. Everyone present wrote him a note, the gist of which was, "The Stork cancels no flights. Better get here the next time."

NEIGHBORS:

The Dennis Morgan family, with their three children, have moved to La Canada, an airy suburb near Pasadena. Their next-door neighbors are the Bob Aldas and their two children, but it is doubtful that there will be much inter-visiting. Although Bob and Dennis can talk across to one another from back yard to back yard, their properties are separated by a canyon about 500 feet deep. "Never mind," Dennis told Bob. "Those kids of ours will have some sort of a tunnel or suspension bridge built in no time. Especially if they let Kristin do the planning."

Kris, now ten, should be an honorary member of the Cub Scouts. She has not heard, for fear it would infuriate her, the first comment Mrs. Morgan made when she walked in the living room of her new home and sighed with delight over the handsome, curving stairway.

"How lovely it will be for Kristin to descend as a bride," she said.

SHIFTING:

James M. Crain's incisive novel "Mildred Pierce" will be filmed as "House Upon The Sand." The change of title is not the only shifting to be done. When Joan Crawford was being tested for her Mildred Pierce role, the director said tentatively, "I think we could remove the shoulder pads in that dress."

There was a moment's breathless silence on the set. Miss Crawford's wide shoulders, together with her generous mouth, have long been glamour trademarks of this particular star. Yet, such is her determination to develop a new personality, that the huge pads were discarded.

And the next day the director said, "Let's make some alterations in your make-up. A natural mouth, please."

Something good may come from this.

RAIN BEAU

Ida Lupino started out in a soaking, driving, crashing California rain with the intention of visiting a friend in a Los Angeles hospital. Her car slipped along cautiously until she drove through a puddle just a little too fast and flooded its ambition department. That ended her motoring.

But with Miss Lupino, a promise is a promise. She had said she would visit the hospital that day. She intended to do so. Lifting a drenched thumb, she stepped to

Movieland's NEW PICTURE GUIDE

GUEST IN THE HOUSE (United Artists), Hunt Stromberg's version of the stage play by Hagar Wilde and Dale Eunson, with Anne Baxter in a role unlike anything she's had before. As Evelyn Heath, the invalid girl who connives to bring evil and unhappiness into an otherwise normal family household, she displays great talent for the dramatic, as well as sweet-young romance—and shifts from one portrayal to the other faster than you can say Ralph Bellamy is a swell actor, which in this he very definitely is. Honors to Ruth Warrick, too, and to Marie McDonald, Aline MacMahon, Scott McKay and Jerome Cowan—whose fine individual performances each rate special mention in giving "praise due" to this story with a gripping psychological climax.

HOLLYWOOD CANTEEN (Warner Bros.), being just what the title promises, classifies as a grand scale review featuring some forty outstanding movie names. Bette Davis, Joe E. Brown, Jack Benny, Eddie Cantor, John Garfield, Paul Henreid, Jack Carson and Ida Lupino number among the long-list-of-many stars appearing briefly as themselves, with Robert Hutton and Joan Leslie carrying the thread of a romance story which wanders through incidentally, like most musical comedy books. Music ranges from songs by the Andrews Sisters and Roy Rogers through numbers by Jimmy Dorsey's and Carmen Cavallaro's bands, to longhair stuff by violinist Josef Szigetti.

SUNDAY DINNER FOR A SOLDIER (20th Century-Fox) is all one family can contribute to the war effort. But to John Hodiak, the invited soldier, it means a lot. It may be that Anne Baxter has something to do with this.

THE WAY AHEAD (Released through 20th Century-Fox) was made in England, and stars an old Hollywood favorite, David Niven, with an all-British cast.

EXPERIMENT PERILOUS (RKO-Radio), based on the best-seller by Margaret Carpenter, is a psychological mystery pushed back into the 1890's. with an accent on beautiful period costumes for Hedy Lamarr. Paul Lucas is the psychopathic husband in the case, with George Brent (in the role of a New York doctor) to the rescue—and to love, with the other man's wife.

ROUGHLY SPEAKING (Warner Bros.), screen version of the Louise R. Pierson autobiography, with Rosalind Russell, Jack Carson, Donald Woods, Alan Hale, and Craig Stevens. It's the amusing, daring story of an independent, determined girl born considerably before her time, when college educations and jobs for women—what never? Well, hardly ever! The time, from 1902 to the present.

TOMORROW, THE WORLD (United Artists), with Frederic March, Betty Field, Agnes Moorhead and Joan Carroll, is a drama of vital interest to Americans today, for it is more than just a story of one little Nazified 12-year-old named Emil

Chicken Broth

WHEN Louis B. Mayer was a very small boy, chicken broth was, to him, a rare delicacy. He vowed then that when he grew up, he'd have it every day. His broth is a Hollywood legend now.

Frances Gifford likes it so well that she wheedled the formula from Chef Felix to pass on to you.

It's very simple. Just collect these ingredients from your favorite market:

1 6 to 8 lb. hen
2 tsp. of salt
2 medium sized onions
1 large tomato rice or noodles and parsley

Place the chicken in an 8-quart kettle, add 2½ quarts of cold water, and bring to a quick boil, skimming off any foam on surface. Turn flame down to simmer and add salt. Now follow the pictures.

Frances adds onions and tomatoes, then lets simmer for three hours.

Chicken is removed and broth is strained. Add salt if necessary.

White meat is placed on wooden chopping board, cut into cubes.

She adds cubes and equal part of cooked rice or noodles to liquid.

A couple of pinches of finely chopped parsley, reheat, and the golden broth is ready to serve.

The "SCENTSIBLE" SOLUTION

BY SHIRLEY COOK

The what, where, when and why of perfume pageantry, rightly revealed in this "scentsational" story. Hark to Marilyn, the lark, and get the lowdown on lure

THERE are any number of ways to define beauty. Marilyn Maxwell, now playing in M-G-M's Between Two Worlds, is one of them! According to the lady herself, though, loveliness is not enough. It's the personality behind it that puts the plus in its proper place.

As Marilyn points out, you choose your make-up to suit costume and coloring. But your complimentary aromatic aura is something else. Fragrance must match your mood. Better still, several fragrances might reflect many of them.

However, to make the most "scents," you should clearly understand all sides of the perfumed picture. Follow Miss Maxwell's personal program—and you will.

Wherever Marilyn goes, a faint but pervasive sweetness is sure to follow. For such all-over, all-day freshness, she finishes her bath with a cologne or toilet water rubdown. Either one (and they're very similar) has a refreshing way of leaving skin tingling and smooth to the touch.

Then, PERFUME, the precious and persuasive keynote of her fragrance family. To get the most pleasure from her perfume, Marilyn chooses it with care. Sometimes a brilliant Hollywood opening is in the offing and then she wants a scent that will express sparkle and formality. Or she may be planning a personal appearance, one that calls for drama and excitement. For this, she will want a rich and smoldering aroma. Brief vacations and the great outdoors call for something light and floral; and the romantic side of life responds to a subtle, dreamy bouquet.

Making sure that the perfume she is choosing will truly express her mood and herself, Marilyn tries it right on her skin. That's because, sniffed in the bottle, the true scent is confused by the alcohol content. And because perfume changes with and blends with individual skin chemistry to take on the "flavor" and character of the wearer.

When, at last, she has found the very essence of glamour and allure, she guards it wisely and well. The perfume, as she applies it, is touched lightly back of the ears, at the hairline and neckline. Here, in these places, the normal action of her skin helps to keep the scent warmly alive, intimately provocative.

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

AT PARAMOUNT:

DUFFY'S TAVERN, with everyone on the Paramount lot excepting Bob Hope, who has suspended Paramount. When he was called for this picture, he realized that the shooting schedule would interfere with certain bond and hospital tours that he wanted to make, so he chose Uncle Sam in preference to a weekly pay check. No wonder everyone in Hollywood is claiming him with the proud exclamation, "That's my boy, Bob!"

THE LOST WEEKEND is still in production. When Ray Milland reached home after a rugged day's shooting, his wife said solicitously, "Wouldn't you like a cup of hot tea?" Ray executed a whirling dervish arabasque. He had been drinking tea on the set all day—it's the cinema substitute for alcohol. Ray has worried a good deal about his part—of only one thing is he sure: Jane Wyman is doing the most brilliant acting job of her career.

THE LOVE LETTERS, with Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Cecil Kellaway, Ann Richards and Byron Barr is still shooting. Incidentally, Gig Young's real name is Byron Barr. Warner's had him change it because they felt that "Barr" was a Lost Weekend of a name. Paramount allowed the other Byron Barr to keep his legal tag.

THE AFFAIRS OF SUSAN, with Joan Fontaine, Walter Abel, Dennis O'Keefe and George Brent should be a tasty tidbit. It tells the story of an actress who is about to be married to a man (Abel) who learns that there have been 3 other men in her life. To avoid making the same mistakes with her that cost these 3 men her love, Abel invites the 3 to a bachelor dinner to find out all he can about Joan. At the end of the dinner party, all four men have decided that they are in love with Joan, so rush to her apartment to win her back again. Take it from there, Jackson.

THE VIRGINIAN is a remake of the old classic with able Joel McCrea in the title role, opposed by Brian Donlevy as the infamous Trampas. Sonny Tufts is Steve, The Virginian's best, but weak, friend whom The Virginian sentences to hanging. Barbara Britton is the girl. It is hoped that this will prove to be a better vehicle for her than "Till We Meet Again" was.

SCARED STIFF, with Jack Haley, Ann Savage, Roger Pryor and Barton MacLane, is a who-done-it of rare merit because the script was written by that master of detective fiction, Geoffrey Homes. Geoffrey Homes is the penname of Dan Mainwaring (pronounced Mannering), who is one of the wittiest and best liked writers in the film industry.

AT COLUMBIA:

COUNTERATTACK with Paul Muni, Marguerite Chapman, and Adeline DeWalt Reynolds is still in production.

HERE'S MODESS with TWO wonderful kinds of sanitary protection. Now you can take your choice.

1. Softer, safer Modess with a fine deodorant powder sealed in—for those who want daintiness protection right inside a napkin. Tried out for a year by thousands of women; tested by a famous impartial laboratory and proved to be most effective.*

2. Softer, safer Modess—without deodorant—if you'd rather have it that way.

And, either way, you're bound to get greater safety, greater softness, because:

209 nurses, in hospital tests, found Modess gives far more protection than nationally known layer-type napkins.

49,701 women stated that they switched to Modess because it's "So soft"... "So safe"... or "So comfortable."

Both kinds of Modess cost the same. But—to get softer, safer sanitary protection—be sure to ask for Modess!

3. Modess has been proved by U.S. Testing Co., Inc., to guard daintiness more effectively than any other napkin containing a deodorant.

4. Only Modess gives you such proof of its effectiveness. So if you prefer a napkin with a deodorant right in it, Modess is the only napkin for you.

Hedy Lamarr, more beautiful than ever, at last realizes her long-coveted dream to play in a costume piece. In RKO's "Experiment Perilous," with George Brent, the lamarrvelous lure is enhanced by the garb of the 'nineties. Another of her favorite dreams will be realized when she and Husband John Loder become parents some time in the spring.

Judy LAUGHS IT OFF

Embarrassing moments turned into amusing fun-for-alls; it takes a sense of humor, but Judy has what it takes

By MARION COOPER

IT was three years ago, and Judy Garland was lunching with Alfred Lunt at "21" in New York. She had just met him for the first time, and besides he was one of her favorite actors—two circumstances which made her very anxious to make a good impression. She wasn't doing too badly at it either, even though the topic of conversation was Europe—a place which Mr. Lunt knew like a book, and which Judy knew only from a book—when there was an interruption. When they finally resumed their conversation, Judy had forgotten what they were talking about. She assumed they were starting afresh.

"You'd love Venice," said Lunt, enthusiastically.

"Oh, but I do," said Judy, beaming, "especially the roller coasters they have there."

There was dead silence while Mr. Lunt visibly racked his brain, trying to remember what part of Venice he had overlooked. Suddenly the horrible realization dawned on our heroine: he was still talking about Europe, and not the amusement pier near Hollywood. There was an embarrassed moment, until Judy's sense of humor got the upper hand, and she started laughing. "I'm sorry," she said. "You're in Italy, and I'm in California."

"By that time we were both laughing," Judy said, "and what could have been a very awkward moment was very amusing, instead. I've learned to laugh it off, no matter what happens. In self-defense, I had to. No one gets into more spots than I do. If I took myself seriously, as I once did, I'd be constantly embarrassed. But I honestly believe that if you can laugh at yourself, most of the rough spots in your life will be automatically smoothed.

"For instance, I used to suffer with self-consciousness when I walked in on a party, and found the room filled with important people I'd never met, or knew only slightly. Now I usually break the ice by telling about my latest faux pas. And believe me, I'm never at a loss to think of one. (Continued on page 80)

G. I. JOE IN HOLLYWOOD

By KAY PROCTOR

"HOLLYWOOD is wonderful." "Hollywood stinks." "Hollywood is a dream come true." "Hollywood is an overgrown jerk town."

These are some of the contradictory statements made by the G.I. Joes who came to Hollywood to make "Winged Victory"—the picture version of the Army Air Forces Broadway success.

It was Old Home Week for a few of the 300 soldiers in the unit, and they reveled in it. Lon McCallister, George Reeves, Edmond O'Brien, Barry Nelson, and Richard Travis were all well on the way to screen stardom before donning khaki; Lane "Shotgun" Britton was one of 20th Century-Fox's ace make-up men; Howard Shoup was a top designer at MGM; and Ben Maddox used to write magazine stories about Hollywood.

As against this handful of men, however, there were scores of other young Americans, average fellows from average American cities and towns, who suddenly woke up one day to find the impossible had happened. They were "movie stars" themselves—for a few weeks anyway—privileged to walk unchallenged through studio gates, meet and talk with the great and near-great of the town, and otherwise taste first-hand of the fabled glamour of Hollywood. (Subject, of course, to the very strict military regulations.)

What would you think of Hollywood, were you suddenly to become a movie actor? That's what we asked these G. I.'s, and these are their candid comments

What about WILLIAMS?

She's all wet! But on her it looks good. Esther of the chic chassis has been high diving to success ever since her first belly-flop at the age of eight "Bathing Beauty" gave Esther stellar rating; now she and Van Johnson share honors in "Thrill of a Romance". See her in "Ziegfeld Follies", too.

Yep, her own Victory plot! What more incentive would a vegetable need than to be tended by La Williams!

No time out for make-up repairs. Here, it's a case of the mountain coming to Mohammed.

IF Esther Williams suddenly walked into the Brown Derby sporting a mermaid's tail, no one would be at all surprised. And it couldn't happen to a nicer girl.

Esther enjoys the distinction of being the only kid in Hollywood about whom you can say "she isn't dry behind the ears," and mean it.

It has been variously said by the local wits: (a) that Esther completely justifies the guy who first invented swimming, (b) that her form divine is reason enough for the swim suit people to stay in business, and (c) that if more gals looked like her, every man in the country would toss his dark glasses into the drink.

From broad swimmers' shoulders the Williams torso is whittled down to a hand-span waist, lean hips, and long, lovely legs that boost her height to a graceful five-foot-seven. It's topped off by a pixie-pretty face and a mop of brownette hair.

At M-G-M she has managed (Continued on page 77)

Harmonizing with Peggy Ryan of the hep-set, or giving a suds-solo for the soundtrack; he just "Can't Help Singing."

HE did cat meows, groans and yelps over the radio; he was thrown out of any number of casting offices in Hollywood, more than once.

But for all that—yes, despite or because of his slightly wacky sense of humor, and his gift of gab, and his unfailing habit of getting into scrapes and having things happen to him—Bob Paige is Deanna Durbin's leading man in "Can't Help Singing." He's a star.

Bob does everything in a manner all his own. He doesn't even study a film role the way other actors do. Out in the Valley, his neighbors were more than a little fascinated when they saw him walk daily around his swimming pool, for weeks and weeks, with a lady in his arms. The lady borne was Betty, his wife—but it was an unusual avocation, all the same, and (Continued on page 64)

THE DIARY OF A Doting Dad

By BRIAN DONLEVY

WELL, Miss Donlevy, I have just finished helping your mom put you to bed on the night of your first birthday. As you perfectly well know, because you respond to a request for same, a "big love" is a Donlevy family term for a kiss, and I would like to draw your attention to the fact that it was very tough for me to get a "big love" from you tonight. You were too interested in that lamb.

Yes, ma'am, I know I gave it to you. But what's the big idea of devoting yourself to it in preference to your dear old dad? It only plays, upon being wound up, "Where, Oh Where Has My Little Dog Gone?" Your dad, with only a little swizzling, will sing "Mademoiselle From Armentiers." (Cont'd on page 85)

Daddy Donlevy opens his diary for the third time to give us a peek at the daily goings-on of his darlin' dotter, Judy Ann

1. Judy Ann, you were a year younger here than you are now (see photo extreme left), and I was trying to convince you that I'm not nearly so tough as the movie roles I play . . . 2. I guess by now you're convinced. You seem to enjoy being with me almost as much as I do having you around. And don't think I'm not flattered by that . . . 3. I never dreamed you'd be this much fun. In fact, before you were born, I was plenty worried. I didn't see how a little kid could possibly be anything but a lot of fuss and trouble . . . 4. Boy, how wrong I was! There's more fun to you per square inch than anyone could possibly dream . . . 5. And you've done what babies always do for parents. Marjorie and I are even closer to each other now than ever . . . 6. Honey, I wish I could be flying a plane in this war as I was for the last. But they've got me grounded. So I'm doing what little I can, playing service camps and giving bond shows . . .

YOUR PROBLEM AND MINE

By Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve that problem for you. Write her at Movieland Magazine, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Dear Miss Wyman:

I would like very much for you to help me with my problem.

Here it is: Although I am only fifteen, I know very definitely that I want to be a singer for a career. My voice is good, and everyone encourages me to take it seriously, and sing in public.

However, I am a cripple, and extremely conscious of the fact, and this is always holding me back. I do not feel self-pity, but I just feel that everyone is noticing my handicap rather than my singing.

If I continue to sing, how do you suggest that I go about it?

Yours sincerely,
Mary Louise

Dear Mary Louise:

Certainly if your voice is promising, and you love singing, I feel you should continue with this work. Your attitude is fine, and you must overcome this self-consciousness about yourself. Remember Connie Boswell is one of our finest vocalists, and is similarly handicapped, but not the least bit self-conscious about the fact. Her personality and her voice overcame this obstacle a long time ago, if it ever did exist.

Although you do not say so in your letter, you are undoubtedly in school. Hence, I would suggest that you get the most out of your schooling by taking all the singing and dramatics that your school affords, and learn the fundamentals of music.

Good luck, and best wishes to you.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My problem involves my family's treatment of me. You see, I am sixteen years old, almost seventeen, and my parents won't let me date boys. However, they let my older sister date when she was fifteen.

Don't you think this is unfair of my folks, especially when all the other girls at school my age go out with boys? Don't you think my parents old fashioned?

Worriedly,
Anne K.

Dear Anne:

I can see your point of view on this dating situation, especially when you recall that your sister was going out with boys when she was your age.

But remember one important point: there wasn't a war on when she was young and given the privilege of going with boys. Today, with the whole country in an abnormal state and all of our lives upset, it is a wise mother who interests her young daughter in other activities—war work, girls' clubs, etc.; and likewise, it is a wise daughter who understands that her mother is only trying to protect her in following this procedure.

In normal times, perhaps you would be considered old enough to go out with boys of your own age group, but you should respect your mother's desire to help you in this matter during wartime. Why not give her a chance?

Sincerely yours,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

Since you are married, I think you might be able to help me in my troubles.

You see, they concern my mother-in-law. I live with her since my husband has gone overseas, and although I know she doesn't mean to cause trouble between us, she has taken to opening my husband's letters to me before I get home from work.

I feel that this is going too far, that those letters are personal between Bill and myself, but I don't know how to tell her so without hurting her.

What would you suggest.

Sincerely,
Helen L.

Dear Helen:

Yes, I certainly agree with you that your mail is your own personal property, and especially letters from your husband. It is really inexcusable to open another person's mail, but you must make allowances in this case.

Perhaps, your mother-in-law is simply over-anxious about her son, and I feel sure she does not realize what she is doing, as a result.

Why don't you sit down with her and explain the situation to her the way you did in your letter? I am certain she will understand, especially if you are careful of her feelings.

Otherwise, there is no alternative for you but to rent a box in your local post office, or have your mail addressed to your place of business.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am a freshman in college, and I am in love with a boy who is in the Navy in the South Pacific. We have known each other a long time, and have planned our future together, although we won't marry until we both get a chance to finish college.

Here is our problem: We are of different religions, and both his family and mine are against our marriage. They think this difference will never let our marriage work out, but we think we are intelligent people and that certainly we can solve this problem in the next two years.

Do you think we are right?

Bonnie P.

Dear Bonnie:

Yes, Bonnie, I do think you are right in your attitude. You are both evidently looking at this problem in an intelligent fashion, and certainly seem willing to make any personal sacrifices that may be involved.

Where religion is concerned, the very war we are fighting today is reason enough for us all to know that intolerance and narrow-mindedness are a thing of the past, and common understanding and tolerance have taken their place.

Good luck to both of you.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

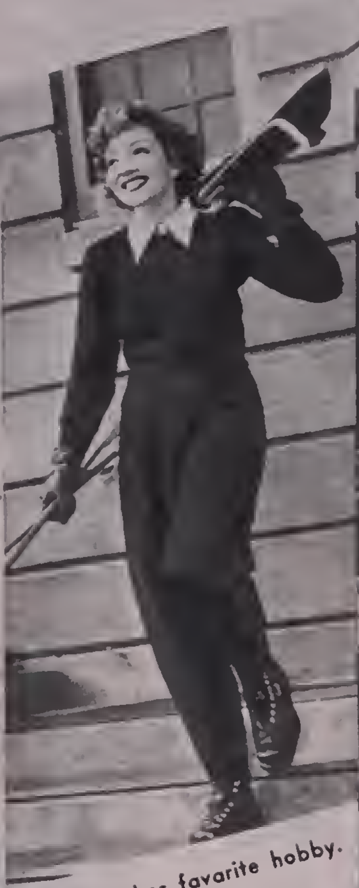
Not starboard, star-aboard!

A mail time dictator, with her secretary.



Skiing is her favorite hobby.

Her mother; her "Zaza" costume.

Just ask the gal who is one! We asked Claudette Colbert. A star for ten years, she should be an authority on the subject

TEN years ago, Claudette Colbert and a comparatively unknown Clark Gable made a picture called "IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT." It won the lady an Academy Award and shoved Mr. G. precipitously into prominence.

Claudette was a star then. She has been ever since, despite the show business axiom that it is harder to remain on top than it is to get there in the first place.

Staying in the spotlight is a tough racket of wheels within wheels, and not merely a process of keeping your face clean and smiling sweetly at the customers.

Without taking her own personality and attractiveness into consideration (I'll get to that later), Claudette divides the "how" for staying in the upper brackets into two main categories: What you do on the screen and what you do off. Let's take the latter first.

Time was when closets of clothes, a car as long as a B-29 and a house suitable for the Republican convention were de rigeur for stellar personalities. Baby lions, herds of trained (Continued on page 51)

THE QUIET LIFE WITH HOPE

SEVEN years ago, I signed my first contract to go on the air with Bob Hope. I didn't know what I was getting into.

I thought it was merely a job, a way of eating regularly three times a day. That just shows you how innocent I was.

Since then, I have been unceremoniously dunked in the Pacific, have frozen in the Aleutians, steamed quietly in the tropics, made the personal acquaintance of every railroad car in this country and most of the planes, played shows for ten guys or ten thousand and forgotten completely what sleep was. And I've never had so much fun in my life.

I've wondered many times why Bob didn't have a nervous breakdown about once every six months. And, after seven years, I (Continued on page 74)

A GOOD many years ago a slim individual of seven fixed, with an historical eye, her five-and-a-half-year-old sister, Rita, and announced with befitting solemnity, "Rita, this day will never come again. I want to remember it forever. I want to remember how you are, and the way I am right now, all the rest of our lives. Will you make me a drawing for my keepsake box?"

Which explains why Jeannie Crain now owns a small pencil drawing that was created during Miss Rita's pre-kindergarten period.

This little ceremony also explains another important facet of the Crain personality: there is an eagerness about her, an avidness, an absorbed-in-the-instant air that arrests the interest of the casual observer more effectively than any jive routine recently patented could possibly do. This is proved by the remark of the redoubtable Mr. Flynn, the first time he caught sight of Jeanne. She was seated in the corner of a huge lounge, watching a mad party swirl around her, not participating physically, but missing nothing. "Come over here," ordered Mr. Flynn, plucking a fellow guest by the sleeve, "I want you to tell me who this girl is. She isn't doing anything, but she's so alive that, without moving, she seems kind of like a pillar of light."

A statement like that from Mr. Flynn—who has seen everything—is nice going in anyone's league. The most astonishing thing about it is that the description is exact, —and that it explains, in a measure, her entrance into pictures.

To go back to the very origin of this shaft of light, she started as a mere glimmer in a little desert town named Barstow, Calif. Her stay on the desert was brief, however, as her parents moved to Los Angeles when Jeanne was only a few months old. She was a world veteran of nineteen months when her younger sister was born, and she was a citizen of about five when she began to notice the fact that has become the Rosetta Stone of her existence: time passes too fast. She always awakened early in the morning, but she had barely started on all the fascinating things that make up the occupations of a thriving junior before she had to go to bed at night. She had scarcely begun to enjoy the long days of summer with trips to the beach, before (Continued on page 69)

Only 19, but Jean Crain complains that time moves too fast. She wants to hold on to every beautiful moment of her life . . . to make it live forever in her memory!

It may well be Lon McCallister on the wire!

James Craig

THE CRAIG BOYS

By MARCIA DAUGHTREY

Father and son, Senior and Junior; a parent who's really a pal. You can tell that, just from seeing them together—which is a lot of the time

WHEN Jimmie Craig, Jr. (more commonly known as The Bub) was born, Jimmie, Sr. celebrated the occasion by driving from the hospital directly to a sports equipment store and buying the best 12-gauge shotgun available. He officially launched it two weeks later when he went dove hunting. That shotgun is one of Jim's most prized trusts: he never refers to it by any title but "The Bub's gun." When Jim cleans and oils it nowadays, The Bub stands by, watching, and knowing that the shooting iron is his, but that Dad is keeping it in use and in good condition until

A youth spent in Texas made Jim a pushover for the out-of-doors.

Flat on his back? What's wrong with that? The Bub's got things in hand.

THE CRAIG BOYS

Proof that happy marriages can happen in Hollywood! Three in the family; another on the way.

Hey! Watch the purp! Or isn't that rationed meat he's after?

A real rancher—it's food as well as fun with Craig.

His next picture will be "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes," with the lovable little Margaret O'Brien.

He just finished "Gentle Annie." It will be coming your way soon.

Who said the guy can't throw the bull?

he is old enough to master it, and to use it safely.

This small, eloquent incident tells as much as one needs to know about big Jim Craig. It indicates his imagination, his sentimentality (which is not mawkish, but aggressively masculine), and his pattern of living both as a person and as a parent.

Jim, while being gifted with ample acting ability, restricts his accomplishment rigorously to professional moments; out of camera range he is probably the least actorish man in Hollywood. He could return to his native Tennessee and talk with old friends with the result that they would thereafter refer to him as Craig, the farmer, not as That Movie Star.

The paramount experience from his own boyhood that Jim would wish to have incorporated in The Bub's childhood is the companionship Jim had with his grandfather—an impossible wish, because that proud, individualistic gentleman of the Old South is no longer living.

But if, as suggested in Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird." one lives by being remembered, Jim's grandfather is immortal. He taught Jim one of the lessons that Jim wants to pass on to his son, intact.

The elder Craig owned a saddle mare that he prized highly for fox hunting; repeatedly Jimmie had begged for the privilege of riding her when his grandfather was not to be a party to the hunt, but was always refused until Jim was old enough, presumably, to be reliable. His grandfather explained to Jim what he must do: when the dogs had treed or encircled the fox and the hunt dismounted, Jim was to tether the mare; under no circumstance was he merely to drop the reins over her head and trust her to stand by. She was hot-blooded and high-strung, and there was a chance that—in a headlong dash for the stable—she might step into a gopher hole and break a leg.

Jim took in the advice with solemnly nodded head. But in the excitement of the hunt (Continued on page 59)

CLOTHES

Pin-ups with purpose, and pointers for the practical wardrobe—from an interview with Yvonne Wood, 20th Century-Fox studio designer

DESIGNER YVONNE WOOD has no illusions about the importance of clothes.

"All a pin-up girl needs," she says flatly, "is a good bathing suit and a sweater to make a hit with men. But not many of us can make a home-run on our curves; hence we designers can make a living."

The newest success story in Hollywood's designing circles, this girl (still in her 20's) is as American as chewing gum. She was born in Long Beach, Calif., that city of promise to middle-westerners, of parents who were middle-westerners—Kansans in fact.

Since her father is a civil engineer, Yvonne grew up in construction camps, desert towns, and even Nevada ghost towns. Her life settled down to what is usually termed normalcy, however, (Continued on page 67)

Words of Music

By JILL WARREN

GREETINGS, lads and lassies. I hope you all had a solid Christmas and here's wishing you a Happy 1945.

We've been busy tabulating the votes for our musical popularity poll and we'll announce the results next month. Movieland decided that the winners should receive something extra-special, so instead of inscribing the usual plaque or typing up a tired scroll, we buzzed over to Cartier's, New York's famous jewelers, and had a chat with their designers. The boys really outdid themselves and came forth with something we think is super. They dreamed up some killer gold discs which look like miniature records, with a special little gadget for engraving purposes. We're very happy with them and we think the winners will be too.

Crooner success stories all seem to have their start in New York. The careers of Frank Sinatra, Dick Haymes and Perry Como zoomed after the big town gave its nod of approval. And it's the same with Johnnie Johnston. After appearing at the Copacabana and on the Basin Street radio show, he landed the Chesterfield program over C.B.S. and was signed for the Capitol Theater. But here's the switch. Paramount, who dropped Johnnie from its contract list last year, tried to re-sign him—at twice his former salary. That's Hollywood for you. They'll do it every time.

Andy Russell, another singing lad who had been doing all right for himself, will trek to Movietown sometime in January, to tie up with a studio. Though he has had several offers, I bet he signs with Buddy De Sylva.

Artie Shaw contracted Roy Eldridge, the Negro trumpet star, for his new band. Eldridge is supposedly receiving between $500 and $750 a week, which is just about top dough for a sideman. Roy, who was with the old Gene Krupa band, had been playing with his own small combination in one of the Fifty-Second street spots. Though Artie originally planned a string section, when the band made its debut, the violins were missing. I haven't heard the outfit yet, but the musician scuttlebut says it's but good. The Strand Theatre in New York must think so, because they offered Shaw a February date at $12,500 a week.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

The disc news is really brisk this month, because finally, and I do mean finally, Victor and Columbia settled their big fight with the Musicians' Union, and signed a contract so (Continued on page 88)

Vaughn Monroe was so tickled about the lifting of the recording ban, he said that he could kiss the Victor mike. Whereupon, as the pic shows, he promptly did!

WRITING a story about Skippy Homeier makes you feel as though you were Attorney for the Defense. HOW TO STAY A STAR sheep, and bowls of incense were also good. Them days, I am happy to say, are now past.

"Being a star is actually paying a debt," Claudette tells us, "and one should never forget it. The debt is, of course, to the public. And the public has certain demands on you which you must not ignore.

"The first and most important is that you always preserve in real life the illusion people have about you on the screen."

Claudette believes that being well-groomed at all times is vital. Gloves, bags, shoes, all must be exactly right. As to clothes, she claims that you need not go to the extreme of buying out entire shops, but that what you put on must be good to begin with. She herself gets four or five outfits a year of various sorts, changes them with accessories, and wears them until she can wear them no longer. When I was talking to her, for instance, she had on a grey suit with a matching fur-trimmed coat which I said was magnificent. She told me she'd bought it in 1939!

Her own creed—both in clothes and in the other departments of her personal life—is that dignity will serve you best, in the long run. For her, dignity is not difficult. She is not the sort to engage in stunts just to keep her name before the public. The nearest thing to a stunt she does, in fact, is to go skiing—which she does merely because she loves the sport and is good at it.

This dignity is one of her most endearing qualities. The public thinks of her as someone they would like to know, a circumstance which is both a tribute to Claudette and a business asset. And for this reason, though she appreciates publicity, she will not allow anything sensational to be written about her, just for the purpose of getting space.

Her publicity must be true. That is her personal law. The press is allowed to say that she is happily married, that her husband is a professional man, the ethics of whose work prevent him from being interviewed, and that is all. She will cooperate on stories—as she did on this one—if she thinks they have any value, but the fact that she has a pair of the best legs in town will not cause her to pose in a bathing suit just to get her picture in the paper. She lives simply, if luxuriously, and she does not believe in lying around on tiger skins just for an item on the front page.

All of this builds up a normality which is one of the reasons which Claudette is a star after ten or more years. The fact that she herself is normal, and that her attitude on these things is actually an honest one, creates a sincerity which, conscious or not, pays off.

But there are other things to staying on top. There is the actual business side of it—can't ignore that!

In the first place, Claudette knows how to act, and she is lovely. Let's take those two elements for granted. And a third element which is vastly important is that she has a business head of no mean proportions. She works as well behind the scenes as she does in front of a camera.

"When you have reached the point where they put your name in lights," Claudette told me, "you have something to say about the vehicles in which you play. Therefore, it is more or less up to you whether or not you remain a 'name'. Your judgment and the judgment of those who advise you must be good, or you find yourself playing bits again."

Claudette has long been in the position where her contract allowed her to pick not only her stories but her writers and directors, as well. That sounds like an actress' Utopia. To a certain extent, it is. But at the same time, it has often been necessary for her to compromise in order to do a part she wants to play.

There was the time, for instance, when she had a two-picture-a-year deal with Paramount. The studio knew the value of her name, naturally—knew that any film she was in would gain in box-office value, whether it was intrinsically good or not. Claudette knew that, too, and she realized that, if she wanted to do one show which would be sensational in every respect, she would probably have to take as the first of her two productions one which was not so sensational.

It happened just that way. The studio offered her the lead in "The Phantom President," starring George M. Cohan. The part, compared to Mr. Cohan's, was small and insignificant. It would not be good for her. Yet Paramount also said that, if she did this picture, she could do the role of Poppaea in "The Sign of the Cross," a role which would wow the fans.

The result was that you saw her in the Cohan opus. And then you saw her, scantily garbed, surrounded by luxury, playing one of the famous characters of history in all her glory. The compromise paid off, with dividends.

"Sign of the Cross" demonstrated, too, another role which Claudette feels is important in remaining a star.

"I believe that actresses should change the types of their pictures as much as possible," she told me, seriously. "Up to the time I did Poppaea, for instance, I had done straight leads and a little comedy. She was like nothing I had ever been seen in before. And she kept the public interested, wondering what else I could or would do.

"Since then, I have been careful to switch from drama to comedy to anything else that came along. I have had people tell me, at times, that I was silly to take certain roles—that they would endanger my standing with the fans. The part of the mother in 'Since You Went Away,' which I did recently for Selznick, is a case in point. In that, I have two grown daughters. That fact alone was supposed to be box-office death, as far as I was concerned. But, I followed that film with a mad comedy part in 'Practically Yours,' which took the curse off my being a mother—if there was any in the first place! And now I'm to do 'Tomorrow Is Forever' (Gwen Birstow's novel), for International.

"Since You Went Away" leads us to another item. To Claudette, as perhaps to no other big-name actress, the picture as a whole is more important than what she does in it. She wants a good role, yes—but she also wants to have her name associated with a production which is excellent. For that reason, she went into the Selznick picture—which also includes Joe Cotten, Shirley Temple, Jennifer Jones, Robert Walker and Monty Woolley, all names. For that reason, too, she did "Boomtown," a show starring four of Hollywood's greats, any one of whom could carry a picture alone. (Besides Claudette, there was Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr and Gable. Remember?)

Claudette did these films because she believed that they would be among the best productions and among the biggest box-office hits the industry has ever created. And wasn't she right?

There is one more thing on the business side which she knows like a book, and which also pays off. That is the matter of casting and billing. Her contract also allows her to have sole feminine star billing and to choose her masculine co-star in most cases. But, even these things Claudette will throw over the side for the good of a picture. In "So Proudly We Hail," for instance, she insisted that the names of Veronica Lake and Paulette Goddard be given equal billing with hers. This, of course, paid dividends at the box-office. And, too, when she cannot get a co-star whose prominence matches her own, she will take an unknown fo[illegible] leading man. George Reeves got his break in "So Proudly We Hail" because of this, and Fred MacMurray and Ray Milland were seen first with Claudette in "The Gilded Lily."

You're a veteran if you've been in the pic biz as long as Claudette and Harold Lloyd.

She does this for a variety of reasons: Because she knows the publicity value of a masculine Cinderella; because she realizes that realism is added to a picture when the man has not been seen before; and because she honestly likes to help newcomers.

The latter reason is probably the most valid. It touches on one large element connected with Claudette's staying in position for so many years, and it is one which she neither would nor could talk about herself.

Claudette is not a star, away from the camera. That's the simplest way of putting it. She's a kind, human person, one who genuinely likes both the "big" and the "little" people of the world. She does not go into acts. She does not take courtesies for granted. She does not believe for a minute that she and she alone is what brought her stardom. She had something to do with it, of course, but she realizes too that there were thousands of people along the way —people besides the public—who helped her. And she is grateful.

These qualities, these human attributes which she possesses so thoroughly, come over on the screen. They are, perhaps, one reason why you, the people who buy the tickets, go back to see her performances again and again.

So, despite the business side of stardom, the whole question of how to retain your pedestal and how Claudette retains hers comes down to a simple fact. It is a fact which I have stated before: Claudette is a person whom you would like to know. She is a woman to admire.

Why Can't You Write?

It's much simpler than you think!

SO many people with the "germ" of writing in them simply can't get started. They suffer from inertia. Or they set up imaginary barriers to taking the first step.

Many are convinced the field is confined to persons gifted with a genius for writing.

Few realize that the great bulk of commercial writing is done by so-called "unknowns."

Not only do these thousands of men and women produce most of the fiction published, but countless articles on social matters, budgets, homemaking, business affairs, local, club and church activities, human interest stories, as well.

Such material is in constant demand. Every week thousands of checks for $25, $50 and $100 go out to writers whose latent ability was perhaps no greater than yours.

The Practical Method

Newspaper work demonstrates that the way to learn to write is by writing! Newspaper copy desk editors waste no time on theories or ancient classics. The story is the thing. Every copy "cub" goes through the course of practical criticism—a training that turns out more successful authors than any other experience.

That is why Newspaper Institute of America bases its writing instruction on the Copy Desk Method. It starts and keeps you writing in your own home, on your own time. And upon the very same kind of actual assignments given daily to metropolitan reporters. Thus you learn by doing, not by studying the individual styles of model authors.

Each week your work is analyzed constructively by practical writers. Gradually they help to clarify your own distinctive style. Writing soon becomes easy, absorbing. Profitable, too, as you gain the "professional" touch that gets your material accepted by editors. Above all, you can see constant progress week by week as your faults are corrected and your writing ability grows.

Have You Natural Ability?

Our Writing Aptitude Test will reveal whether or not you have natural talent for writing. It will analyze your powers of observation, your imagination and dramatic instinct. You'll enjoy taking this test. There is no cost or obligation. Simply mail the coupon below, today. Newspaper Institute of New One Park Avenue, ed 1925) N. Y. (Found the side of the highway and promptly was given a lift by a man having windshield-wiper trouble. "Rotten weather," he mumbled. Ida murmured an agreement. At her crosstown junction, Ida was dropped by her first benefactor. He said he was sorry not to be able to take her all the way to her destination, but rain, gas, time, etc. . . .

Ida said it was fine and thanked him. He hadn't really looked at her once during the several miles they had ridden together.

Ida's next samaritan was a chap ferrying a ride pool to work. He happened to be going within a block of the hospital so said he would drop her off before the door. "A girl your size is likely to be swirled away in a sudden squall," he grinned. Under his breath he added, "Doing anything . . ." then he looked at her piercingly. As the color came up into his cheeks he finished the sentence, "for your country beside bond tours, hospital visits, etc., these days, Miss Lupino?"

She said she was hitch-hiking to save gasoline, gave him a big grin, and made a swan dive for the hospital doors.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE:

In a recent fan letter, Bob Walker received a very handsome and expensive necktie. He promptly donned the cravat and had a snapshot taken. On the finished picture he wrote, "This is the tie between us. Sincerely, Robert Walker," and sent it to his fan.

TRUST BUSTER:

He was dapper and handsome. The girl he had met unexpectedly on the street, and had invited to join him for breakfast—because they were both on the way to work at the same studio—was blonde and pretty. But, when both of them discovered, to their joint embarrassment, that they had eleven cents between them, the waitress was chilly and suspicious. "No, I won't take your check," she said. "I never saw either of you before. If I trusted everyone who came in here and had waffles, then said they had forgotten their wallets—well, I'd be in debt to the company every payday."

The man asked meekly if he could leave the girl at the restaurant as security, while he borrowed some money from the filling station attendant across the street. Grudgingly, the waitress agreed.

In a few moments, back came the man to pay the check. "Thanks," said the waitress. "A girl has to be careful whom she trusts nowadays."

The man she wouldn't trust was Helmut Dantine, and the girl who was his guest was one of the Warner publicity department secretaries. As they left the waffle shop, Helmut said sadly, "This comes from having played so many Nazis."

That situation is about to be corrected. In "Hotel Berlin," the picture to be made from the Vicki Baum best seller, Helmut is to be the romantic lead.

3 JILLS AND A WEEP:

The director was preparing to shoot the final scene for "Women's Army" at Metro. It called for a company of WACs to disembark from a transport, presumably to assume duties on a foreign shore. They were to be greeted by a mob of astounded but overjoyed G.I's. A military band was to strike up a stirring tune.

Lana Turner, Laraine Day and Susan Peters were the principals in the scene, and for a finale they were to march down the plank, swing around, and march directly into the lens for a fadeout, heads up, faces illuminated with pride.

Everything went along fine until the three girls swung around, soldiers cheering, flags waving, and band playing. All three pseudo-Wacs were weeping. Too much drama for the sensitive trio.

IN THE INTEREST OF JUSTICE:

When sensational charges were preferred against Jackie Cooper, the daily papers reported the alleged cause in detail. When Mr. Cooper was acquitted, this fact was meagrely noted. In all fairness, the full story of Jackie's exoneration should be given wide publicity. A transcript of the judge's written decision has come to this columnist's attention, and we'd like to quote some of the more pertinent statements here. Please read them carefully so that, when the war is over and Jackie comes back to Hollywood to resume his career, you will know that he has every right to your support and friendship. The judge said:

"There are two types of girls in this world—those who cannot be picked up by strangers, and those who can. If all girls were of the former variety, cases such as this would never occur. But, unfortunately, either some parents fail or refuse to teach their daughters the sanctity of minds and persons, or those daughters fail or refuse to heed the teachings. In this instance, two young girls, under the ages of eighteen years, were picked up on a public street, which fact culminated in the circumstances now under consideration. . . . We have heard evidence for two days on an alleged drinking and immoral party at a local hotel. Now it is our solemn responsibility to sift that evidence and determine wherein lies the guilt.

"The defense protests that two sailor friends of Cooper, in company with Miss Fredericks, met the girls . . . they stopped and talked. . . . The undisputed fact, however, is that both the minor girls were told they could leave the party at any time they desired. . . .

"It is generally agreed by all of the witnesses that this was not a drinking party or an orgy of immorality in the accepted interpretation. There is no evidence of any conduct or conversation of a lewd, licentious, vicious, indecent or immoral character. On the contrary, all the witnesses agreed that it was otherwise . . . the 15-year-old girl admits, and it is supported by all of the other testimonies, that she did most of her drinking in the Brandywine Room before the arrival of the defendants, Bender and Cooper. . . .

"The most serious of all the charges contained in the various affidavits filed herein is that the defendant, George Bender, took the 15-year-old girl into the adjoining room where he had immoral relations with her. To this charge the defendant, Bender, maintains a consistent denial, stating that—at her request—he took her for a walk in the hallway because she 'felt dizzy'; that they were gone not more than five or ten minutes. . . . All agree that when she returned to the party she was not depressed or moody, and that she said nothing to anyone regarding this allegation of immorality. Even then she did not want to go home.

". . . And here we come to a most important matter in our consideration of the circumstances. A 15- and a 16-year-old girl attend the same party, at the same time and in each other's company. One, the 15-year-old girl, according to the language of the law, becomes delinquent. . . . On the other hand the 16-year-old girl, who was subjected to the company of the same individuals, the identical personalities and the same force of circumstances, did not become a delinquent child. Therefore, this hotel party, outside of perhaps the one-and-a-fraction drinks which she consumed, to the 16-year-old girl was a perfectly innocent affair. . . . What was in the makeup and the moral fibre of these two girl companions which caused the 15-year-old girl to do the things she claims she did, and, against which, the 16-year-old girl was protected by her own teaching and training and innate characteristics?

"The court cannot ignore the fact that the 15-year-old girl, who, some months ago, had lodged these charges against these defendants resulting in widespread publicity, upon the day of trial, failed and refused to appear in court. . . . The Juvenile Court law is designed to aid those who are injured and who desire the protection of the law. That protection, apparently, certain members of the girl's family did not feel she required, otherwise she would have made a willing witness. It is her word against that of the defendant, George Bender. . . . The court, therefore, finds the defendants, George Bender, Pauline Fredericks and Jack Cooper, separately and severally, NOT GUILTY."

LEAVE IT TO BLONDIE, with Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms (growing up rapidly) and the ubiquitous Daisy, carries on the popular series. Those who have seen "3 Is A Family," the recent Sol Lesser release through United Artists, in which Mr. Lake had a part, are convinced that Dagwood needs to reduce if he is to continue to be convincing as a juvenile.

A THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS is an Arabian nights technicolor fantasy with Cornel Wilde, Evelyn Keyes, and Nestor Paiva (the long-time villain from Los Angeles' perennial show "The Drunkard," who works in pictures by day and sneers behind a cape at night). Keep your eye on Cornel Wilde—he's going to be one of the town's greatest raves.

A GUY, A GAL, AND A PAL stars Lynn Merrick, Ross Hunter, and Ted Donaldson (who used to own Curly, the dancing caterpiller—remember?).

MEN OF THE DEEP is keeping Chester Morris, Victor McLaglen, Jean Rogers, and John Tyrrell in water—not necessarily deep.

AT INTERNATIONAL:

ALONG CAME JONES is a cowboy picture with that most beloved of all range riders, Gary Cooper. Loretta Young (who received plaudits at the preview of "And Now Tomorrow" along with Alan Ladd) is the romantic interest in this one, and laughs are guaranteed by the presence of Bill Demarest, the man who was forced to grow a stubble beard for the picture despite his just protest that cowhands either wear full beards or are clean-shaven.

AT REPUBLIC:

EARL CARROLL'S VANITIES stars Dennis O'Keefe, Constance Moore, Eve Arden (did you see her play the Russian sniper in 'Doughgirls'?), and Otto Kruger. Woody Herman is going to sing and dance in this one. But take especial note—when you see the picture—of Constance Moore's magnificent opera length black nylon stockings. She insured them for $100. We'll let you know whether she collected, because of irreparable damage, or not.

JEALOUSY may not be a very good picture but at least three of the roles will be well played, because John Loder, Jane Randolph, and Nils Asther are cast.

SWINGING ON A RAINBOW has old-time comedian Harry Langdon cast with Brad Taylor, Jane Frazee, and Minna Gombell.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

ROYAL SCANDAL is still going with Tallulah Bankhead, Charles Coburn, Anne Baxter, Bill Eythe, Vincent Price (Have you seen him in "Laura"?), Mischa Auer, and John Emery. Grady Sutton, the rotund southern boy, is also in this picture—doubtless from the south of Russia.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE is director John Larkin's legal coup with Michael O'Shea, Lloyd Nolan, Ruth Ford, and Trudy Marshall.

A BELL FOR ADANO is ringing for Gene Tierney, John Hodiak, Bill Bendix, brilliant Richard Conte, and Allyn Joslyn. Whenever he has a few moments free time from his role, John rushes out in search of a 2-acre farm that he wants to buy for his parents.

MOLLY, BLESS HER is being made by Monty Woolley, Gracie Fields, Roddy McDowall (who is becoming a handsome juvenile), and Reginald Gardiner.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

BLOOD ON THE SUN is the vehicle of James Cagney, Sylvia Sydney, Wallace Ford, Robert Armstrong, and Rosemary De Camp.

A WALK IN THE SUN shows just what attention the weather is getting in Hollywood when two SUN pictures are being shot on the same lot. Superb Dana Andrews is taking this walk, along with Richard Conte, Sterling Holloway (recently given a medical discharge from the army), and Barton Hepburn.

BEDSIDE MANNER is keeping Ruth Hussey busy, also John Carroll (back in civvies), Ann Rutherford, and Charles Ruggles.

AT UNIVERSAL:

SALOME—WHERE SHE DANCED, with David Bruce, Rod Cameron, new star Yvonne de Carlo, and Walter Slezak.

HERE COME THE CO-EDS is the current Abbott and Costello madness, aided by cute Peggy Ryan, Martha O'Driscoll, and June Vincent.

SONG OF THE SARONG—and wait until Paramount hears about this—has William Gargan, Nancy Kelly, Eddie Quillan and Fuzzy Knight in the frames.

IT'S NEVER TOO LATE stars Bonita Granville, Noah Beery, and Irene Ryan.

ROMANCE, INC. is the first picture Allan Jones has made since his year in New York, so it will be a pleasure to hear him sing again. Remember his rendition of "The Donkey Serenade"? Appearing with him are Grace McDonald, Vivian Austin, and Raymond Walburn. Should be good.

AT WARNER BROTHERS:

SAN ANTONIO is still in production. Errol Flynn, Alexis Smith, S. Z. Sakall, and Robert Barrat should keep the bang-bang interesting.

THE BIG SLEEP combines those brilliant sweethearts of "To Have And Have Not," Lauren Bacall and Humphrey Bogart. Incidentally, Miss Bacall has endeared herself to everyone on the Warner lot by her simplicity and genuineness. There's a real girl.

Veronica Lake, at the Brown Derby on a lunch date with Webb Overlander, Paramount designer.

HOTEL BERLIN is the picture in which Helmut Dantine is not a Nazi. His astonished fellow players are Andrea King, Raymond Massey, Faye Emerson, Peter Lorre, and Alan Hale.

THIS LOVE OF OURS is being polished off by John Garfield, Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark, and John Ridgely. Miss Parker took time off to file suit for divorce from her husband, Captain Fred Losee of the Navy, who is attached to a marine dental unit in San Diego. They had been married in Tia Juana on April 17, 1943. That done, Miss Parker was hurried off to the hospital where her appendix was removed. THIS LOVE OF OURS goes on and on.

AT MGM:

HOLD HIGH THE TORCH, with Elizabeth Taylor, Lassie, Frank Morgan, Selena Royle, and David Holt. Selena Royle is a lovely person. She was on Broadway for years, and it is high time that her charm was translated in celluloid.

THE VALLEY OF DECISION is still in production, graced by Greer Garson, Gregory Peck (the Metro secretaries are giving him the Sinatra treatment, much to his amazement), Lionel Barrymore, Donald Crisp, and Marsha Hunt. This will be one of those Must-See Supers.

WITHOUT LOVE is the Katharine Hepburn vehicle that was still packing them in on Broadway when Miss Hepburn decided to close it. Spencer Tracy is her vis-a-vis, and Lucille Ball, Keenan Wynn, and Patricia Morison add to the festivities.

OUR VINES HAVE TENDER GRAPES with Margaret O'Brien, this department's favorite actress, Jackie Jenkins, Edward G. Robinson, James Craig, and Frances Gifford. One Metro set has been turned into a respectable farm for this one.

ALTER EGO is the picture on which Phyllis Thaxter, Edmund Gwenn and Kathleen Lockhart are working. This title reminds me of one of the best stories told around Hollywood. Some time ago a writer for an ecclesiastical magazine came to Jerry Asher, celebrated Hollywood wit, with a problem. She wanted to write a motion picture column for her periodical, but she was at a loss for a title. This title should reflect the fact that she was writing for a religious publication, but it should also indicate that the subject matter was cinematic, Jerry thought. So did his secretary, Marian Cooper, who said in a small voice, "Would the title 'Alter Ego' do?" The three puzzlers laughed. "It's good," said Jerry, "but I think I have a shorter—hence a better—one. How about simply calling the column, 'Pew.'"

WEEKEND AT THE WALDORF is Room Service with Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner, Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson, Keenan Wynn, and Robert Benchley serving the drama and laughs.

AT P.R.C.:

CRIME, INC. is going merrily along with Leo Carrillo, Tom Neal, and songstress Martha Tilton.

AT RKO:

THE ENCHANTED COTTAGE is being shot with Dorothy McGuire, Robert Young, suave Herbert Marshall, and brilliant Mildred Natwick (who worked in 'Blithe Spirit' in New York) in the top roles.

THE BODY SNATCHER will be found on stage 12. Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi should be scaring each other, aided by Russell Wade and Henry Daniell.

THE INVISIBLE ARMY marches on with John Wayne, Philip Ahn, Anthony Quinn, and all the Chinese and Filipino extras Central Casting could contribute. This is the thrilling and dramatic story of the Filipino Guerrillas who fought on while awaiting liberation by American forces.

THE SPANISH MAIN may not have the freshest script on earth (story of a grand lady and a pirate), but it has Paul Henreid making love to Maureen O'Hara, so who could ask for anything more. It's being shot in Technicolor, and this writer is personally going to steal one of the miniature galleons for use on wet local days.

JOHNNY ANGEL has started to fly by courtesy of George Raft, Signe Hasso, Claire Trevor (playing another of her brilliant hussy roles) and Virginia Belmont.

THE CRAIG BOYS

he forgot to tie up the mare and she made her way home alone.

The next morning at breakfast, Jimmie swallowed a big gulp of hot coffee to warm his courage, then offered the information that he didn't know how on earth the mare had gotten away, as he had tied her very carefully. The old gentleman simply looked at Jim with quiet and accusing eyes. He didn't say a word.

All morning Jim got the silent treatment. As he worked with his grandfather, he tried to manufacture conversation, without one iota of success. His throat felt longer than a giraffe's and drier than a bale of cotton; his words began to stick midway between thought and utterance. "Look, Grandfather," he managed to say at length, "please talk to me. Give me the cussing of my life, but don't ignore me!"

"I can't abide a liar," said the gray one. "I can forgive anything, if a boy or man will tell me the truth, admitting his mistake. But by the Eternal, I don't give a tinker's dam for a liar."

Jim thinks that was his most valuable single lesson in the fine art of honest dealing, and he wants The Bub to profit, as he did, by his grandfather's teaching.

Out of Jim's childhood there is one experience that he does not want The Bub to share. Jim started out as a shaver selling papers; it was a good racket in those days, particularly in a small town, but Jim feels that Southern California is too vast—distances are too great, traffic is too heavy—and there are too many other means of teaching a child the self-reliance that earning one's own money inculcates, to risk the paper-selling hazards.

Aside from that one edict, Jim has no wish for parental dictation in the matter of his son's future occupation—with one exception: he doesn't want The Bub to get involved in theatricals until he is an adult. Then, if he elects greasepaint as a means to earning a living, that's fine. If he has other ideas, they are okay with Jim, too. The important thing, so far as Jim is concerned, is that The Bub decide in his own way and in his own time what his future must hold.

The Bub will undoubtedly have some definite ideas, because—now aged five—his is a rapidly unfolding and a very positive personality. When he was small, he had trouble pronouncing the sound of hard C, as in Craig, and referred to himself and his dad as "the Fraig boys."

The other night Jim responded to his wife's call by planting The Bub on his shoulder, and starting down the stairs with the shouted announcement, "Here come the Fraig boys."

The Bub leaned down to inform his father, "Don't say 'Fraig', daddy. Say Craig—it's correct."

In other respects, however, he sticks to his innovations. His early conversational efforts produced the original word "wee-a-wah" in place of the more conventional word "water." Usually Jim refrained from correcting his son, but this was so unusual a departure that Jim tried to make some alterations in pronounciation. As the pair of them were driving along a highway one day, The Bub noticed a drainage stream coursing beside the road. "Look at the wee-a-wah," he instructed his father.

"You mean water," said Jim. "Look here, can't you say 'water'?"

The Bub nodded serenely. "Sure I can say water, but I think wee-a-wah sounds more like it looks."

Junior has always been—as repeatedly stated by his fond father on the set and in any gathering of friends—purely "boy" in his tastes. He has always been completely fascinated by trains, trucks, wagons, popguns and similar junior male items of entertainment. The Bub likes to play a rather erratic, but active game of baseball, spends hours trying to perfect his punting, and listens avidly to radio broadcasts of games and fights. "All boy," says Jim proudly at the close of any story about his son.

So he's a little embarrassed when reminded of the birthday party at Margaret O'Brien's, where The Bub, for the first time in his life, saw a doll perambulator. He thought this the most wonderful vehicle he had ever propelled, and loading it with Margaret's dolls, he spent the entire afternoon chauffering them around the house.

Jim is still trying to live this down, but Keenan Wynn, another proud parent of a male heir, isn't giving him much chance.

Because of gas rationing, the Craig family is presently living in Westwood, but they spend as much time as possible on their five-acre farm.

When he is at the farm, The Bub has a playmate—an animal of quaint origin (half pit bull, half German shepherd)—named Spotty. Spotty is, and Jim will give any inquirer a notarized statement to the effect, the laziest dog on earth.

Jim had a sort of reverse-English pet on the farm for a time, too. This character, name of Buck, liked to sneak up behind the unwary and spur the back of his victim's legs, uttering typical roosterish sounds of delight. He was the smallest of four roosters, but had—by some fowl trick—convinced the other three that he was boss. He had intermittent trouble with a carpenter working for Jim. At least once a day the carpenter shied his hammer at Buck, but Buck always dodged.

One day, one of the trio of subservient roosters decided that Buck might be good at dodging hammers and pitchforks, but he wasn't much of a local Maginot at that, so took after him, whopping him—but good. Jim stood by and watched the hostilities, getting a kick out of the lesson that Buck was presumably learning.

A few mornings later Jim came out to find Buck a mass of lifeless feathers. "This time the carpenter connected," he thought, but investigation revealed that there wasn't a mark on Buck, neither from hammer nor as residue from his battle. Buck hadn't been able to take it—his defeat broke his heart and killed him. Jim explained all this very carefully to The Bub. "The important thing to remember is," he said, "that almost everyone has to take a licking at one time or another in his life. The coward quits and dies, but the game guy learns his lesson, nurses his wounds, and gets up to fight again."

Jim and The Bub were separated for the first time in The Bub's life when, last spring, Mary Craig took her son and went east for a visit with relatives Jim was working in "Gentle Annie", his latest Metro picture, so couldn't accompany them.

For the first week of their absence Jim awakened repeatedly in the night with the empty sensation that extreme quiet in a large house produces. He began to work in the yard when he came home from the studio, in an effort to tire himself out to the extent that he would sleep regardless of his psychic restlessness.

Finally came the day when he was to go to the station to meet the returning travelers.

On the way downtown he made himself an iron-clad promise that he was going to hang on to his self-control. No matter how wonderful Mary and The Bub looked to him, he wasn't going to get damp-eyed. So . . . the train rolled in. Jim had the Pullman car number memorized, but he was still two full car-lengths away when Mary and The Bub spied the head of house of Craig, because of his height easily visible above the hats of the crowd.

The Bub uttered a shriek that Jim could have heard in Beverly Hills, and leaped through the throng like a squirrel darting through a forest. "My daddy!" he yelled. "My dirty daddy, daddy daddy . . . " And, a stuffed elephant dangling from one hand, The Bub leaped into his father's arms, locked his legs around his father's chest and encircled Jim's neck with a pair of frantic arms. Huge, glistening tears plunged down round cheeks, and a trembling lower lip sagged to release one prolonged, joyous small-boy sob.

Jim had dry eyes—about ten minutes later after having pulled himself together.

That word "dirty" used by The Bub to greet his father is part of a family joke. Anything particularly handsome—such as the handmade cowboy boots that Jim bought for his son, or a new suit, or Mary's chic new dress—is instantly labelled "that dirty . . ." etc. by the kidding Craigs. Applied to Jim by his son, it was a label of highest merit.

Until his return from this trip, The Bub had been desperately afraid of Jim's motorcycle. He always kept a respectful distance between himself and the throbbing monster, but the next morning after his return when Jim asked his son if he would like to go to the ranch—riding the motorcycle—The Bub assented with alacrity. After he was all togged out in wind-resistant clothing, Jim decided that The Bub's legs were still too short, hence too removed from the steadying pedals, for the trip to be without risk. He explained this to Jimmie, Jr., who nodded solemnly. "Do you understand why you have to wait until you're a bigger boy before you can go with me?" asked Jim.

"Yes, Daddy. Me do," said the young man without a whimper.

Jim's next picture at Metro is to be "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes", in which he will work with Margaret O'Brien and Jackie Jenkins. Incidently, if there is anyone whose love for Jim is equal to that of The Bub, it is Margaret, who worked with him for the first time in "The Lost Angel."

Finally, this story about a devoted father has the nicest possible close: there is to be another young Craig in February.

Bruckner (Skippy Homeier, of the original Broadway cast); its a strong plea for intelligent re-education of the 12,000,000 Emil Bruckners to be dealt with in Germany, after the war. And just as Emil presents a series of serious problems to his relatives in America, who try to use tolerance and kindness in indoctrinating him with the democratic, freedom-loving way of life, so will those problems reappear—not just idividually, but collectively—with others like him. Their Nazi teachers have done their job well, and we should be warned.

BETWEEN TWO WOMEN (M-G-M)—"Call for Dr. Red Adams. Report to Dr. Gillespie's office." Yes, it's Lionel Barrymore calling Van Johnson. Also calling him, but for a different reason, is Marilyn Maxwell.

CAN'T HELP SINGING (Universal) sends Caroline Frost (Deanna Durbin) out across the plains in a covered wagon, has her meet and fall in love with Johnny Lawlor (Robert Paige), with a complicated climax to straighten everything out—and there are any number of odd little details needing explaining, by that time — when the plains party reaches California. Photographed in scene-beautiful Technicolor, with music, and with Akim Tamiroff and Leonid Kinsky for the laughs.

EADIE WAS A LADY (Columbia), with Ann Miller in the title role. It all has to do with a Back Bay society girl of Boston who takes it into her pretty little head to lead a busy-busy double life; a college student, that is, who's a burlesque show hit-sation, on the side. With William Wright playing opposite, as the enterprising young producer who's very much involved in all this; and with Joe Besser, Jimmy Little, Jeff Donnell, Hal McIntyre and his band.

HERE COME THE WAVES (Paramount) meaning the Adams twins, who're not twins at all, really—both are Betty Hutton. One red-headed and named Rosemary and one blonde, name of Susie. Confusing, in the telling of it, but lots of fun. And on the love side, the two for one (who's supposed to be two) ratio brings in Sonny Tufts and Bing Crosby, alias a couple of sailors. Songs are "with Lyrics by Johnny Mercer"—which is 'but good' in anybody's musical comedy league! And Sonny comes up with song—which is good, twice!

FLAME OF BARBARY COAST (Republic)—A rough and ready action drama, with John Wayne and Ann Dvorak. Timed for the early 1900's, it takes in the San Francisco earthquake.

OBJECTIVE BURMA (Warner Bros.) is movie-made war, with Errol Flynn as Major Nelson, in command of a group of American paratroopers assigned to a mission that takes them behind the Jap lines in Burma. It's an all-male cast, including James Brown, directed by Raoul Walsh.

BLONDE FEVER (M-G-M) is an infection that defies medical treatment, as many a wife will tell you. And when coupled with a $10,000 lottery award, it may be regarded as fatal! Delilah Donay (Mary Astor) is the wife, Peter (Philip Dorn) the husband who's romantically infected, and Sally (newcomer Gloria Grahame; she'll remind you of Ann Sothern), the cause of that effect. Richard Whorf, who has turned in many a sterling performance as an actor, makes his bow as a director with this "B" picture that deserves to be "A."

TOGETHER AGAIN (Columbia)–The title might apply to Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer, but the story is more laugh-crazy than anything they've ever done before. The zany plot—for who's to call it anything but that, though 'tis delightful—has to do with Miss Dunne as a small-town mayoress nobly trying to fill her late husband's office, and meeting a soulful sculptor (Boyer), with complicating, hilarious results. Charles Coburn adds all the rest that's needed, in his usual inimitable fashion, and screen newcomer Jerome Courtland comes to light as a bright-future candidate, being the gangling, awkward swain of Mona Freeman, Her Honor's lovely stepdaughter.

THE THIN MAN GOES HOME (M-G-M)—Myrna Loy returns to the screen after an absence of more than two years, in her familiar role of Nora Charles, wife of the suave detective, Nick Charles (William Powell). Asta is back, too—without which no Thin Man picture would be complete. It's a Nazi plot, set in a hometown where "nothing ever happens." Counting corpses involved, this is a murder mystery on-the-double.

MINISTRY OF FEAR (Paramount)—A maze of overcomplicated intrigue, with Ray Milland departing from his usual comedy characterizations to portray the serious, unhappy Stephen Noale, Britisher, who finds himself unexpectedly involved with seances, gunplay, spys, etcetera. With Marjorie Reynolds, a lovely little refugee from Austria, and Carl Esmond, Hillary Brooks, Percy Waram and Dan Duryea in the supporting cast.

RED RIVER VALLEY (Republic), a re-release of the Gene Autry picture, with Smiley Burnette. Complete with all the action, excitement and thrills craved by the loyal Autry fans, and four entries on the musical side: "Red River Valley," "Fetch Me Down My Trusty 45," "Construction Song," and "Yodelling Cowboy."

DESTINY (Universal)—Originally titled "The Fugitive," referring to Alan Curtis, as Cliff the badman with a police record, who's innocently implicated in a bank robbery. "Crime doesn't pay" would seem to be the motive for the plot involving Gloria Jean, sweet little blind girl with faith and good influence. Others in the cast: Frank Craven and Grace McDonald.

THE MAN IN HALF MOON STREET (Paramount) brings your old friend Nils Asther back to the screen as Dr. Julian Karell, scientist and miracle-worker credited with having developed a formula for capturing eternal youth. Helen Walker is the romantic interest in this plot that's so frankly fantastic but in the main "good escape."

ARMY WIVES (Monogram), with Elyse Knox (signed recently by Monogram to a three-year contract) as the debutante Jerry Van Dyke who, despite parental objections and a series of further complications, is determined to marry a dashing young corporal named Barney (Rick Vallin). They met at a USO dance, and their wedding, when at long last it takes place, is staged in a taxicab . . . with thanks to the helpful arranging of the General's wife (Dorothy Christy).

THE FALCON IN HOLLYWOOD (RKO-Radio)—Given Tom Conway, as the Falcon, and Barbara Hale, Rita Corday and Veda Ann Borg as the ladies lovely, you have all the ingredients for another thriller in this so-popular series and should know just about what to expect. Setting the story in movietown puts the corpse-in-the-case on a studio sound stage. Take it from there. . . .

ADVENTURES OF KITTY O'DAY (Monogram) is another murder thriller-diller, second in the series about the hotel telephone operator named Kitty (Jean Parker) and Johnny (Peter Cookson), a travel bureau clerk.

THE SUSPECT (Universal)—A conflict drama before it's a murder mystery, though there are two corpses accumulating to the contrary. Charles Laughton has your sympathy as Philip Marshall, the gentlemanly manager of a London tobacco shop catering to royalty of the 1902 period. Saddled with a nagging wife (Rosalind Ivan), he turns for love and understanding to pretty Mary Grey (Ella Raines). Dean Harens figures in all this, rather incidentally, as the ill-fated man's son.

LET'S GO STEADY (Columbia)—For the young-stuff, who like music by Skinnay Ennis and his band, and can be tolerant of another plot about aspiring songwriters (Jackie Moran and Arnold Stang) and a lovely niece (Pat Parrish) who inherits the family music publishing firm. The twist to the tired old formula is that the kids decide to plug their songs, not on Tin Pan Alley, but in Army camps.

LAKE PLACID SERENADE (Republic) has Vera Hruba Ralston as the figure-skating star imported from pre-war Czechoslovakia for a fabulous ice carnival at Lake Placid. Pretty girls, wonderful music, fine skating, and a "Cinderella" love story for plot purposes, involving Robert Livingston, Eugene Pallette, Vera Vague, Ruth Terry and Lloyd Corrigan, to mention just some of the several. With McGowan and Mack, Twinkle Watts and the Merry Meisters in the ice specialties department, gliding and cavorting to the rhythms of Ray Noble's orchestra and Harry Owens' Royal Hawaiians. Yes, all this and Roy Rogers, too!

THE GIRL RUSH (RKO) is really a gold rush that leaves Frances Langford, Vera Vague, and the "Frisco Follies" on stage sans audience. Wally Brown and Alan Carney pull a fast deal in a womanless mining town calculated to pay the girls' fare back to New York. But you've heard about the best laid plans of mice and men. P. S. The girls don't make it.

NEVADA (RKO)—Zane Grey rides again with hero Bob Mitchum, heroine Nancy Gates, villain Craig Reynolds, and his girl friend Anne Jeffreys. There's a gold mine, of course, and a secret silver lode. Mix them all together, and it comes out Nevada.

"YOU SHOULD MAKE A GOOD NURSE—YOU'RE SO SMART ABOUT CRAMPS!"

"That's what my cousin said when I told her I was joining the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps. Actually, all I know about cramps is how to help relieve them. And that's to take Chi-Ches-Ters Pills."

Chi-Ches-Ters are so effective because a special ingredient tends to help relieve muscular tension—a common source of simple menstrual pain. An added iron factor tends to help build up your blood.

Ask your druggist for Chi-Ches-Ters today. 50¢ a box. And for best results begin taking them three days before your period. Note: Use only as directed.

CAN'T HELP CLOWNING

the neighbors did some investigating.

What they discovered was that Bob had to carry Deanna a matter of some two hundred yards in "Can't Help Singing," and he was simply strengthening his carrying muscles against the inevitable retakes of the scene. When he could manage to carry his wife several times around the pool without either growing tired or inadvertently dropping her in, he felt ready to face the cameras—and Deanna.

Far in advance of the picture, too, Bob began to grow debonnaire sideburns and longish hair for his role of gambler. He doesn't know the first rudiments of poker, but a gamester of the 1840's could no more go without sideburns than a fish without fins. Never mind if Paige couldn't tell a full house from a straight flush; at any rate, he looked the part. Which explains why, one day as he was driving through the studio lot, his sideburns in bloom, his brown hair lifting gently to the breeze, he went past an extra—and the extra whistled!

Paige slammed on the brakes and backed up, blue eyes blazing. "Did you whistle at me?" he demanded. The extra stared at Bob's crimson face, and then at the rest of the six-feet-two of him, and meekly replied, "Why—no." Whereupon Bob muttered a deflated "Oh," and drove on. "It occurred to me," Bob explained later, "that perhaps he didn't whistle. But nothing makes a man as sensitive as going three months without a haircut."

You see, they don't go three months without a haircut in Indianapolis where, for the record, Bob was born—of a completely normal family; related, indeed, to Admiral Lord Beatty, hero of Jutland in the first World War. Bob's parents moved to Los Angeles later, where their child showed his first aberration by deciding, at his first sniff of Hollywood air, to become an actor.

One of his first assignments was to sing a song in support of a foot liniment. For this he received five dollars a week. (Yes, a week, not a day!)

"My voice," Bob surmises, "is a kind of lyric baritone, near as anyone can figure." Whatever the technical classification, it's a voice fine enough to be heard (much later, though) in nineteen musical films in the space of two and a half years. Bob despaired of ever escaping the musicals, till suddenly the studio gave him the romantic lead in "Mister Big," and he popped up as a star in "Fired Wife" and "Her Primitive Man."

Earlier, however, while still doing the radio program, Bob was entrusted with speaking the "commercial" for a brassiere account. He went over fine till his fellow artists conceived the idea of walking in front of him as he talked, illustrating what he said with their own inspired pantomime. Inevitably there came an evening when he laughed right out—and was right out.

Somewhere amid this struggle to become a movie actor, Bob found he had a job in a bakery. Not that he has ever been crazy about cooking, but the job happened along, so he hired himself out to make bread and cake. One day someone dropped a pot of grease on the floor. Paige was balancing a huge pan of dough, at that unfortunate moment—the whole of which flew into the air and enveloped the proprietor, of all people, in a thick, gooey mantle. So...Robert didn't work there any more.

Next, he became a shop window dresser. What a satisfaction to arrange the merchandise artistically, they told him, behind the great glass front. "To please the eye and attract the public."

With a beaming, life-size mannequin clasped to his manly bosom, Bob started toward the windows. Oh yes, and of course—he tripped over the draperies of another mannequin and, the beaming figure still in his embrace, shot through the glass into the midst of the sidewalk crowd which was interestedly looking on. He pleased the eye and attracted the public, all right! But not as expected.

Along about there, Bob's parents felt they'd had enough. They suggested that he find a career with money attached. So Bob sold securities. Or almost. A motion picture agent happened to be his first prospect. You don't need a blueprint, do you? That's how Bob landed on the screen, plowed his way through a mess of mediocre films, and found one morning that he was a star with a cute white house in the Valley, and with zanies Hugh Herbert and Andy Devine as his next-door neighbors.

Besides a pool, the Paige five-room manse has green blinds and no furniture. Or, Bob explains, practically none. The Paiges haven't been able to agree on exactly what they want (after all, they've been married only four years), and if they did decide, they couldn't get it till after the war.

Take the living room. It has attractive reddish drapes, a beige rug, and one chair.

"But we use the living room only to walk through to reach the den," Bob says cheerily. "We always live in the den. In the house we rented before this, the den was the coziest room we had, when it wasn't raining. But it rained a lot that year, and in our den it rained as hard as outdoors, and longer. We loved it, naturally; reminded us of the Beachcombers. (You know, the cafe where they turn on an artificial rain shower every thirty minutes.)

Between pictures, if Bob isn't playing tennis or boxing at the gym, he's likely to turn up in Bakersfield, before sunrise, with Andy Devine. Andy is training a flock of carrier pigeons for military use, so at four-thirty in the morning Andy, Bob and the bird crates start for Bakersfield, fifty miles away. There they release the pigeons, which immediately vanish from sight, whereupon the two men rush home to San Fernando Valley and find the birds, smugly cooing, back in their loft again. More fun! Still, anything to win the war, and this helps.

Hugh Herbert won't rise with the dawn, much less before it. Yet the three—Herbert, Devine, and Paige—are fast friends. Fast on the uptake, that is.

For example, Bob invited Andy and his wife to an evening badminton match. But it rained. The Paiges, deciding that nobody would venture forth on a night not fit for man, beast, or Andy Devine, went to bed. When the doorbell rang in the midst of a crashing downpour, there stood enormous Andy with his wife, each peering from the depths of a fur parka, and each with a badminton racquet over the shoulder. A sight, Bob says, he won't soon forget.

And if by chance life in the Valley begins to pall, there's always Hugh Herbert. Recently Herbert telephoned him, disguising his voice, "in reference to that house lot you purchased last evening." "But I didn't pur—" "Oh, yes, you did, Mr. Paige. It's on our books, and your signature... What? Why, after that big party at the Mocambo, when we all—Oh, no, Mr. Paige, you positively did not stay home the entire evening..." And so on, till Paige realized that it wasn't a maniac realtor, only friend Hugh.

So you see what we mean—everything happens to Paige. Sometimes it's unexpected, inevitably it's laugh-making, usually it's good.

GRAY HAIR
CHEAT YOU

Now Comb Away Gray This Easy Way

GRAY hair is risky. It screams: "You are getting old!" To end gray hair handicaps all you now have to do is comb it once a day for several days with a few drops of Kolor-Bak sprinkled on your comb, and afterwards regularly only once or twice a week to keep your hair looking nice. Kolor-Bak is a solution for artificially coloring gray hair that imparts color and charm and abolishes gray hair worries. Grayness disappears within a week or two and users report the change is so gradual and so perfect that their friends forget they ever had a gray hair and no one knew they did a thing to it.

MAKE THIS TRIAL TEST

Will you test Kolor-Bak without risking a single cent? Then, go to your drug or department store today and get a bottle of Kolor-Bak. Test it under our guarantee that it must make you look 10 years younger and far more attractive or we will pay back your money.

drink the eight glasses of water my doctor says are necessary for everyone; not be embarrassed by flattery;
drink my morning glass of orange juice;
do anything I know I am supposed to do.

I LIKE—
"Butternut," my New Hampshire farm; traveling by automobile;
to play and sing hymns;
meeting people who know more about things than I do;
the smell of a barn;
new books;
snow storms;
open fires;
sleigh rides;
Ethel Waters;
crisply starched shirtwaists;
Veloz and Yolanda;
Philharmonic Sunday broadcasts;
The New York Times;
being sun-tanned;
beautiful lingerie;
Stokowski's conducting;
Kostelanetz' broadcasts;
lilies of the valley.

I DISLIKE—
Traveling by plane;
men who are rude to waiters;
road-hogs;
elaborate food;
having meals at specific times;
formal living;
myself on the screen;
tripe (the food);
crowds;
to be alone in a house;
a house without flowers;
people who want things without working for them;
many women's voices.

I LIKE ABOUT MYSELF—
The color of my hair.

I DISLIKE ABOUT MYSELF—
My laugh;
my face;
my quickness;
my fear of anything unknown to me;
my desire for perfection in all matters;
the way I cover myself with ink when I write letters.

I DREAMED ABOUT WHEN I WAS SIXTEEN—
Being an actress;
a country home of my own in New England;
a Packard car;
diamonds;
speaking French;
having children;
earning enough so that Mother would never lack anything;
lots of clothes;
traveling all over the world;
being tall and dignified;
being an expert horsewoman;
learning to laugh like a lady.

I'M EXTRAVAGANT ABOUT—
Ordering dozens of something I like;
fresh linen;
flowers in the house;
having lots of handkerchiefs—preferably lace;
my praise and efforts in behalf of someone in whom I believe;
perfumes;
houses.

I'M IRRITATED BY (Mother says, "What doesn't irritate you?")—
People who tell me one thing and tell someone else another; the politics of situations;
unused fireplaces;
badly made beds;
any kind of disorder;
pink sweet peas;
people who come up to you and say, "Remember me?" (It's usually someone you met once at the age of ten.)

I WONDER WHY—
Train whistles make me feel so lonely; people's impressions of me are often far removed from what I feel I'm really like;
anybody chews gum;
more men do not wear bow ties;
women worry about wearing glasses if they need them;
a steak never tastes as good as when I barbecue it myself;
we only learn the bitter lessons in life through disaster;
we never learn from the proven experiences of others;
most women lie about their age.

I DREAM ABOUT NOW—
Speaking French more fluently; learning to speak Spanish;
living in Mexico at least three months a year;
traveling all over the world;
going overseas to visit our men;
growing in stature as an actress;
reading everything ever written before I die;
being tall and dignified;
learning to laugh like a lady.

I ADORE—Acapulco.
Stanley Woodward's Marines;
my mother;
Helen Hayes' acting;
swimming at night a la - - - -;
moonlight on the ocean;
my four-year-old niece, Fay;
my dog, Tibby.

I WORRY ABOUT—
My work at the end of each day;
The Hollywood Canteen;
losing my enthusiasm for life;
unwittingly hurting someone's feelings;
giving anyone the impression that my success has made any difference in me as a person;
life being too short to accomplish everything I want to accomplish;
my family's happiness;
being late for appointments;
whether or not this war can ever justify the horrors our men are being subjected to;
crooked seams in my stockings.

I HAVE FUN—
Playing practical jokes;
giving things to people who otherwise wouldn't have them;
helping friends put in order those corners of a house done once a year;
housekeeping at "Butternut"; being chief cook at barbecues;
dancing;
listening to good dance bands;
knowing I have more to do than I can possibly find time to do and then doing it.

MANHUNTING CLOTHES

when her family moved to South Pasadena so she could complete her public school education.

It was there she started to design clothes. When she was barely in her teens, there was indication of her present flair for getting attention in the line of costumes. Sunback dresses were then the dispute of America, constituting sufficient grounds for arrest in some parts of the country. Undaunted, Yvonne experimented with two tennis dresses featuring such shocking exposure.

"They were awful," she wryly recalls. "I shocked the family and all South Pasadena. Having to drop my racquet to grab slipping shoulder straps hardly helped my game. The dresses ended up as skirts, but I kept on trying to design.

"You see, I had to make my own clothes. I was a good swimmer," she says modestly for a championship swimmer, "and I guess that gave me my unusual figure. How can you go into a store and ask for anything with size 18 shoulders, size 14 waist and size 12 or 13 hip measurements? I couldn't afford custom made clothes. So it all added up to home work. After awhile I did a little sewing in the neighborhood, too.

"My first customer was the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer who lived next door. She wanted something new and different to wear to a school dance and asked me to design and make the gown. I'm not sure how successful it was. I was too busy spending the $3.75 she paid me."

Finishing high school, Yvonne enrolled in the Chouinard Art School as a prospective illustrator. After a year, the depression made it advisable to turn to a shorter course, toward financial returns. The second year was spent in costume design.

Then she hounded studio wardrobe department heads. After six months, she went to the old Fox Studios as sketch artist for Chief Designer William Lambert. The job lasted a month only, because of a studio shake-up. Soon, however, Lambert was recalled and in turn recalled Yvonne. Since those days, she has worked with Bernard Newman, Edward Stephenson, Muriel King, Royer and Irene Saltern. Besides this, she burned midnight oil doing free-lance work for designers of private collections.

In 1942, still as a sketch artist, she joined the staff at 20th Century-Fox Studios. Soon she was promoted to assistant designer and was set to work several years as an assistant before getting full responsibility for dressing a picture.

But her own personal wardrobe attracted the attention of Carmen Miranda.

Now Carmen's style reputation may seem to rest upon the five-inch lifts on her shoes, the bowls of fruit on her head and the bare mid-riff which she introduced, but Carmen's knowledge of the man's eye-view of clothes is plenty good.

"Where you get that?" she demanded time after time upon sight of Yvonne's costumes. She borrowed her hats once in awhile and had her design some suits and dresses for her.

When the time came to make "The

ADIEU Hair Remover is obtainable only from us

Gang's All Here," the Technicolor picture starring Alice Faye, Carmen Miranda and other 20th Century-Fox Studio prides, Carmen persuaded Director Busby Berkeley and Producer William LeBaron to consider Yvonne's designs.

The result was that Yvonne became a full-fledged designer over night, her first picture a studio top-notch special. In the past year, she has handled "Four Jills In a Jeep" starring Kay Francis, Carole Landis, Martha Raye and Mitzi Mayfair; "Tampico," starring Lynn Bari; "Sweet and Low Down," with Lynn Bari and Linda Darnell; "Something for the Boys," and "A Bell for Adano."

None of these pictures is notable for styles in the "ten best-dressed women in the world" class. But Kay Francis and Carole Landis have long been noted for "smart dressing."

While Yvonne Wood has still to get a reputation comparable to those of Irene, Adrian or Hattie Carnegie, her fresh approach to clothes bodes well for her future.

Thoroughly schooled by Hollywood, she is not one of those dyed-in-the-glamour orators on Hollywood's supremacy in the fashion field.

"Hollywood won't take the lead in style away from famous designing houses," she avers, "because our creations must fit the action of a picture. However, Hollywood has forced sanity upon those style-creators," she insists.

"New and radical departures from our present silhouette may make news, particularly after the war," she prophesies. "But women won't accept them generally because screen stars won't popularize them. The stars have discovered the silhouette which makes women look best. We see the waistline lowering now to just below the hips, but the torso is still moulded to keep the curves natural.

"And the natural figure is still what men like best," she continues, "just as they like a hairdress which frames a face softly. Although the screen stars occasionally wear an upswept hairdress or a victory bob, they stay pretty consistently with the long bob."

What pointers besides the silhouette has Yvonne to offer in dressing to please men?

"Whether men like blatant exhibitionism or more delicate suggestion," she gets down to specific items, "they don't like the so-called butcher-boy jacket. It hides the figure too much.

"I don't believe low necklines are as enticing as clinging fabric modeled clear to the throat. But of course low necklines are popular and will continue to be.

"Equally as exciting as line to men is—color. I find men like all-white, all-black and what I call 'Easter Egg' colors. Those clear, true shades such as flame fuchsia, bright pinks, emerald greens, chartreuse and the like. They don't seem attracted by the grayed tones."

Yvonne herself, as we talked about all this, wore just such colors as she advocates. Her olive green wool skirt was topped with a high-necked light olive Alix jersey blouse. At the throat was a twisted, many-strand necklace of washed shocking pink beads. With this she wore a vivid shocking pink jacket of soft wool, carefully fitted.

"Yes," she agrees, "I like to put two tones of the same color together with two tones of another. I find it quite effective."

She has no doll-like prettiness about her. Rather, her face is chiseled with great force and character. She has a certain primitive quality which makes her stand out in a room. Her gray-green eyes and titian-touched brown hair contribute the rest.

She is happily married to Rolland Lynch, fiction writer, who is now in the Coast Guard. They have a home in San Fernando Valley, where she indulges in her hobby of interior decoration. Against pale gray and beige backgrounds she features emerald green, shocking pink and chartreuse in her home.

She frankly avoids pale pinks and pale blues, terming them colors for babies and early teen age girls.

She disagrees with those who predict that slacks are on their way out.

She also disagrees with those who say a small woman should follow rigid rules in costume. "Some small women have a big woman's personality," she declares. "Those who have can wear many of the things big women wear.

For the woman who makes her own clothes, Yvonne has some "musts" to present: Study and use professional touches; use a good basic pattern; give special attention to achieving good shoulder and body lines; use imagination in selecting fabric, color and trimmings; be content with nothing less than perfect workmanship.

Yvonne's brilliance extends into costumes for chorus girls. Some of her designs have been adopted by shows for such famous night clubs as New York's Copacabana. Katherine Dunham, noted sepia ballet artist, borrowed her from the studio for several weeks to create costumes for the Dunham troupe's show next season.

Summing up her philosophy on man-hunting clothes, Yvonne says, "A woman should remember she isn't out shooting for dead ducks, she's out to lure men to her side. She should be appealing, tempting, prophesying the shape of things to come."

THE END

The story behind THE YVONNE WOOD SKETCHES . . . reading from left to right:

Colorful ballet costume designed for a dancer in the Katharine Dunham troupe. You can't miss the Latin American influence.

Miss Wood adapts the man's dance costume into a beruffled, bandana-bedecked cocktail dress, with vivid silk skirt and white eyelet blouse.

The lowly coverall takes on charm and dash with the Wood treatment. These, in gabardine, are worn by Carmen Miranda and the chorus in "Something for the Boys."

Another "Something for the Boys" design. Crisp gabardine slacks, a flannel jacket and clinging jersey blouse, all done in muted tones. Ideal for evenings at home.

Lynn Bari filled this smooth and sophisticated doeskin suit in "Sweet and Lowdown." The Greek motif applique and belt are gold kid.

Miss Wood again shows her partiality toward gabardine in white suit created for the bombastic Miranda. The openwork above the bustline is subtly . . . and oh, so beguilingly . . . filled with nude souffle.

JEANNE CRAIN

she had to sit wistfully on the porch and watch the high school kids in their crepe-paper-draped jalopies, careening off to football games.

Meditating upon these facts, Jeanne decided upon her professions: she was going to be an artist, because—through such a career—she could preserve forever and unchangingly a moment of light, a lovely scene, a fascinating face.

Jeanne's mother is the sort of woman who has never laughed off an earnest young impulse, no matter how short-lived she might suspect it to be. Falling with Jeanne's ambition, Mrs. Crain made the fledgling Belle Artiste a black velvet smock and matching velvet beret. She also saw to it that Jeanne had plenty of drawing paper, charcoal, pens and ink, and pastels.

Those were glorious days—at least for Jeanne. Her artistic endeavors may have been a bit trying to the rest of the members of the family, as indicated by a recent remark of Rita's. After having abstained from works of art for several months, Jeanne decided a few weeks ago to get out her supplies and work on a portrait idea that was begging in her mind to be committed to paper. Rita, suspecting her sister's intentions, clapped her hands to her forehead. "Don't tell me," she cried, "that this family is going to have to go through THAT mess again!"

Those early artistic days, however, were untroubled by critical comment. Sometimes, Jeanne play-acted in her room. She never pretended to be an actress; she always conceived great dramas in which she was a painter, about to embrace starvation but saved at the last moment by the handshake of a check-writer. Studying herself, arrayed in her jaunty beret and her smock, in her mirror, she had only one regret. It struck her occasionally that she would be much more convincing with a mustache. This fact automatically introduces another salient Crain characteristic—she has a delightful sense of humor.

At the age of 10, Jeanne was selected among the students at St. Mary's where she was enrolled, to participate in special classes for the artistically gifted. This was not an unalloyed triumph, as it called for her presence every Saturday morning at classes. Yet the training was unexcelled. The students were given a liberal introduction to Old Masters. Jeanne decided that her favorite was Raphael. She was also taught color values, perspective, and all the other rudiments of imaginative reproduction of beauty. It was great stuff; Jeanne worked hard and dreamed even harder. She mentioned one day that she hoped she was learning rapidly enough so that the artist, to whom she would some day be apprenticed, would be pleased with her. Jeanne had worked out a couple of scenes with this imagined genius with whom she was to serve; she had thought of him along da Vinci—a sort of Frederic March—someone brilliantly skillful, handsome, gay . . . ah, sigh . . . perhaps growing aware of his able, earnest assistant as played by Miss Crain.

The person to whom she had men-

What Happened

WHEN HER HUSBAND JOINED THE NAVY!

"This is my chance to make myself over," said Mrs. Lial Eddy of Oklahoma City—and she did!

"When you're only 24 and weigh 164, you're pretty unhappy. For a long time I had wanted to do something about it—and had been considering the DuBarry Success Course.

"When my husband left for boot camp training, I had a sudden inspiration. This was my chance! I kept it a secret, even from my friends. But I didn't have to tell them something was happening to me.

"When I had lost 20 pounds, my husband was transferred to a nearby camp and came home on a short leave. The morning I met him at the train was one of the happiest of my life. I was proud of my new figure, my new make-up and the smart new clothes I was able to wear. And the look on his face was my reward! Only a woman could understand the thrill of that moment!"

Today, instead of 164, Mrs. Eddy weighs only 130, just right for her five feet seven and a half inches. Her rich red hair glows with a new lustre. Her skin is radiant. And she has the charm and poise that come with knowing she is a healthy, lovely woman.

"The DuBarry Success Course is a wonderful thing for every woman, overweight or not!" says Mrs. Eddy. "I'm really a different person."

HOW ABOUT YOU?

In these days it is important to be at your best, ready for strenuous wartime living. More than 160,000 women have already found the DuBarry Success Course the way to new beauty and vitality. tioned this apprenticeship looked at Jeanne quizzically. "Look here," he said, "no one apprentices nowadays."

"But how does a young artist get started?" she asked blankly.

Her prof grinned. "Well, if the young artist has independent means, she just plugs along, working and painting, until she sells a canvas, or until she has enough good stuff for an exhibit—a one-man show, it's called. If a beginner has to earn a living in the meantime, she takes up fashion drawing or commercial art."

Jeanne put out her lower lip and thought that one over. "You mean, I might have to draw dresses with a new shoulder treatment, or ladies pushing vacuum sweepers?"

This dire truth having been established, the embryonic artist instantly ceased embryoning. She gave up art.

Probably Mrs. Crain gave silent thanks for the instantly neater condition of the house, but sister Rita uttered hosannas out loud. For a long time she had been posing in various costumes for her sister's drawing pencil. It wouldn't have been so bad, perhaps, if the model had tasted the heady triumph of seeing her own face reproduced again and again, but the truth was that Jeanne simply used her for outlines, hat, hairlines, and shoulders, usually, but the features were always those of some ephemeral persons Jeanne had seen at school or on the street or in the theatre, and wanted to solidify for posterity.

The arty phase of her experience over, Jeanne enrolled at Inglewood High School (where her father was a member of the faculty) and promptly became a campus kid. She was elected Grid Queen for the 1941 football season, only to discover that she inspired more amateur photographers than she did touchdowns. In 1942 she was named "Camera Girl Of The Year" at the annual Long Beach bathing beauty contest, and also won a loving-cup as runner-up in the Miss America contest.

Jeanne felt herself immediately drawn to photography because it was actually a department of the very thing she had been trying to perfect: a technique for making a moment permanent. Photography liked Jeanne because she made a moment seem worth preserving forever. Because of this important quality she appeared on the cover of several well-known national magazines.

All of which introduces, in all reverence, Jeanne's patron, St. Anthony. St. Anthony, as you may know, is one of the most amiable of canonized men; some of his duties include the guarding of young folk and the finding of lost articles. Jeanne's relations with her patron are on a warm, personal basis. After she had finished posing in a huge grain field one day, the photographer discovered that he had lost his car keys. He looked out over the acres and acres of thickly grown stalks and shook his head. "We'll never find them," he said morosely. "I might as well hike to the nearest telephone and try to get a locksmith down here."

"Don't do that," Jeanne advised. "I'm sure St. Anthony will help us find them."

"Oh yeah?" said the photographer, meaning no disrespect to St. Anthony, but simply not believing that a busy saint could be bothered with a bunch of car keys in a grain field.

Jeanne petitioned St. Anthony in the soft way she has; then, obeying an impulse, she walked slowly across the field toward the fence, eyes downcast. Sure enough, she found the keys half-hidden in a furrow against the fence.

Kay Williams and Van Johnson a thing here, but Mexico seems to have cooled his ardor.

At approximately this time in Jeanne's life, Max Reinhardt, who owned the motion picture right, was planning to screen "The Song Of Bernadette." Through family friends, Jeanne was tested and her test is still spoken of with such words as tender, sensitive and beautiful. However Mr. Reinhardt sold the rights to 20th Century-Fox, a move that ended his interest in the search for Bernadette. This was a bitter disappointment, of course. Jeanne spent some hours thinking about returning to her art.

While she was debating about whether to start with oils or pastels, she accompanied some friends to a Little Theatre performance one evening. In the audience, unknown to Jeanne, were three talent scouts: Ivan Kahn from 20th, Solly Biano from Warners, and a chap from Columbia. They had come, of course, to assay the talent on the other side of the footlights, but there was something about Jeanne that caught their instant attention. Mr. Kahn's footwork was a little faster than that of his colleagues, so Jeanne signed a contract just a week later. Cast at once in "Home In Indiana," she had her first opportunity for some cross-country travel. Until that location trip was made (most of the picture was shot in western Kentucky), Jeanne had made one trip to San Francisco to the Exposition, and one trip to San Diego to another Exposition. To date she has never visited Catalina Island, which you can see from her home on a clear day. (advt.)

This doesn't mean, however, that she hasn't voyaged the seven seas on paper sails. As a cub, she spent most of her spare time in the library. She learned to read when she was three and a half; by the time she was in second grade, she was reading Beginning Astronomy. One day her teacher sent word home that Miss Jeanne was so restrained in her enthusiasm for second grade work that she was likely to fail. Mrs. Crain promptly invited the teacher over to the Crain home for tea, there to discuss her daughter's deflection. Over the cups, Mrs. Crain explained that Jeanne read everything in sight, so there must be some mistake. "But she can't read," protested the teacher. "At least I can't get her to read in class."

Mrs. Crain sent for Jeanne, indicated the Astronomy and asked her to peel off a few paragraphs, which Jeanne did glibly. "Then why," sighed the teacher, "won't you read our little stories in school?"

"That is baby stuff!" explained the pupil loftily.

In the library there were captions over the different book sections: Architecture, Adventure, Travel—Jeanne recognized the words and their meaning. Diligently she read everything of interest in the Architectural department. Then she moved on to Adventure, meeting up, breathlessly, with Mark Twain. She read "Tom Sawyer" so many times that she lost count; she lived the role of Becky Thatcher. And the most wonderful part of the book was that it was Forever. She could go back in a week or a month or a year, and nothing had changed. She still trembled over the story of Indian Joe, still chuckled to find the boys attending their own funeral.

In the Travel section she met Martin Johnson and accompanied him over Africa. Occasionally she had noticed that odd word Fiction over a vast collection of books, but—because she didn't know the meaning of the word—she took no interest. Yet from time to time, she observed that the brightest jackets were on those shelves, and that from them were borrowed the largest number of books. On the soft soles of inquiring girlhood, she approached the shelves one day and lifted a book from its place. She scanned a few paragraphs in the middle of the book—description of a river and the houses along it; conversation between characters; action, suspense. Lifting her head, she looked across the library to the worn jacket of "Tom Sawyer." This, she thought with widened eyes, was a grown-up sort of Tom Sawyer. That had been a small door opening into the mystery of the world; this rack of books—this Fiction—was a large door. The idea made her dizzy, so she went home that first day without borrowing anything. Currently, she is adither about Somerset Maugham's "The Razor's Edge" and discusses it with all comers.

It was while Jeanne was working in "Home In Indiana" that she met a very important character in her life, one Lon McCallister, currently a G.I. Joe. He is in Hollywood at present, working by night in the stage show "Winged Victory" and working by day (they're finished now) in the cinematic version of the same play, filmed by 20th Century.

Whenever he can get a week-end pass, Lon and Jeanne get together with Bill Eythe and other members of the gang. These evenings are talkly specials. They discuss the value of the planned life, of working toward pure art in writing, painting, music, and acting. They talk politics, too, loudly agreeing with one another unless Anne Baxter is in the group—then they disagree loudly.

Bill Eythe said to Jeanne one night after a verbal battle, "I can't see how a girl as smart as Anne can be so mixed up about some things."

Said Jeanne with a small grin, "It's odd, but I've noticed that you think Anne is mixed up only when she disagrees with you." (She had a point!)

One of the gang asked Jeanne one night why she usually listens to the conversation instead of joining in. "Because I can learn when I'm listening; I already know anything that I might say." And she added with her pixie-ish smile, "Besides, I always know when I'm going through a phase of development; I think most of us will change our ideas about every single thing we've discussed tonight."

The evenings usually break up in a rush to the nearest hamburger stand for cheeseburgers and malts.

No story about Jeanne Crain would be complete without a chronicle of her conflict with the animal kingdom. The trouble started when, as a small girl, she was given a kitten to rear. She named him Tom and loved him with an intense devotion, until he astonished her by producing a batch of four kittens that had to be given away. After that, Tom disgraced himself approximately thirteen times. On each occasion, the offspring had to be dealt with—to Jeanne's sorrow. She couldn't bear to have the kittens drowned, and she was afraid that, if given away, they might not be properly treated. But a quick glance at the mathematics of the venture persuaded her that she couldn't keep even one kitten out of each litter. She felt nothing but relief when Tom was bestowed upon a farmer in need of an energetic animal to guard his granary.

The next Crain pet was a monkey, name of Mickey. Mickey was agile, bright-eyed and smart. He also had some odd habits. For one thing, he caught grasshoppers, rolled them vigorously in his deft hands until they were a homogeneous mass, then ate them, bite at a time, crunching as if they were celery. This antic so sickened Jeanne that she had to leave him in a rush whenever he decided that it was snack time.

When given an egg, Mickey would shake it with more energy than a malt mixer would have exerted; then, with infinite skill, he would break a tiny opening at the top and drink the well-mixed contents.

Yet in the final analysis, it was not Mickey's appetite but his voice that got him into trouble. He was convinced of his status as a junior Chita. and each morning at a misty five ayem, he would arise, beat on his chest, and give a call that made Tarzan seem like a laryngitis victim.

The neighbors became so bitter about this vocalizing that Mickey, to insure his safety, had to be given away. He is now living in a district in which he has so captivated the natives that, awakened, they all murmur, "Isn't he cute?" before they turn over and go back to sleep.

The final Crain pet is a wire-hair named Terry, who hasn't been especially lucky for Jeanne. Last Christmas Eve she left the yard to take Terry for his airing, and was set upon by the neighbor's dog which had taken a violent dislike to everyone in the Crain family. The dog first bit Jeanne's right thigh, then her left arm, then sprung at her throat, but snagged her chest instead; sliding away, he leapt up to sink his teeth into the small of Jeanne's back. By this time Terry had had realized what was happening and whipped the other dog. Jeanne's screams brought neighbors and her family, who rushed her to the receiving hospital. The lacerations had to be burned out with nitric acid, and there are some scars as a result, but Jeanne plans to have them removed by plastic surgery.

Several months after the wounds were entirely healed, Jeanne decided to take Terry for the first walk since the accident. She ran along gaily, being pulled by one-dog-power in the form of a romping Terry, until she caught sight of another dog rounding the far corner. Acting entirely without thought, galvanized only by instinct, she turned and fled homeward, sobbing wildly.

Jeanne's best girl friend and constant companion is, of course, her sister, Rita, who is currently a student at U.C.L.A. Rita's attitude toward her beautiful big sister is best illustrated by the fact that she would rather wear almost any weary, worn-out dress of Jeanne's than a new frock of her own. Mrs. Crain, noting this oddity, said one day, "I've a good notion to buy ALL the new dresses for Jeanne, and let you whatever she says you may."

"'S' all right with me," chirped Rita. "Jeanne's dresses are lucky."

Jeanne wants Rita to go into pictures, too, but not until she has earned her A.B. degree. When Jeanne was talking about it to Lon McCallister one day, she summed up her entire philosophy in a few sentences. "I'm glad Rita's going to college. I think it's wonderful. Of course I wouldn't change my life, because everything is so smooth, but it would have been nice to have finished college. I'm going to try to take some courses, but there may not be time. That's the trouble—there isn't ever enough of Today."

The beautiful dreamer, at 19, is already lamenting the passing hours.

to prove it. In the first place, any boy who has toted around the nickname of Skippy most of his life does not bring to mind a nefarious character. Secondly, when Skip was just a little guy, he used to strum dubious tunes on rubber bands to soothe his mother's headaches. (She says it really helped!) Thirdly, when his mother saw him on the screen, she bit her lip in disbelief and said, "That boy is not my son!"

Skip was born in Chicago, and at the age of six moved with his parents to Long Island, New York. Before Hollywood put in a phone call for him, his boyish voice contributed to hundreds of radio programs, from soap operas to the "March of Time." It was while working on this latter program that he learned to speak with a German accent—which is what landed him the role of the Nazi youth in the Broadway production of "Tomorrow, the World!" When the play closed over a year later, Lester Cowan brought him to Hollywood to do the film version.

Skip now has a healthy contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and you'll be seeing him next in "Boys Ranch." He has decided that the movies are for him. "On the stage, you do the same thing over and over, but in the movies—boom! and you're finished."

Skip lives with his mother in a modest hotel, and spends his days with the neighborhood gang, indulging in football on the corner lot.

"I couldn't get in with the gang for the longest time," he says. "Then I found the best way to join is to stand on the sidelines with a new football under your arm."

He reads everything "from comic books up," doting particularly on books about animals. Inky, his cocker spaniel, died in November, and Skip's not sure he wants another dog. "There isn't one who could replace Inky."

The only nasty thing we can cook up about Skippy Homeier is that in pottering with his chemical set recently, he inadvertently manufactured tear gas, and was so delighted with his genius that he is now beating his brains out because he can't remember the ingredients.

If you ask him to reel off some of the gutteral German spatter, his forehead glows pink. He runs his fingers through his yellow hair and protests. "Aw, heck, you don't want to hear it. I just sort of rattle on. You'll hear it in the picture."

Skip fervently hopes his future roles will have nothing to do with Nazism.

"Why, already the football gang is eyeing me suspiciously. After all, Ma's people came across the plains in covered wagons, and Dad's so many generations removed from Germany that I can't even remember. Heck, I'm American as a hot dog.".

THE QUIET LIFE WITH HOPE

think I know the answer: Bob enjoys what he is doing to the hilt. He loves each second of his trans-continental tours and his jaunts overseas. He would rather be sitting under a palm tree with a couple of grimy G. I.'s than winning an Academy Award. The only time he gets upset, in fact, is when someone tries to do something for him, make him out a hero, a big-shot. Then he runs—as far and as fast as possible.

He can get along on less sleep and make sense than any man I've ever seen. And, for the innocent by-stander (meaning me), this is torture.

I remember one of the first personal appearance tours we made. We were doing six vaudeville shows a day—and that ain't exactly relaxation. But it didn't stop Bob. Every morning, he'd get up at the crack of dawn, haul me out of bed, too, and start off for eighteen holes of golf. The fact that I didn't play golf made no difference. He thought I could use the sun and fresh air. After that, he'd go to the theatre, clown through the shows, and wind up after the last one in some club he'd heard about. He'd get home at three or four in the morning—dragging me behind him—and the next day the whole routine would start again.

The answers to all this are two: Hope would rather play golf than eat, and he's always afraid of missing something. He thinks that you can sleep any time—when you get home to Hollywood, for instance—but that while you're on the road you should see everything there is to see. The result is that he has more fun than anyone for miles, and that he really knows where he's been.

Our train arrived in Cleveland, Ohio, one time in the middle of winter at nine o'clock in the morning. I was exhausted. No sleep. I crawled into bed and no more than ten minutes passed before Hope was pounding on the door. He'd had no sleep either, of course, but that didn't bother him.

"Big football game today," he said. "Gotta go."

I turned over. "You go," I answered. "It's cold out there."

We argued for a while and he finally left.

What seemed like a half an hour later, he was back. He took hold of the mattress I was on, threw me on the floor, and spilled cold water over me.

"Did you leave a call for nine o'clock?" he asked, sweetly.

I discovered it was six in the evening, that he'd been to the game, helped a hawker sell hot dogs between halves, cheered himself practically hoarse, and hadn't touched a bed. He was all set for dinner, and a look at every interesting spot in town.

When we took our first overseas trip, I knew we'd never get any rest. I was prepared to beat my brains out, to follow Hope through every island in the Aleutians. It's a good thing I was!

Once, for instance, we got to a place called Northway late in the afternoon. We'd come down so they could service our plane, and Bob climbed out and started talking to some of the boys there, kids who were building the Alcan Highway with a bunch of civilian construction engineers. Before we could stop him, he was sitting on a stump telling yarns and there was a crowd around him. Then he began doing routines, pulling me into it, and Frances. We were doing our whole show!

Some of the boys suggested that it might be warmer inside one of the buildings around the air strip, so we went indoors. And there, laid out on long tables, was the most terrific meal I've ever seen. Big roasts of beef. Whole hams. Vegetables and potatoes and hot biscuits. Bob and Frances and I took one look and nearly drooled.

Bob kept on telling stories. He asked the guys if they'd like to hear Frances sing and she gave out with a couple of numbers. I did my stuff. and, at long last, one of the bosses asked us if we'd eaten.

Bob gazed at him with tears in his eyes.

"What do you think we're doing our act for?" he asked.

We'd knocked ourselves out, but that feast was worth it!

One of the few times I've ever seen Hope stopped completely was when we were in the Caribbean last spring. A man came over and asked us to do a show for some troops of the Puerto Rican army who were stationed near-by.

"But do they know me?" Bob said.

"Sure," the man answered. "They've seen your pictures—with Spanish dialogue dubbed in. They know you all right."

"O. K. Let's go."

We went over to a big field where there were about twelve thousand Puerto Rican G. I.'s waiting for us. Bob started his monologue—in English—and I have never seen a larger egg laid anywhere. It was brutal. The boys knew him, naturally, but they couldn't understand a word he said! Gags that ordinarily had the soldiers rolling in the aisles fell quietly on their faces. Bob was desperate.

He knew that I knew a little Spanish, just enough to order a cup of coffee with. He brought me out, thinking I could say something the men would laugh at. It was his last resort, you understand.

But neither of us was prepared for what happened when I walked onto the stage. There was a roar such as I have never heard equalled anywhere. Twelve thousand guys screamed their heads off!

I was complimented, of course. Any ham likes to think he's that good. But I was just as baffled as Bob. And then someone told us that I—moustache and all—looked exactly like the incumbent president of Puerto Rico!

The trips to the Aleutians and the Caribbean (and Bob's tour of the Mediterranean theatre, which, unfortunately I couldn't make) were merely preface to the trip to the South Pacific, however. Then Hope really went to town. He gave a show for every G. I. he could find in the entire area. He dragged Frances and Patty Thomas and me from one island to another, one air field to another, and to more army and navy bases than we could ever remember. And, no matter where he went, or how many shows he did, he completely ignored bed and he played golf. You may have seen one shot of him that was printed in this country: Hope in the middle of the wasteland of Hollandia—swinging a golf club.

As a matter of record, we went to Guadalcanal, Christmas Island, Tarawa, Bougainville, Makin, Kwajalein, Eniwetok, Hollandia, and Wadke, plus Australia. Those are the places we can talk about at this point. There were some others that we can't mention yet. We did shows in the middle of the jungle on boxes which were theoretically the stage, on ships, and one on a beachhead fifty yards deep and 150 yards wide with planes strafing in the background.

One of our biggest emotional kicks was at Tarawa, when we went to the movies they were showing that night. The cemetery where our Marines fell, in the exact spot where they fell, was right next to the open-air theatre. And it was there that we saw the uncut version of the Battle of Tarawa, beside the sleeping men who freed the island from the Japanese.

That was a thrilling moment, one of many. And there were others that broke us up completely, hysterically.

We'd done a show in the jungle, for instance, and were walking back through a line of tents in the darkness to the ones they'd assigned to us for the night. As we passed, we heard some of the G. I.'s discussing the show—and Bob.

"That Hope is a pretty old guy," one voice said.

Hope stopped dead. He turned, and burst through the tent flap.

"Who says he's an old guy?" he yelled at the G. I.'s.

And, just to prove he wasn't, he sat down and gabbed with those kids for four hours. Me? I went to bed!

To say they love him is an understatement. That's been said before, I know. But to them, he is Hollywood and Vine, everything they have left behind. And more. For he talks their language. He's been around G. I.'s for so long now that he knows their gripes, their yearnings, their loves. And when he kids about these things they adore it. They get an expression on their faces that I can't put into words. But it's worth all the discomfort and fatigue in the world.

We had a crack-up in a plane, as you know. But, as far as I've seen, no one has printed the best part of the story.

We were on our way to Australia from Guadalcanal, and the military had persuaded us to take a PB-Y instead of a faster land plane. It's a good thing we did, for, when one of the motors burned out, we were able to land on a bay on the Australian coast.

We threw everything possible overboard, of course, before we hit, braced ourselves, came smacking down on the water, bounced, and came down again on a sand-bar. The pilot bellowed for us to scram out of the ship, thinking the exhaust fumes might blow it up. We did, and found ourselves about a hundred yards off-shore, shaking.

It was then that we noticed some native Australians on the beach before us. One of them yelled something to us. Nope. It wasn't an inquiry as to whether or not we'd been hurt. The guy wanted some American cigarettes!

They finally got some little boats and took us off the sand-bar. Bob and I, by that time, were wondering how we were going to let the people in Sydney know what had happened to us. There we were in the middle of the jungle, we told each other. Could we use tom-toms or smoke signals or what to contact civilization? And how would we live until we were rescued?

Our little Australian pal spoke again.

"Shall we take you to the hotel, sir?" he asked.

"Hotel?" we shouted.

It turned out we'd come down a mile from one of the biggest and most luxurious summer resorts in Australia!

Well, all in all, we did about 150 shows, some for six guys, some for thousands. We started home, so completely fagged that even Hope was admitting it. And we finally got to a place in New Guinea about four, one afternoon. We were to pick up a plane there the next morning for the last lap across the Pacific.

But, as always, the Special Service officer told us of a bunch of kids who were waiting to see Bob. They were on an island off-shore, he said, and they'd heard that he would be there to entertain them. Would we do one more show?

Bob put it up to us. And, tired as we were, we knew that we would never forgive ourselves if we didn't go over to that island. So we climbed into a P-T boat and headed out to sea as dusk was falling.

We rode for three hours, and began to think that the island was half-way to Hawaii. And, just when we were ready to slug anyone who mentioned a show, we saw the place—and the men. They were dressed to the teeth, not in the dungarees we had seen all over the Pacific but in their navy blues. And they'd built us a real stage lined with cocoanut fronds. They'd been waiting for us for hours.

As we stepped ashore, it began to rain. Bob was worried, not because of us, since we'd done shows in the rain before, but because of those freshly-pressed uniforms. The guys laughed at him.

"Let it rain!" they hollered.

Well, we gave them a show. We knocked ourselves out. It was one of the best we gave all the time we were gone. Somehow, we felt that those kids deserved the tops.

And afterwards they suggested we stay the night on a ship anchored in the bay. That sounded like a swell idea, especially since they would see that we got back to our original base in time to catch the plane the next morning. So we went out to the ship, had one of those sensational navy dinners, and sat around.

The captain came in after a while.

"We're showing movies tonight," he said. "You can go or not—just as you wish."

That was enough for Hope. He couldn't miss even a movie. So we all went.

And the picture—believe it or not—was "They Got Me Covered!"

Those boys will never forget that screening, I'm sure. I know I won't. For Bob talked back to himself through the entire picture. And the dialogue was out of this world.

Needless to add, when it was over we trekked back to the captain's cabin and swapped yarns until morning. "Why go to bed?" Hope said. "The P-T will be here at three a.m."

Why, indeed? Why ever go to bed when Hope's around? You can sleep when you get home to Hollywood.

Keep backing 'em up with War Bonds

There's a day coming when you'll want to stand up and cheer the greatest victory in history.

But let's not start cheering yet

In fact, let's not start it at all—over here. Let's leave it to the fellows who are doing the job—to begin the celebrating.

Let's keep bearing down till we get the news of final victory from the only place such news can come: the battleline.

If we do that, we'll have the right to join the cheering when the time comes.

to emote in, under, and out of the water in such pictures as "Bathing Beauty," "Ziegfeld Follies," and "Thrill of a Romance," and she hit an all-time high in weird-but-beautiful effects with her underwater dances in Technicolor.

Her ability extends six ways from the middle, and is wrapped up in a sheet of impressive and glowing personality.

With a well-rounded and constant sense of humor, Esther's mouth is curved into a permanent grin, and her eyes have a neat trick of disappearing into a welter of crinkly laugh-lines.

Her South-of-the-border gags are spieled off in a thick Mexican accent. She reads the comics avidly, and wouldn't be caught dead having missed even one installment of Gordo, Brenda Starr, Dick Tracy or Terry and the Pirates. But she keeps Shakespeare's sonnets on her bedside table. And it's well-thumbed.

There are very few swimmers, professional or strictly-for-fun gals, who can emerge from a pool looking like anything other than a fugitive from the House of Usher. Not so Esther. She comes out of the water looking like a dream boat, which is a distinct feather in her bathing cap. Despite this, she scorns caps, and achieves her svelte look by combing vaseline into her hair, braiding it, winding it about her head coronet fashion. Then she tucks in a handful of paraffin-dipped fabric posies. It's a neat trick, and Esther says it's yours for the swiping.

But, to put first things first, let's hurl our chapeau into the air and shriek that Esther was born right in Los Angeles, Calif. (a fact that instantly qualified her for Hollywood's Hall of Fame)—just spittin' distance from the studio where she now toils.

She was promptly bundled home to Inglewood—a little town that hangs persistently onto L.A.'s coat tails—and buckled down to the tough job of living. The sprout of a family of five kids, Esther was put under brother David's wing, and soon learned that in this vale of jeers there is no such animal as a silver platter, and that a gal has to face things, sink or swim. Under David's tutelage she soon decided on the latter.

Esther's school-teacher mother took an active and intelligent interest in the local Parent-Teacher Association, and almost single-handed embarked on a crusade for a public park which might convert the local gentry's offspring into good citizens instead of happy hoodlums. Eventually, with the help of other mothers and teachers, and the cooperation of Inglewood's city fathers, Mrs. W. saw the park take shape and the public pool become a reality.

Modestly the good lady declined the Mayor's request that she dedicate the pool at a special opening ceremony. As a matter of honest fact, she simply passed the buck to eight-year-old Esther.

Although Esther had never, up until that moment, swam a stroke in her life, she was scheduled to follow her pretty speech with a swim across the pool. To cram for this event, David trotted her off to the Venice plunge and threw her in. Mama wrote the speech, and Papa Williams just kept his fingers crossed and hoped it would rain or something.

As the great day dawned bright and dry, the entire Inglewood population gathered at poolside to pay homage to the civic effort. Hizzoner the Major introduced Esther. Between teeth making like a rivet gun, Esther spat out her speech, and executed a breath-taking (literally) belly flop into the center of the pool. The roar of laughter from her audience rang bitterly in her ears, and she emerged from the water to run wildly for the comfort of her home, tears blinding her vision.

"I am never going to swim again!" she announced dramatically to her mother.

Mama slipped a comforting arm about her shoulders. "Yes, you are," she said. "When the world says you can't do something, that's just the time to show you can!"

Esther muddled this thought around in her mind, then squared her jaw, picked up her towel, and went back to the pool, fairly bristling grim determination.

This number one lesson in intestinal fortitude taught her something she has never forgotten, and ever since she has been going ahead and doing things that have left others mentally beating themselves over the head with a short length of lead pipe because they didn't keep trying.

The six years that followed this event almost water-logged our girl. She was in the water every day. When she couldn't afford to pay for the use of the pool, she counted towels, and every 100 towels gave her an hour's free use of the water. When she could make the trek to the local beach, she bucked the breakers for hours.

Then the local lifeguard took a shine to her and began teaching her all sorts of swim tricks. Brother David helped, too, and before long the leggy kid with the perpetual grin was knocking off a two-mile surf swim every day and loving it. Her great endurance caused a G.I., much later, to quip about her three-hour "dip"— "She came out of the water because the breakers got tired."

At fourteen, in the midst of one of those free hour swims, a local talent scout, acquatic variety, got a squint at her and hauled her off to the Los Angeles Athletic Club for an "audition."

She stroked through her paces and was informed, "In four years we'll make a champion out of you."

Just a year and a half later Esther came up with the Pacific Coast, Midwestern, and Southern California Championships. She did her darndest, because she felt she owed it to the people "what brung her." So carrying the LAAC colors to victory became a habit with her. And loyalty is still one of her strong points.

At the Women's National Swimming Meet in Des Moines in 1939, Esther swam off with cups for the 100-metre free-style, the 200-metre free-style, and for helping the Los Angeles Relay Team swim to victory.

She was scheduled to prepare for the International Olympic games in Finland, but war broke out between Russia and that country, and the games were cancelled.

To tide herself over those lean months that clutter up every life from time to time, Esther became a model at an exclusive local shop. Sports clothes suited her, and before she knew it she had a large personal following including Lana Turner, who was one of her best customers.

But Esther soon took off again, this time for swimming meets in Florida. While she was in that state, she was invited to participate in the Good Will Swimming Tour that was scheduled to "do" South America. Beauty plus ability made Esther a likely candidate, and she would have loved going, but the invite wire never reached her, and at the conclusion of the Florida meet she returned to her modelling chores.

Somewhere in here she managed to sandwich in six months at Los Angeles City College and another half year at the University of Southern California, though finding the time was a major accomplishment in itself.

Three months after she put on the store's sport clothes for the second time, her star began rising, slowly but surely. Billy Rose (the Aquacade producer) invaded Los Angeles in search of talent for his San Francisco show. Somebody gave him the tip on Esther, and he phoned her at the store, and asked her to meet him at a local pool for a tryout.

Most gals would have dropped everything, including the store's sport clothes, and gone. Such chances don't come every day. But Esther was born under a good sign and harbors an innate business sense and native shrewdness. She announced that she was sorry, that she was working, that she owed her employer a certain loyalty, and that she would meet Rose at 5:30, when the store closed.

Errol ("Objective Burma") Flynn, Bruce Cabot, and Lorraine Dora watch the ponies go by at the Hollywood Turf Club opening. A direct hit, we'd say, judging from the smiles.

Rose announced it was impossible, that his plane took off in an hour. But he waited.

For three hours he directed her spirals across the pool, patiently waiting for her to tire. What he didn't know was that her daily two-mile swims had built up within her a great resistance, and this cavorting was merely a warm-up for Esther. At the end of three hours Rose made her an offer, and at the end of another hour they had reached an agreement, and Esther (with the help of a contract attorney, because she was still a minor) signed to become the full-fledged star of the Aquacade.

Yes, just like that!

But fame, and what she laughingly refers to as fortune, didn't bring her much happiness. She lived alone in a San Francisco apartment. She spent most of her time in a wet bathing suit or an equally wet costume. Her costumes had been made for Eleanor Holm, star of the New York show, and fit Esther only casually. Somebody tacked on an extra inch of material at the hemline to make them long enough for her. There was no heater in her dressing room.

But her life brightened considerably when she married Leonard Kovner, a medical student she'd met in Los Angeles. They sidestepped the fantastic publicity wedding the show's press agent had set up, and were quietly married by a Justice of the Peace. Esther was back at the pool in time for the next show.

Then things happened. There was an impromptu coast-to-coast broadcast backstage, and someone shoved a mike in front of Esther. "How do you like working in the Aquacade?" they asked her suddenly.

Esther clabbered up. "I don't like it at all," she wailed in her unexpectedly frank way. "I want to go home and be a housewife."

The show's p.a. blanched, and claimed she's just signed her public death notice—but, unexpectedly, her fan mail tripled, and Esther was gratified to note that the majority of the fans thought she'd done a smart thing.

Before she had a chance to pack up and leave, MGM bigwigs stopped in to see her and enthusiastically outlined to her the story of "Bathing Beauty." Esther was unmoved. She stuck by her guns. She wanted to be a wife and homemaker. Metro was patient. They said they'd sit it out.

And they did.

Two years later Esther finally did sign with the studio. Then came "Bathing Beauty" and fame. Esther did a whale of a bang-up job in her first picture. But she was growing up. She was no longer the lonesome kid who sat around miserably in a damp suit between shows. She was a success. She had before her a straight, unswerving road to follow. She had broader vision, understanding, and a new outlook. And one day she and Leonard realized that their paths were going off in opposite directions. There was too much opposition to buck, so they shook hands intelligently and called it a day.

Today Esther has her own home, a small house on the Pacific Palisades overlooking the ocean. Two cocker spaniels and a swimming pool glorify the back yard. The pool's just postage stamp size and Esther says, "I take three strokes and meet myself coming back. But at least it's wet!"

If home is really where the heart is, then Esther's real home will always be in Inglewood, where her parents still live, and where she always had such fun when she was just a sprout.

Unlike a flock of her cinematic sisters, Esther gives night clubs the go-by in order to cram on thespianic subjects. She bones up daily with Drama Coach Lillian Burns, and proudly admits she's working toward her Academy Award degree.

But, unlike the true scholar, genus greasy grind, Esther doesn't mind kicking up a heel now and then. But she's quick to confess she's a home gal at heart. And that home has room in it for a husband and children, as she'll tell you at the drop of a new chapeau.

"How many kids?" you ask.

Esther gives out with a grin. "Hundreds!" she says.

But really, now. How ambitious can a girl get?

They happen much too frequently."

One of the stories Judy could—and probably has—told on herself, concerns the period just after her marriage to Dave Rose. They had just moved into their Bel Air house, and Judy (who practically had to marry before Hollywood would believe she was grown-up) was obsessed with the idea of proving herself a good hostess. As her first guests, she invited the Raymond Masseys to dinner one evening.

"I set the date a couple of weeks ahead," Judy said, "to give me time to do the thing right. I made such elaborate plans you would have thought my whole future depended on what sort of impression I would make on the Masseys."

There was just one trouble. Judy was at work on a picture, and lost track of time. When the day arrived, she had forgotten about it completely! That evening she came home tired from the studio, undressed, took her make-up off, and she and Dave had a very early dinner. Everything was peaceful, when at about 7:30 there came a ring on the doorbell.

Judy, who gets curious about doorbells and phone calls, couldn't wait for the maid to answer. As usual, she jumped up and answered the ring herself. Of course, there were the Masseys, looking very guest-y.

"I wasn't a very good actress at that moment," Judy said. "My face dropped, and my expression must have suggested that Frankenstein and his bride had come to call. I thought of some 'outs' . . . of pretending I'd been late at the studio and that I was just dressing for dinner . . . of stalling while the maid prepared another dinner, and then eating again with them . . . and then I remembered that there were only a few lamb chops left in the refrigerator! Finally I confessed what had happened, and told them of all my plans to impress them. It ended with Dave, the Masseys and myself all screaming with laughter, and my poor guests sharing the meager lamb chops."

Dave Rose, when he and Judy were still married, learned about her irrepressible sense of humor at first-hand. There was one occasion when they had had a quarrel. Judy finished it by storming out of the house, announcing she would drive—just anywhere—rather than stay in the house with him another minute. She got as far as the garage, then discovered the car keys were in the house. The absurdity of the situation struck her. One minute later, the amazed Mr. Rose was confronted by a laughing, good-humored wife.

On one of her very first dates with Dave, Judy had a bit of laughing-off to do. It was the first nice day of spring, after a week of rain, and Judy was living in Stone Canyon at the time.

"I was all in white, very summery looking," Judy said. "Our porch was covered with ivy, and I decided that a snow-white Judy draped against the ivy made a very romantic setting. I stood there, much too early for our date, waiting for the first sight of Dave's car so I could wave. I waited and waited. A half hour went by, and I started to get a little weary. I thought I'd walk up and down a bit, and scurry back to the ivy when I heard the car. I heard it and I scurried—but on the way I fell kerplunk into a mud puddle at the bottom of the steps. When Dave reached me, I was a sorry mess. But he couldn't keep a straight face—and neither could I.

"It's a fact that you're never ridiculous, no matter what happens, if you have a sense of humor about yourself," Judy said. "It's the perfect cover-up. Everyone makes faux pas; the thing to do is to turn it into a laugh, and people automatically think you're amusing, instead of silly. It's lucky for me it does work that way, considering some of the boners I've pulled."

Another time Judy had need of a sense of humor. It was a couple of years ago. She had a complaint, and decided to do the complaining direct. So she marched into the office of a studio executive, determined to state her piece. The trouble was Judy usually dodges such things, not only because she's embarrassed but because she's downright scared of making a scene. But this time she wasn't going to give herself time to think about it.

The executive's office was a very elaborate one, with private bath. Judy walked in, said what she had to say before he could stop her, and ended with: "That's all I have to say." She started for what she thought was the door to the waiting room. "Wait a minute," said the exec. "No," said Judy, very determined, very dignified, very proud of herself. She opened the door—shut it with a bang—and found herself in the bathroom!

Judy was always running into trouble on her camp tours, when she first started. It seemed she just couldn't remember what insignia equals what rank, and was always confusing Captains, Colonels, etc. She'd say pleasantly, "Hello, Lieutenant," only to be met with frigid silence. Someone would whisper hurriedly into her ear, "He's a Colonel." Judy's standard out on these occasions was a smile and a "You're lucky I didn't call you Private." One outfit solved her dilemma by sending her a plaque for her wall. On it is the complete record of military symbols and what they stand for.

Another story Judy tells on herself is the tale of what happened when she attended her first premiere at Grauman's Chinese Theater. The occasion was the opening of her first starring picture, "Babes in Arms," and she was escorted by Mickey Rooney. It was a special event in many ways, including the fact that she and Mickey were to place their hand and foot prints in the cement in the forecourt. No one could blame Judy for wanting to look beautiful for such an "occasion."

"The trouble was, I used to bite my nails," Judy said, "and I wanted my hands to look beautiful when I plunked them down into the cement. I solved the problem by wearing false nails that night. They looked wonderful, and the one thing I was afraid of—that they'd come off in the cement—didn't happen. I was quite pleased with myself.

"Then, during the picture, my hands began to feel heavy. It was like a creeping paralysis, I could barely lift them. I realized what had happened, of course. The cement had hardened under the long false nails. You can be sure I did no waving to the crowd on the way out. I could hardly drag my arms along. When I got home, I practically had to hammer the nails loose. And come to think of it, I might just as well have gone with my own bitten nails, because I've told the story to everyone I know, anyway."

Her experience at the Greek Benefit in New York's Radio City a few years ago took quite a lot of laughing off. Judy flew from the Coast to sing at the event. She arrived at midnight, and they told her she'd go on at two. Actually, she went on at four, the last number on the program. She kept begging them to put her on quickly, because she could see the crowd was growing restless, but she had to wait. Finally she was on, singing "God Bless America." By that time two men were arguing loudly right behind her, and eventually got into a fist fight.

"No one was paying any attention to me except a group of kids," Judy said, "and they were making their comments good and loud. One of them said, 'Look at the chords stick out on her neck when she sings,' and another said, 'I wonder where she got that dress.'

"All was confusion, and all I wanted to do was get through the song. I walked around while I sang, and when I reached the pit, suddenly it started to go down. It sank two stories while I was on the phrase, 'the land I love.' Immediately I had everyone's attention, for the first time. A crowd gathered around the rail of the pit, staring down at me. I looked up at the faces, and all the kids were shouting 'Look at Judy Garland.' By that time the song was finished, so I stared back up at them and shouted, 'Feed me peanuts!'"

It's harder for her to laugh off an experience that dates back to her vaudeville days, when Judy, her two sisters and her mother, had an act. One of their numbers was a song, "I'm Laughing." For one half of the chorus, Judy was supposed to laugh to the music. After doing eight shows one day in Milwaukee, Judy was understandably groggy. In fact, she was practically hysterical. Came the cue, and she started. Soon she was screaming with real laughter. Her sisters caught the hysteria, and started laughing too. Her mother, at the piano, played the music over and over, waiting for them to snap out of it. Finally she started to laugh herself. Everyone was laughing but the audience, which was very, very grim. Her mother stopped playing, stood up with as much dignity as she could muster, and said, "Let's get out of here." That finished their engagement at that theater.

A few years ago, Judy went vacationing at Arrowhead Springs Hotel. She had been there only a few hours when a call came through from an M-G-M executive, also at the resort on a holiday. He asked Judy to join his party at dinner. She accepted, and their conversation sparkled. Suddenly he asked, "Have you had a bath?"

"I thought it was a holdover from the 'little Judy Garland' days," Judy said. "Honestly, you don't know how hard it was for me to convince people I'm really grown-up. So I tried to sound polite, when I answered 'no.'

"'What time did you get here?' he asked me. I told him. 'And you haven't had a bath yet?' he persisted. 'But surely you'll have one before dinner?'

"It wasn't till after I'd told him what I thought of his 'babying' me," Judy laughed, "that I learned he was talking about the mineral baths for which Arrowhead is noted. Although I'd been there many times, I had never taken any of them."

Judy not only "laughs it off," she thinks fast, as she demonstrated during one embarrassing moment at a night club just recently.

She was on a Saturday night date with Bobby Stack, home on leave. At the next table was a tourist, having much too good a time. He was not only gay, but belligerent. After staring for awhile, the stranger came over to Judy and Bobby. He pointed at her. "You're Deanna Durbin," he said. Judy, who could see he was spoiling for a fight, took the easy way out. "Yes," she said demurely. "I liked you in your last picture," he said, naming one of the Durbin productions. "I was rather good in that," admitted Judy modestly, hoping he'd then go away. But suddenly he looked at Stack with a most belligerent expression. He growled, "My name's Stock. What's yours?"

"If Bob had answered 'mine's Stack,' he was a cinch for a punch in the nose," Judy said, "for I knew the man would think we were making fun of him. So before anything disastrous could happen, I introduced Bob at 'Mr. Brown,' which was the first name I thought of."

As you can see, it would take quite a lot now to upset Judy. And it's a far cry from the days in her early teens, when she was just a self-conscious girl who took herself and life much too seriously. Now, no matter what the faux pas, Judy can turn it into a laugh. And on her it looks good!

THE END

G.I. JOE IN HOLLYWOOD

What did they think? Was it "Thumbs up!" or "Thumbs down!"?

To find out, I talked to dozens of the boys—on the set while the picture was shooting, in their temporary camp, where they lived in tents, and in homes where they were guests for an evening.

And I got an earful!

Pfc. Bob Blakeman, for example, decided that the Hollywood girls added up to a nice fat zero! This attitude I found a little confusing, in view of the fact that Bob fell in love and became engaged while here, but as he said, "You know how those things happen, especially with a girl like Madeleine." Bob, called "Canvasback" by his pals, is an ebullient 20, and comes from Elizabeth, New Jersey, where he had barely finished school and was starting out to be a radio actor when the Army tagged him.

"The trouble with the Hollywood girls is that they all look alike and have the same lines," he declared. Another thing, they use too much make-up; it's no fun to kiss a girl with all that red goo on her mouth, and besides, you get bawled out by your sergeant next morning when you show up with red stuff all over you. My main complaint, however, is that the girls out here are all too darned career-conscious."

A little embarrassed by such a blast, Bob grinned and said, of course, there was a lot to be said for Hollywood too; by and large it was a swell place with swell people, and it was wonderful to sleep under two blankets in mid-summer when the rest of the country was sweltering. Also, all the movie stars had proved to be much nicer than he had expected, not stuck-up or high-hat in the least. One day, for instance, George Raft entertained him in his dressing room on the lot, and on another day Carmen Miranda personally taught him the steps of the new samba-boogie.

"That couldn't happen in New Jersey," he granted, sighing.

Sgt. Ade Kahn was a little disappointed in the highly-touted glamour of Hollywood. Ade is 28, married, a Broadway-wise New Yorker, and former press agent for swank night clubs like LaConga, and top bandsmen like Harry James.

"It was naive of me, I know, but somehow I expected to see a hundred movie stars walking down Hollywood Boulevard, whereas I never saw one," he said. "Otherwise, Hollywood is terrific! The climate makes for a relaxed pace of life, yet underneath there is a current of excitement that keeps you from going stale. Imagine a place where it didn't rain in three months! That's sun-sational! I want to come back permanently, after the war."

Ade found Claudette Colbert prettier than he had expected, and Linda Darnell the most beautiful girl in Hollywood. He was impressed with the way servicemen are so well treated here, even to being served first in restaurants, and his biggest thrill—and shock—was seeing himself on the screen for the first time in some daily rushes. "I'd been dieting like mad for six months, but I looked as fat as ever," he noted, "only more."

Like Ade, Cpl. Kenneth "Shadow" Forbes, 25, and a former juvenile on the New York stage, also felt cheated on the glamour score and was disappointed in the lack of gay night clubs and big-city conveniences, like rapid transportation. He wasn't overly impressed with the Hollywood women, who all seemed to wear the same kind of make-up, hair-dos and clothes, and have the same get-ahead-at-all-cost gleam in their eyes. All in all, everything was "mixed up" in Hollywood—neither Big City nor Small Town.

"But I'm a sucker for beautiful homes, and Hollywood certainly rates in that department," he exclaimed. "I thought we had some wonderful places back East, but the homes out here are nothing short of terrific. Gosh, every place has lawns and flowers and trees!"

The way the mountains meet the sea; the symphony playing in Hollywood Bowl on a moonlight night; the warm hospitality of Californians; the absence of the artificiality he expected to encounter; and the healthy, clean-cut beauty of the girls all combined to make S/Sgt. Dan Plotnick rate Hollywood as "tops." Dan is 23 and comes from Richmond, Virginia, where he was a field service man with the American Red Cross before the war.

"That eulogy goes, even on a cloudy day!" he insisted. "But seriously, all the stuff you read about Hollywood's being superficial and full of phoneys is all wet. Sure, you run across a phoney now and then, but the guy would be a phoney wherever he lived. Yes, sir, I want to live here after the war; a man still can find a frontier here, and I want part of it. They'll literally have to 'carry me back to ol' Virginny' if they ever get me back there."

Quiet, soft-spoken Cpl. John Andes found much to impress him favorably in Hollywood. John is 24 and hails from Upper Darby, Pennsylvania. He had just received his B.S. in music at Temple University, and was planning to study voice, when the war caught up with him.

"I like the gracious mode of living and the way of family life which characterizes Hollywood," he judged. "I like the physical environment, the lovely homes, the wise community planning reflected in the residential sections. I like the many cultural advantages open to those of lower incomes as well as the wealthy. I like the fact that the popular conception of Hollywood—tall handsome men and beautiful women with no worries or problems—is completely false. And I like the women here. Actually, they are no different from women elsewhere, with no more intelligence or glamour than the same class of girls in other sections. Well-groomed and well-behaved, the average may be better looking than elsewhere, but that is to be expected in a town where physical beauty is a saleable commodity."

By contrast, John disliked with equal conviction the "abominable" transportation system and the "deplorable" lack of cabs. He found the ego of Hollywood—a "citified nationalism" he called it—definitely irritating, and wished Hollywood was not so cocksure. "It would be pleasanter here if everyone was not quite so money-conscious, and if people would curb the tendency to 'act' off-screen."

Ann Sothern furnished the biggest thrill of John's brief stay. He met her through a mutual friend, and she entertained at a dinner party in honor of the Andes' birthday. "Sure I got a big kick out of it," he admitted. "Who wouldn't? She's so cute and wonderful."

A different kick was the one Sgt. Louis Neistat, 30, of Hartford, Connecticut, got when he bumped into Michael O'Shea on the 20th Century-Fox lot one day. They were idly chatting when a man approached them and in a subservient manner said "Please, Mr. O'Shea, this . . ." and "If you please, Mr. O'Shea, the other."

Lou looked at Mike and Mike looked at Lou, and both suddenly began to laugh like mad. Five years before they had been pals in New York with no one saying "Please" to them, because they were both stone broke!

Lou liked the suburban feeling of the town; the fact that men and women were businesslike in their dealings instead of the wild crackpots they are usually painted to be; and the fact that "so many people with varied degrees of talent can work side by side in the motion picture business and all do so well."

He was surprised that all the stars didn't live in one district, and some of them have very modest homes indeed. The newness of everything gave him a feeling of impermanence, as if the whole town were a giant movie set, and he missed the charm of old buildings and quaint little restaurants.

A former bank clerk in Hoboken, New Jersey, Cpl. Russell Drewes, 26, found Hollywood much less sophisticated than he had expected, and people more down-to-earth than glamorous. He was impressed mostly by magnitude of the picture business and decided the high salaries were well deserved. Disappointed by the night life, particularly the lack of entertainment in floor shows, he was flabbergasted by the "extraordinary hospitality" of people in all walks of life.

"The women? They're swell!" he said. "Most of them are lovely, healthy, intelligent, fond of sports and wholly natural. If they have one characteristic fault, though, it's that most of them want to go to 'name' places just to be 'seen'. It's a little hard on a G.I. pocketbook."

Even the gas stations looked like something out of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" to S/Sgt. Fred Cotton. Fred is 37, and before moving to Boulder, Colorado, used to teach piano in Central City, Nebraska. Other sights which astounded him as much as the unorthodox gas stations included Lupe Velez's antics at the weekly prize fights, and the number of fine cars still on the road. Most impressive to him was the way people give lifts to servicemen, even as late as 2 a.m.; not once did he fail to get picked up.

Granting they have many other charms, Sgt. Jasper Hornyak, 25, a former music student of Cleveland, Ohio, couldn't get used to the "careless" dress of Hollywood women, movie stars excepted. A mild climate, he felt, was no excuse for general sloppiness or such unconventional habits as dashing out to shop without hat and gloves, or wearing shorts and midriff bras on the street on Sunday. Also distasteful to him were other phases of conduct—like brawls in public places, the constant divorces, and never being satisfied. The "ordinary" theatres playing pictures he had seen before were a let-down; somehow he had thought the theatres would be done on a grandiose style, and he would see all the new movies first in Hollywood.

LON McCALLISTER
20TH CENTURY-FOX
STAR IN "WINGED VICTORY"

"That stuff is unimportant, however, and I'm just carping," he said. "I guess it's just that everyone expects a miracle of perfection in Hollywood. We forget that the people here are human beings and not little gods."

"It's silly to talk in generalities about Hollywood because the place defies you," observed Cpl. Clint Wilder, 24-year-old Warren, Pennsylvania, boy, and a modern languages and literature major at Princeton before joining the Air Corps. "In the same way, you can't apply big city rules to it because, despite its size, wealth, and importance, it's basically a rural town. My first impression was of awe and wonder at the complete casualness and easy lives of the people out here. Later I realized that casualness was a surface thing, probably engendered by a sense of impermanence.

"The girls are wonderful party girls—gay, well-dressed playmates—but the inevitable discovery of their lack of depth is depressing. And it's baffling, the way everyone is violently on the defensive lest you do not like the place or find something to criticize."

M/Sgt. Martin Howell, on the other hand, was impressed by and wholly approved the tremendous pride evidenced by everyone, he said. Martin is 28, a Dartmouth graduate, and former junior accountant for General Electric in Belmont, Massachusetts. He also liked the "outdoor personality" of the girls—they go swimming and get wet, for example—and their fine sense of fun. But he, too, felt they tended to overdo informality in dress to the point of slovenliness at times. It particularly amused him to hear the constant build-up about the weather, because it so rarely lived up to it.

"The thing I like best and what makes me want to come back here to live and work is that there is a whole new vista of opportunity. Nothing is tradition-bound."

Cpl. Red Buttons wants to return to Hollywood, too. Red is 26 and a former burlesque comedian who starred for Minsky at the age of 18. In "Winged Victory" he plays the comedy role of Whitey and does an impersonation of one of the Andrews Sisters.

"Sure, I want to come back," he chirruped blithely. "Hollywood strikes me as a great resort kind of town where you can knock around and have a lot of fun. You know, slip into slacks and say 'Let's go!' The women are good looking and sharp; they know all the answers, and that's the way I like 'em. Most of 'em are on the insincere side, and so career-crazy you can hurt their feelings more by saying 'You don't get the part' than by falling out of love with them, but so what? It breaks the monotony."

DIARY OF A DOTING DAD

But let's skip that singing lamb for a moment and talk about your birthday. We didn't have a party for you because we thought it would be better to reserve such festivities for a later year when you'd really enjoy it. We did have a cake for you, though, with one significant candle rising from the center. Incidentally, chum, candles are not edible. I caught you in the nick of time.

I made plans for this birthday of yours when I was in Washington, D. C., over a month ago. I was there to attend the President's Birthday Ball, a function that I will boast about to you, plenty, when you're old enough to understand the importance of a function given for the benefit of children who need medical care.

One day I ferreted out a toy shop. (I'll bet I know the location of every fine toy shop in every big city I've visited in this country. I'm a walking Duncan Hines of toy shops.) Perhaps this might be a good place to tell you that I like toy shops for two reasons: first, because they sell things I can buy for you, and second, because the salesgirls are so pleasant.

I don't mean to sound like a ham when I say that being an actor causes a man to encounter two totally different reactions from salespeople. One type of salesperson is extremely cordial because he or she, recognizing an actor, feels as if he were dealing with a personal friend. That's really swell. The other reaction is one of supercilious hauteur; the salesperson refuses to be impressed, although—Lord knows—I never wanted to impress anybody in my life. All I want is the respect and love of your mother, and of you, and of a few genuine friends. Oh yeah—and a few toy stores where I can buy gifts for you. Full world.

When I entered this particular toy shop a girl came forward to help me with a bright little exclamation of recognition; I might have been her big brother, come in to buy her niece a gift. Well, I bought a musical horse, then a musical pig, then a lamb, a teddy bear, a lion, a Mickey Mouse . . . I think there were two others. I can't check up because your mom opened the package when it arrived from the east and hid some of the animals. She said, and I know she's right, that we should give you such things over a long period of time instead of confusing you by handing you everything at once.

Maybe we'd better get this straight between us now: your dad is no diplomat. He is very likely to try to lasso the moon for you. If, in the future, he tries it, and your mother takes away the rope, just bear in mind that your mother is protecting us both—me, from giving you too much for you to appreciate, and you, so that you won't expect too much of the world once you are outside our own home.

While I was on my way back to the hotel from this toy shop in Washington I saw some jars of prepared crêpes suzettes in a store window and thought, "Man, that's for me." I could just see myself, here in the den where I am writing this, entertaining guests some night and saying along late in the evening, "How about a spot of crêpes suzettes?" So I bought several jars and had them sent with the toys.

Yipe! The whole package, when it arrived on our doorstep, looked as if it had tried to stop a General Sherman tank. Most of the jars of crêpes suzettes were broken and the syrup was lathered over the animals. When I saw you chewing the lamb's ear this afternoon, I knew that—in years to come—you were going to be surprised at the flavor of mutton because it isn't going to resemble maple syrup.

Well, darling, I repeat what I said to you early this morning: Happy Birthday, Daughter, and many happy returns of the day! Your first year has certainly been eventful. I feel a little cheated because I missed your first word—I was away on a Bond Tour—and I missed your first step—again I was away. But in the years 1943, 1944, it was the fate of fathers everywhere to be away from their children when the momentous trifles of babyhood occurred, so in that respect I am one with other men. I am luckier than most because I have had the great good fortune of watching you change from an indignant pink bundle of alternate sleeping and yelping for food, into a poised young lady who has a mind of her own.

You've had a rugged day, honey, but thank God you're out of pain now, and fast asleep. The doctor left about an hour ago, after we had a long talk down here in the den, and I've been doing some heavy thinking. I guess you might say that I've learned the second law of parenthood. I think the first law is probably this: Love a child with all your heart. And the second surely: Be wise enough to discipline both yourself and your child.

I think I might get E for Excellent in any test of the first law, because I've never made any secret of the fact that you're my heart's core. But I'm going to have to start right now to apply the second law to my conduct. You see, the trouble all started because I have difficulty telling you "no."

You gobble candy. Usually your mom restricts your sweet rations, but she was away last week, so I had you spend the afternoon helping me lay some brick. I had picked up a box of good candy the day before, so I opened it to give you a thrill. You certainly do love sweets, which proves, I guess, that likes attract. Between laying brick and reinforcing our strength with candy, you and I ate the entire pound.

When I stopped to realize that fact I had some qualms, but you didn't get sick, so I thought everything was all right. Until your mom said that you had a boil on your right side about two inches below your arm pit. You were a sick girl while it was forming, then it had to be lanced—and that was bad business.

And just to let you know what a lily-livered character your dad can be on occasion, I might as well admit that I thought I was going to have to leave when the doctor got busy on the job that had to be done. I didn't think I could stand there and see you suffer.

Well, it's all over now, thank the Lord. Your mother has been wonderful about it. She pooh-poohed my confession that I had caused the trouble, and said forcefully that an insect bite—perhaps caused by an ant or a mosquito—had festered. But when I got the doctor alone, he agreed that your recent diet was at fault. So I guess that makes me the heavy, beyond all doubt.

Let's have an understanding between us, honey. In the future, when I deny you something, will you remember that it is just as tough on me to refuse to give you what you want, as it is for you not to get it? While you're little, I'll be man enough to hide the candy, both literal and figurative, after you've had a fair share, but when you're older, I'll appreciate it if you'll be man enough to say occasionally, "Let's not do that, Dad," or "Let's not buy that, Dad—it's too rich for our blood."

Thanks, Daughter—you're my girl.

Say look, Athletic, you're certainly postponing one of my pet parental ambitions. When I first started this dad's diary, I confided to you that I could scarcely wait until you were big enough to be held on my lap so I could tell you stories. You've got to say this for your pop: he's a man who sticks to his notions.

I have tried repeatedly, since you began to wrinkle up your nose at mention of Mickey Mouse, to hold you on my lap and spin yarns. I now give up.

The moment you get installed anywhere, you try to bounce. If you're on the bed, that's fine. Even if you're on one of the big upholstered chairs, you have a rousing time. But when you try to turn your dad's chest into a human spring board, Baby, that's murder.

Guess we'll have to postpone the story sessions until you have emerged from this dancing derriere stage of development.

JUNE 6, 1944

Today, Judith Ann, I'm going to write only a small note. In years to be, you will learn this date in your History classes—it will be called D-Day, that day on which British, Canadian, and American forces landed on the shores of France, not for purposes of conquest, but for purposes of liberation.

I want you to know how that day was greeted in this part of the world, where you will grow up. Not with hilarity did people learn of our landings in France, but with solemnity and new dedication. War workers labored longer hours and with redoubled effort; men spoke of the news in quiet voices, knowing that, as they spoke, their sons and nephews and brothers were dying on the alien sand. Women, singly and in twos and fours, went to church during those desperate hours, doing the one thing they could do: pray.

I hope that, when you are grown, you will work with some organization sworn to preserve peace. As time goes on, women will progressively take more hand in the business of the world; I should be proud of you if you joined with any group devoted to preserving human life and

Quite a trip we had today, wasn't it? I took you to Malibu Beach with me—a drive taken by grace of my last A ticket for a long time. It was the first time I had ever had you alone in the car with me, and look, Junior, you're a buzz-baby if I ever saw one. First on the seat, then standing up front with your nose against the windshield.

I got a kick out of your pointing out items of interest to me. You didn't miss a truck during the entire trip and you announced each one by imitating the rumble of its motor. What a performance! And every time you saw a patch of flowers, you thrust out that button nose of yours and sniffed. You also waved frantically to every man in uniform that you saw. Am I going to have my troubles in about fifteen years!

I notice that, although I was a heavy in my early pictures, you are almost as much afraid of me as you are of a chocolate ice cream cone. When I bawl you out in my basest, most formidable tone, you turn your head away, giggle, and practically say, "Aw, shoot."

This is Independence Day and you're the Independence Kid—a new phase in your development.

AUGUST 4, 1944

Well, Lady, your old man is proud of you. While you and I were out working in the Victory garden, you stumbled over the small cement curbing that marks the driveway and bumped your forehead a nasty crack. You got up, yelling in pain and protest, and smacked that cement curbing with your doubled, angry fist.

I've seen you do that before, and I've been meaning to mention it to you. When you get hurt, you always strike back at the thing that has hurt you and—in righting the wrong done you—you forget your bruise.

Pretty soon you'll learn that it doesn't do a bit of good to smack an inanimate object, but by that time you will also have learned that it's useless to wail over your injuries. I want my daughter to be able, when she has taken a heavy blow, to get up, brush herself off, and skip the hysterics. I want her to devote her energies to licking the thing that has hurt her; licking it—not uselessly as she now smacks a cement curb—but constructively in her own mind. How about it, Judy?

Oh say, there's another thing about you that pleased me, Baby. I like your generous spirit. No matter what you have in your mitt, if I say, "Give it to Daddy," you march over and hand it to me. Even if it's a cookie that you've begged from the cook, or a piece of candy that you've wheedled from the nurse. There's nothing like a generous spirit, Sweet Stuff; it sets you free of many different types of miserliness.

I don't get to read much, but I picked up a book one day and noticed a single sentence: "The love of a generous woman is a gift of wings." You have a good start, chicken, toward being that kind of woman. I sincerely hope that the husband you will one day marry, will find in you all the loveliest traits of womanhood—just as I have found them in your mother.

SEPTEMBER 10, 1944

I certainly snapped a swell picture of you today, Judy. We were out, picking apples off the trees I imported from Oregon. I even had two carloads of soil shipped in from the trees' native habitat so that they would flourish, and they really did.

You lifted one of the apples from the ground and came running toward me, holding it up and jabbering triumphantly. That's the shot I got, and I know it's going to be a honey.

There are a good many parents who keep a month by month photographic record of their youngsters, but I didn't want to do that with you, Judy. It seemed to me that pictures taken six to eight months apart would be much more dramatic and interesting. I trust, Miss Donlevy, that—despite your natural feminine vanity—you will agree with me.

I know that this is an odd time of year to be writing a few notes about roses, but the truth is that our garden is now filled with them. I've made it a habit to pick you a rose, Miss Judith Ann, whenever you and I are working in the yard together. I've been careful to pull off all the thorns before handing the flower to you, for you to smell it into a fast decline.

The other day you decided to pick a rose for yourself without any assistance from your pop. You walked briskly into the thicket and reached for a beauty. The thorns on the bush caught your dress and your sweater, and the thorns on the rose-stem pricked your finger. You slapped the bush, then set up an awful yell, so I came running to rescue you.

Well, honey, I'm no philosopher, but one day I'll be able to point that incident out to you as an object lesson. As long as you stick with Dad, he'll try to de-thorn life in advance for you, but when you go out adventuring on your own, you're going to have some disillusioning experiences.

But all that, thank God, is many years in the future. Right now I have to start making plans for your second birthday. For one thing, I'm going to buy you a bathing suit, because this next spring and summer you're going to learn to swim. You and I are going to have a lot of fun together, not only this year, but the next and the next and the next . . . Y'know, Honey, there are many things that can make a man feel rich, but as far as I'm concerned the very first and foremost of the lot is a daughter. A daughter exactly like you.

that they can once more record with live orchestras. After twenty-seven months of re-issues and vocal backgrounds (Gr-rrrrr), you can once more buy the records you've wanted and couldn't get. All you Sinatra fanatics can now purchase Frankie platters, you Sammy Kaye followers can get "Swing and Sway" stuff, and I can be happy with some new things by Ellington. In fact, all the people you like who record for either Victor or Columbia will once more be available on wax. By February first, both these companies will have recordings by every one of their artists on sale in the nation's music stores. A few of them are ready now. For instance:

Victor:

Vaughn Monroe and his orchestra do "The Trolley Song," the hit tune from Judy Garland's picture, "Meet Me In St. Louis." Vaughn and Marilyn Duke share the vocal. On the reverse side Vaughn sings "The Very Thought of You." Incidentally, I happened to be at this date (which was the first session Victor had after the ban was lifted), and the Monroe musicians were really happy characters, in spite of the fact that they had only a few hours sleep. They finished playing at the Commodore Hotel at two in the morning and at about three, Vaughn got the news that the union situation had been settled, so he started calling the guys to tell them to be at Victor first thing in the morning. They were so thrilled to be recording again they didn't mind the loss of shut-eye. (Dig the picture of Vaughn kissing the Victor mike on page 49.)

Tony Pastor is in for two platters, the first being "One Meat Ball," a novelty with an amusing lyric, and "Robin Hood." Louis Prima gets composing credit for "Robin Hood." Tony's second is "Confessin'" and "Blues My Naughty Sweetie Gave To Me." "Confessin'" is the old tune which is being successfully revived.

Charlie Spivak was playing in Milwaukee when the recording news came through, so he flew the band to Chicago and waxed "Too-Ra-Loo-Ra-Loo-Ra" and "Let Me Love You Tonight." The highlight of this record is the beautiful Spivak trumpet on "Too-Ra-Loo."

Columbia:

Frank Sinatra's offer, and I imagine there'll be a few takers, is "White Christmas" and "If You Are But A Dream." Axel Stordahl made the arrangements and conducts the orchestra. Frank uses a chorus on "Christmas" but sings alone on the "Dream" side.

Harry James is also present and accounted for with "The Love I Long For," a new ballad from the musical show "Sadie Thompson," with a vocal chorus by Buddy De Vito, and "I'm Beginning To See The Light," with Kitty Kallen handling the lyrics.

For his first record in over two years, Andre Kostelanetz decided to do the two "Ave Marias," Franz Schubert's and the Bach-Gounod arrangement. According to Andre, "Ave Maria" is the selection for which he has received most requests, in his numerous camp appearances in this country and overseas. Incidentally, Kostelanetz has nixed all radio and concert offers and is off again on another tour to entertain the servicemen.

Decca:

Carmen Cavallaro and his orchestra have made two of the tunes from the Twentieth Century-Fox picture, "Something For The Boys." The first, "Wouldn't It Be Nice?", is an instrumental featuring the Cavallaro piano, and the second, "In The Middle of Nowhere," is lyricized by Charlotte Paige, Carmen's new vocalist.

The Andrews Sisters, with Vic Schoen's orchestra, sing "I'm In A Jam" (with Baby) and "Corns For My Country." The latter number is the one the girls do in "Hollywood Canteen."

Fred Waring, his Pennsylvanians and his glee club, are heard on "Sweet and Lovely" and David Rose's "Our Waltz." Ferne, the girl violinist who has been with Fred for about ten years, is featured on the first side.

Eileen Farrell, one of the best sopranos on the air today, gives us "Always" and "A Kiss In The Dark" as her first release for Decca.

The blended singing of The Merry Macs comes forth on "Ten Days With Baby" and "Thank Dixie For Me." The Macs have been theatre-touring it again.

Jascha Heifetz, the famous violinist, is another new artist on the Decca label, and his first offering is "White Christmas" and Victor Herbert's "A La Valse," with Salvador Camarata's orchestra.

Here's another show album, this time the score from "Bloomer Girl," the Broadway hit everyone says will out-Oklahoma "Oklahoma." The wonderful music is by E. Y. Harburg and Harold Arlen, and the sixteen sides feature Celeste Holm and the cast and orchestra from the show.

Capitol:

Johnny Mercer, June Hutton, The Pied Pipers and Paul Weston's orchestra joined forces to record Johnny's newest hit, "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive." The reverse side is "There's A Fellow Waiting In Poughkeepsie" with June and the Pipers.

Another Mercer tune, "I Promise You" (how many hits can he write?) is sung by Jo Stafford, backed up by "Let's Take The Long Way Home."

Billy Butterfield, who plays a lot of trumpet, has waxed "There Goes That Song Again" and "Moonlight In Vermont." Billy recently went into the Navy, but before donning a sailor suit he recorded several sides for Capitol, which will be released during the next few months.

JAM NOTES:

Unless Twentieth Century-Fox changes current plans, Betty Grable and June Haver will play the title roles in "The Dolly Sisters." Fox originally wanted Alice Faye and Betty for the sisters, then they considered Lee and Lynn Wilde, Metro's blonde twins, and then switched back to Alice and Betty. But when Alice didn't want to do the picture, they gave the nod to June Haver. If Alice doesn't decide to retire from the screen permanently, she may do "State Fair."

The Modernaires have put in their bid to go overseas and sing for the fighting men and are only waiting for the O.K. In the meantime they are playing theatres in the East. Tommy Morgan, who sang with the group for a time, is now male soloist with Johnny Long's orchestra. Johnny was just set for a long run at the Hotel Stevens in Chicago . . . Andy Russell has been singing on a nighttime sustaining show, Tuesdays and Thursdays, over the Blue Network; but by the time you read this, he may be set for a big radio commercial, besides.

Patti Palmer, former Ted Fio Rito thrush, has joined Jimmy Dorsey. Jimmy's male singer, Teddy Walters, is rapidly rising in popularity, and rightly so, because he has an excellent voice and personality . . . With Buddy De Vito due to get a call from Uncle Sam—in fact he may be in khaki by now—Harry James has optioned Billy Usher, who formerly sang with Sonny Dunham's orchestra . . . The King Cole Trio is now the highest paid musical three in America. They are receiving $1,750 a week in theatres, and are breaking records everywhere they appear . . . Betty Bonney, former canary with Les Brown and Frankie Carle, has musical comedy ambitions and is trying for a Broadway show.

Larry Stevens, Jack Benny's new singer, has made a fine impression and as soon as he is a little less nervous on reading lines, he should fit into the Benny program very well. Larry is twenty-one years old and was recently discharged from the Air Corps . . . Eugenie Baird left the Casa Loma Band and turned up as Bing Crosby's singing partner on the Kraft Music Hall . . . Barry Wood was elected Justice of the Peace in East Haddam, Connecticut . . . Jeri Sullavan, who has been heard over C.B.S. on many programs, has been signed by Warner Bros.

Bob Haymes, who was under contract to Columbia when he went into the army, has been discharged and is back at the Gower street studio. . . . Gil Rodin and Ray Bauduc, two mainstays of the old Bob Crosby band, may also be discharged soon. . . . Louis Prima has really hit the comeback trail with his big band. He recently broke the all-time attendance record at the Adams Theatre in Newark, and theatre managers have requested return engagements everywhere he has played.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

What DOES he seek THAT IS STRONGER THAN LOVE AND GREATER THAN RICHES?

Dramatic Episodes from W. Somerset Maugham's Best-Selling New Novel

THE RAZOR'S EDGE

Marriage to Isabel will give Larry love, wealth. But when she whispers, "Won't you come up?"—he runs away. What is he seeking?

Back from mysterious India, Larry possesses a new power that cures others! Has his search for life's hidden secrets succeeded—or only begun?

Other women give everything—to bring Larry happiness. They fail. Instead he seems fascinated with drunken Sophie — broken plaything of Paris. Why?

Isabel is still desperately in love with Larry. Would she have plotted so deliberately for revenge if she had foreseen this stark tragedy?

W. Somerset Maugham

Dean of living novelists, daring playwright of international fame, author of "Rain," "Of Human Bondage," etc., today at the pinnacle of a brilliant career.

BOTH THESE GREAT BOOKS FREE to New Members of "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"

RACHEL . . . who avenged France because of just one German kiss too many!

YES, yours FREE! Over 1,000,000 copies already published! THE RAZOR'S EDGE, the fascinating novel about a passion of which the author says, no wine is so intoxicating, no love so shattering, no vice so compelling."

The Mystery of Larry Darrell

Why did Larry Darrell turn down love, riches, career, and fling himself around the earth in his unearthly quest? From country to country he wandered, seeking—what? Did even he himself know?

Apparently no one had the power to block his path in his frenzied search for "the greatest experience in life"! But could it ever pay him for the sacrifices he had made? These are questions which you will probe deep into your own heart to answer!

What Did Women Want of Him?

The women in Larry's life tried desperately to help him find happiness. After a journey to India, he acquired miraculous power over others—so that even the girl whom liquor, love and drugs had destroyed could see the greatness shining in him.

Here is one of the most amazing stories ever written! The noted author and reviewer, Glenway Wescott, says: "It will not be worldliness, the humor and stir of dramatic episodes—a seduction, a miracle, a murder—but rather Larry's message of the spirit that will make this book beloved."

Worldly-wise, razor-keen, THE RAZOR'S EDGE lays bare the heart and soul of one of the truly great characters of modern literature. Accept this tremendous best-seller free. And with it receive also free, SHORT STORIES of DE MAUPASSANT, described below!

Her lovely hair shines just like jet, No wonder she's the brunette threat!

No Other Shampoo

LEAVES YOUR HAIR SO LUSTROUS, YET SO EASY TO MANAGE!

- Smart, new combination . . . checks and stripes worn together! A blouse of crisp rayon over a sweater of soft, warm cotton and wool. Her lovely hair, swept up from her face in an unusual new center-part arrangement, owes its shining smoothness to Drene with Hair Conditioner. No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Only Drene with Hair Conditioner reveals up to 33% more lustre than soap . . . yet leaves hair so easy to arrange, so alluringly smooth!

Does your hair look dull, slightly mousy?

No wonder—if you're washing it with cake soap or liquid soap shampoo! Because soap of any sort leaves a soap film which dulls lustre, robs your hair of glamour! Change to Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner! Drene never leaves any dulling film. That's why it reveals up to 33% more lustre!

Does your hair-do require constant fiddling?

Men don't like this business of running a comb through your hair in public! Fix your hair so it stays put! And remember Drene with Hair Conditioner leaves hair wonderfully easy to manage, right after shampooing! No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to arrange!

Sssssshhhhh! But have you dandruff?

Too many girls have! And what a pity. For unsightly dandruff can be easily controlled if you shampoo regularly with Drene. Drene with Hair Conditioner removes every trace of embarrassing dandruff the very first time you use it!

MAKE A DATE WITH Glamour

Tonight . . . don't put it off . . . shampoo your hair the new glamour way! Use Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner! Get the combination of beauty benefits only this wonderful improved shampoo can give! ✓ Extra lustre. . . up to 33% more than with soap or soap shampoos! ✓ Manageable hair . . . easy to comb into smooth shining neatness! ✓ Complete removal of dandruff! Insist on Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner, or ask your beauty shop to use it.

IF YOU "HATE EXERCISE" AND "LOVE TO EAT"—

Here's a New Lazy-Way to REDUCE —Quickly and Safely

10-Day Miracle Diet—Lose 10 Pounds in 10 Days!—and Still Eat 3 Delicious, Satisfying Meals a Day; Not Do a Bit of Extra Exercise!

PARTIAL CONTENTS

Showing HOW This Book Takes Off the Pounds and the Bulges

I. THE SURE WAY TO REDUCE

The "Lazy Way" to Lose Weight. How you can reduce quickly and safely—no exercise, no hunger pangs, no drugs, girdles or gadgets.

How Much Do You Want to Reduce—How Fast? Your choice of diets that reduce you rapidly or gradually, as you wish.

Exercise Is a Practical Joker. Why exercise alone is a poor way to reduce.

No Drugs, No Sweat, No Charge. Why you can ignore costly sweat baths, reducing drugs, dangerous fasting etc.

Counting Calories Isn't Enough. "Galloping calories" that slim you faster.

II. WHY YOU DON'T GET SLIM

Coffee, Tea, Cocoa, Milk, Water, Soft Drinks. How beverages affect weight control—with some surprises!

Cocktail Calories. The strange role of alcohol in building fat.

III. YOU-CRACK DOWN ON CALORIES

How Proteins Help You Get Slim. Reducing without hunger or sacrificing vitality.

The Simple Arithmetic of Reducing. Easy way to get your calorie quota whether you're a housewife, war plant worker, stenographer, etc.

10-Day Miracle Diet. Safe, easy way to lose a pound a day for 10 days. Daily menus.

Heartier Diets. 3 daily diets for losing 10 pounds a month. How to substitute other foods you like better. 2 "STAY Slim" diets.

The Fastest SAFE Slimming Program. Diet safeguards that make speedy weight reduction safe.

Two-Minute Calorie-Counting Table. At-a-glance chart showing kinds of calories in 26 meat dishes, 4 kinds of milk, 13 fish, 10 cheese and egg servings, 41 vegetables, 29 fruits, 19 breads, cereals, 16 pies, pastries, 17 fats, sugars, syrups, 7 nuts, 11 soups, 18 "little things", 15 beverages.

Eat as Often as You Want. Exploding the no-food-between-meals myth and the nothing-but-coffee-for-breakfast error.

IV. YOU COUNT YOUR VITAMINS THE EASY WAY

You Needn't Pay Extra for Vitamins. How to get all you need from foods alone.

Your Daily Vitamin Needs. Complete table showing units of A, B1, C, G, D needed for Adults, Adolescents, Children, Infants, Pregnant Women.

Lightning Vitamin Calculator. Vitamin units in 78 common foods in handy chart.

Cook Them Kindly. 5 simple rules to preserve vitamins in preparing foods.

V. EAT FOR BEAUTY, CHARM AND—YES, REALLY—SEX APPEAL

No Pep, No Joy, No Friends. Is this you? How you can remedy it—at the dinner table!

Gray Hair, Baldness and the Diet. What science has learned about diet effects on hair.

Skin You Love to Touch. How Vitamin A and other elements promote clear, beautiful skin.

Teeth You Love to Brush. Food, for healthy teeth.

Diet Cure for Constipation. "Scare" warnings vs. truth.

VI. EATING FOR "OOMPH"

Food and Glamour. Relation of what you eat to personal appearance, vitality, sex appeal.

Anemia Wins No Love Prizes. Red-blooded "romance" minerals: how to get them.

YES, it's true—this new 10-Day MIRACLE DIET—thanks to latest discoveries in weight control! Now—WHETHER A MAN OR A WOMAN—you can lose 10 pounds in 10 days, 30 pounds or more within 3 months—comfortably, pleasantly, healthfully. WITHOUT strenuous, difficult exercises. WITHOUT dangerous pills or drugs. WITHOUT sweating in steam baths or spending money for massages. WITHOUT suffering the dizziness, nausea, and torture of self-imposed starvation!

You'll eat three delicious, fully-satisfying meals a day, including a big breakfast. You'll be allowed to "snack" between meals. This new scientific lazy-way—described in the fascinating book, "The New Way to Eat and Get Slim," by Donald G. Cooley—brings you a slimmer, more attractive figure, and also greater health and beauty! Your skin becomes smoother, clearer . . . your hair softer, more lustrous . . . your eyes more sparkling. You have more energy, pep, get-up-and-go.

What Is This Amazing Secret?

The whole secret lies in your food—not just how much, but also which kinds. And it isn't (as you may have imagined) merely a matter of "calories." It's the kind of calories that makes the difference! Some foods are high in fat-producing calories. Others are high in energy-producing calories. If you merely cut down the amount of food—without being sure to get more energy-calories than fat-calories—you don't lose weight at all. Your body simply "slows down"—and continues to store fat!

Many people think they know about calories. But do they? Suppose you had to choose between a large glass of orange juice and half a sirloin steak? You would probably reach for the orange juice. Actually, the steak would give you 15 times as many precious ENERGY-calories. Yet the total number of calories in each is roughly the same!

What This Book Can Do For You

Mr. Cooley's book shows you, quickly and clearly, how to apply this simple principle of selecting energy-calories instead of fat-calories. It gives you a "10-Day Miracle Diet" by which you lose a pound a day for 10 days; a diet for losing 10 pounds in 30 days; a "tapering off" diet for losing 8½ pounds in 30 days; and a "Stay-Slim" diet, so that when you reach the right weight, you STAY there.

You don't have to adhere rigidly to these diets, either. The book's Substitution Table gives you dozens of meats, and other foods you may eat instead. The partial contents, on this page, suggests only a few of the ways this book goes about improving your figure, health, appearance, and general disposition.

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

NATIONAL VELVET
IN TECHNICOLOR

This month's column should really be called "The Audiences Roar". In the twenty years that this leonine toastmaster has been introducing films, we have yet to experience an audience reaction like that revealed at the previews of "National Velvet".

★ ★ ★ ★

"National Velvet" is a baby we're proud of—almost proudest of. It is something!

★ ★ ★ ★

The story is as simple as an alphabet. The suspense mounts like Everest. You'll just love it.

★ ★ ★ ★

It's the kinship with the characters that makes it. You just want to see "Velvet" win out.

★ ★ ★ ★

After you've seen it you may stop perfect strangers in the street and say "Have you seen 'National Velvet'?" You may get some dirty looks at first, but after those people have gone to the picture they may come around and thank you.

★ ★ ★ ★

What is it that makes this picture so great? Surely it's not just a horse race—even though the Grand National steeplechase—done as it's done—is a high spot in all entertainment annals.

★ ★ ★ ★

No. It's what's behind every action. It's in the playing—in the direction—in the production.

★ ★ ★ ★

That's why Clarence Brown, the director, has reason to be proud. "National Velvet" is enough to allow anyone to rest on laurels. And that goes for Pandro Berman, the producer.

★ ★ ★ ★

Mickey Rooney, as the trainer of "Pi", gives an acting performance that outranks everything he has ever done on the screen.

★ ★ ★ ★

Dear Us! What superlatives! But we can't help it. We'll have to go even further. Elizabeth Taylor's performance means her discovery.

★ ★ ★ ★

Enid Bagnold's best-selling novel could not have been entrusted to a more excellent supporting cast. Special mention for Donald Crisp, Anne Revere, Angela Lansbury, Jackie Jenkins, Arthur Treacher.

★ ★ ★ ★

England's "green and pleasant land" is so beautiful in Technicolor. And the screen play by Theodore Reeves and Helen Deutsch is exceptionally right.

★ ★ ★ ★

It has greatness—charm—excitement. It has our absolute recommendation—

★ ★ ★ ★

That's "Velvet"! —Leo

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

By FREDDA DUDLEY

THE WINNAHS:

Most coveted press award is the Golden Apple, bestowed each year upon the Most Cooperative Actress and the Most Cooperative Actor by the Hollywood Women's Press Club. Most uncomfortable scowl is also bestowed by this same group of publicists, who point with a long finger at the Least Cooperative Actor and the Least Cooperative Actress.

For 1944, Betty Hutton was given the Golden Apple in the feminine sweepstakes, and Alan Ladd won the gentleman's accolade. At the annual Christmas party given to award the mementos, Betty almost knocked herself out givng forth with song. She sang "The Hard Way"—a honey of a new tune from her latest Paramount picture—"Murder", "My Rocking Horse Ran Away," and a sweetie, "It Had To Be You."

Lucille Ball and Desi cut a cake at Ciro's in celebration of their fourth anniversary.

Alan couldn't appear to claim his Golden Apple Script Holder because he was in Denver on a hospital tour, and considered the fulfilling of his tour commitments, quite properly, a duty that must be done in preference to returning to Hollywood to be fêted.

Cary Grant again officiated as Santa Claus, not only in his bearded capacity as distributor of the grab bag gifts provided by the newshens, but also as host of the party which closed with champagne toasts.

Runners-up in the cooperative department this year were Lucille Ball and Maria Montez, among the actresses; Humphrey Bogart and Gregory Peck, among the males.

Scowl getters among the girls were Veronica Lake, and a tie between Lana Turner and Betty Grable. However, all three of these girls had mended their ways notably before the votes were counted, so this mention may be regarded as a remonstrative tap on the wrist—nothing more.

The uncooperative boys were Errol (perpetual candidate) Flynn, who just doesn't care what anyone thinks about him anyway, and Fred MacMurray, who honestly feels that he is of no interest to his public except on the screen. He believes, erroneously, that he is "poor copy"—a mistaken notion.

BUSY BIRD:

The stork is getting around much faster these days than your gossip columnist's typewriter can record, to wit:

Rebecca Welles is now blissfully installed in her bassinet at the home of Rita and Orson Welles. She checked in at 7 pounds by Caesarian section, and her proud father announced that she was the first bit of magic he had ever seen that he really believed. Incidentally, Orson and Rita were gaily dining at La Rue the night before Miss Rebecca checked in.

Stephen Todd Andrews is the newcomer in the Dana Andrews home. His parents had first considered naming him Dana Todd Andrews, but desisted because his initials would have been D.T.

If you saw "Maizie Goes To Reno," you became acquainted with Ann Sothern's Scottie, a quaint character who looked upon the Sterling household as a domain supremely her own. Then came that small pink bundle from the hospital. The bundle had been anticipated in blue blankets because Ann had been positive that her junior was to be a boy—so sure, in fact, that she had the nursery done in blue and ordered all bits of embroidery and ribbon on the infant's layette to be blue. It was agreed between Ann and Bob that Ann was to name the boy; but, if by some chance the newcomer should be a girl, Bob was to name her. So, exercising his right, the delighted dad titled his daughter Patricia Ann. As far as the Scottie is concerned, however, her name is mud. The efforts of the household are currently devoted to assuring the Scottie that she is still a beloved and welcome member of the family, but she just mopes in her basket and howls every time Patty Ann cries.

ing to friends about his future. Someone asked him if he had developed a romance of serious stature while roaming the country in khaki. He said thoughtfully, that he had met some interesting, glamorous, worthwhile girls, but that he had experienced no cardiac combustion. He said it wasn't going to be easy for him to select a second wife. He wanted a girl who loved children, because he had to consider the welfare of his beloved Julie. Then, too, he had an ideal. He wanted his wife to be intelligent, but humorous; glamorous, but sensible; ambitious, but sweet. He said that combination was as rare as the sight of the planet Venus perched on the prow of the new moon. Then, in December, Venus did exactly that, and John had found his girl—one who fits the specifications.

As a frightened old predictor, your columnist will extend her neck to here and say that Anne Baxter and John Hodiak will be married by the time you read this, or shortly thereafter.

One of the handsomest couples in town is the Dick Crane pair. Bride is Kay Morley (Elaine de Vinna), whose career is now being supervised by her husband. Married November 14, they had planned to keep it secret, but Dick was asked to attend a studio party (alone, as it was presumed that he was single, and a single man in Hollywood is more precious than jade nowadays) and he grew lonesome for his bride. After he had made seven trips to the telephone in two hours, someone grew suspicious and demanded an explanation. Dick tossed the secret on the cutting room floor, and began to unreel a description of his Kay that made the Taj Mahal sound like a wood shed.

June Horne decided to give up pictures and return to Great Lakes to make a home for her new husband, Jackie Cooper.

FAMILY MATTER:

Over a year ago Faye Emerson wandered into the Warner Brothers Publicity Department to while away a spare twenty minutes. In one office she found a convivial group discussing the merits of relatives, both pro and with arsenic.

She said wistfully, when there was a bit of idle air available, "I've never had much family—no brothers and sisters. Although I do have a half-sister somewhere in the world." She explained the circumstances of their separation, where she had last seen her sister, and voiced a wish that the sister could be found.

An enterprising publicist, seeing in this nostalgic incident the making of a great story, wrote it up and placed it with a magazine. The magazine was read by Miss Emerson's half-sister, who got in touch with the star. Faye, overjoyed, sent her sister a round-trip ticket to visit Hollywood. It was a great occasion. But the sister didn't like California. Her roots were in the East—as well as the man she loved—so she returned, leaving Miss Emerson as family-less as ever.

However, Miss Emerson had met—at a Beverly Hills party—a man whose family is noted, among other things, for being voluminous. Himself one of five children, his own children plus his nieces and nephews now number sufficient force for a football team with strong reinforcements.

So, when Faye Emerson married Elliott Roosevelt on December 3, 1944, she realized not only the ambition of every girl to take a handsome, charming and highly-placed husband, but a very personal ambition to become a member of a large family.

How to describe TAMPAX to a friend

AMONG your friends one or two may still have vague ideas or wrong ideas about Tampax. You will be doing them a kindness by explaining the real facts about this internal method of monthly sanitary protection.

BEGIN BY TELLING your friend how Tampax banishes pins, belts and external pads—how odor cannot form and sanitary deodorant is not needed.

ALSO EXPLAIN how Tampax can cause no bulges or ridges under any costume—how it is really invisible in use and can even be worn in a tub or shower.

THEN SHOW HER WHY Tampax brings about all these improvements—its invention by a doctor, its internal absorption principle, its all-cotton construction, its tremendous absorbency, its patented applicator that makes insertion so quick and easy.

SEND HER OUT TO BUY Tampax at a drug store or notion counter, where it is sold in 3 absorbency-sizes—Regular, Super and Junior. A whole month's supply will slip into her purse, while the Economy Box contains 4 months' average requirements. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

to know that the service was read in the great hall of El Tovar, luxurious Inn on the rim of Grand Canyon. Faye wore a blue doeskin tailored suit, a mink bandeau-hat, carried a mink muff and wore matching brown suede shoes. Her engagement ring was a platinum band set with three diamonds, and her wedding ring matched that of her husband—a plain gold circlet. Her corsage was white orchids, and the first person to wish her happiness by long distance telephone was her small son, Billy, the child of Faye's first husband, William W. Crawford, Jr.

During the week before their marriage, Faye and Colonel Roosevelt entertained his three children on the set at Warner Brothers and at the Mocambo. They had the time of their lives.

So, at last, Faye Emerson has her heart's desire: a big family.

HORRORS OF WAR:

Betty Hutton rode C-54's over the perilous Pacific. She scorched over coral roads in jeeps, and leapt into fox holes with an agility unmatched in the Marine Corps. After eight weeks of hazards ranging from Jap bombs to malaria, she returned safely to her home in Hollywood, tried to open the bedroom window, crashed through the pane and had to spend a week in bandages.

PHILOSOPHY:

Esther Williams, who—in 1938—won every American woman's free-style swimming title, was recently listening to a discussion of the work of a fellow actress. One of the men at the luncheon table said, acidly, "I've never seen such a pitiable display of ineptitude. After all the dramatic coaching Miss Blank has had, I don't see how she could fail so miserably."

Esther Williams lifted a soft voice. "I've trained for athletic events and competed since I was eight years old, so I've learned what it takes in preparation, in sacrifice, in desperate effort to turn any performance. As long as I live I'll never criticize any honest effort, because I know how much it costs to be no more than the last contestant in a race."

SOLE INTEREST:

Miss Cheryl Crane is getting to be a big girl now. She trots around wherever her intense young curiosity invites her; she says "Mommy," "Daddy," "Yes," "No," and "Shoe." The latter is the name of her current hobby and her most interesting specimens of this hobby are to be found in her mother's shoe closet. Cherry goes to this closet each morning, carefully selects a fascinating pair of slippers, stows one beneath each arm and carries them around all day, as her contemporaries are now carrying dolls. At night she tucks the shoes back into their compartment with cooing sounds ordinarily used to put toys to bed. Lana isn't quite sure what this odd preoccupation indicates—perhaps she is going to grow up to be a ballet dancer, or she may only have a liking for modern music such as Shoe-Shoe, Baby.

BIG TIME:

When Jack Carson and one of his best friends, Dave Willock, who used to work with Jack in vaudeville, went to San Francisco to entertain on the Purple Heart Circuit, they stayed at a theatrical boarding house which they had known well and patronized in the old five-a-day era.

The landlady was the same. She greeted the boys with open arms, exclaimed over their long absence and invited them into the living room for a long theatrical chat. "What

Movieland's NEW

HANGOVER SQUARE (20th Century-Fox) From the novel by Patrick Hamilton, author of "Angel Street" and other spine-chillers, the film version of "Hangover Square" is guaranteed to send you home looking over your shoulder. In his last performance, the late Laird Cregar gave an outstanding portrayal of the composer who suffers lapses of memory, and during these periods, commits brutal murders. Linda Darnell is the dance hall girl who uses her beauty as bait to attract men who can help her. George Sanders is the Scotland Yard detective who solves the mystery. It may sound like the "old horror story" plot, but this one is a true tale of terror. and excellently done.

COLONEL BLIMP (United Artists release) First in a series of new films imported from England, and rating as one of the best "stories about war" to come out of the war thus far. Photographed in Technicolor, starring names which bid for becoming quickly familiar and popular in this country, as well as in England—Roger Livesey (as the Col.) Deborah Kerr, Anton Walbrook, Frith Banbury, and Jane Millican, to mention but a few in this cast of many.

The story traces the career of a British "brass hat", introducing him first as a young officer returned a hero from the Boer War, catching up with him again in World War I, and showing him as the Colonel Blimp of cartoon fame, retired from active duty but serving at the head of the Home Guard forces in World War II.

Deft handling of the script and skillful direction combine to make this picture a brilliant satire, run through with comedy situations that are at times broad humor, and again, subtle mockery. Still, the impact of the message is real, and for being a story of wars and warriors, it's as all-inclusive as Noel Coward's "Cavalcade."

BELLE OF THE YUKON (International, released by RKO) is noteworthy because: it has Dinah Shore and Gypsy Rose Lee. Dinah sings, and it's a comeback awaited, with interest and enthusiasm, for The Rose, who made a stab at Hollywood a few years ago in the name of Louise Hovick. Both Dinah and Gypsy add zest and excuse to what would otherwise have been just another movie about just another dance hall owner (Randolph Scott) with an eye for the ladies and a knack for nefarious money schemes. If intended as satire and mock-Western, the joke isn't always funny and suggests, instead, the floundering of pretty thin melodrama. With Charles Winninger, Bob Burns, Florence Bates, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, William Marshall and Robert Armstrong.

DELIGHTFULLY DANGEROUS (United Artists) brings Jane Powell back to the screen for the second time (she made her debut in "Song of the Open Road"), and her amazing voice is accompanied this time by Morton Gould's orchestra. It's a light tale about a youngster with a sister (Constance Moore) in burlesque, and the child's efforts to be a success so that her sister won't have to work.

MANHUNT OF MYSTERY ISLAND (Republic) gives you 15 chapters of "chills and thrills." This serial has the usual "reliables"—secret weapons, death chambers, kidnapping—all calculated to get you to your local theatre "next week."

TONIGHT AND EVERY NIGHT (Columbia) brings Rita Hayworth in another musical, a riot of color and entertainment. She portrays one of many chorus girls at a London theatre entertaining our troops. When a magazine photographer comes to take pictures, he is told that the girls never missed a show during the bombings. The story then flashes back to tell of the romance of American fliers with the girls, the bombings and their consequences, the courage of the performers. The plot is supported by tuneful music, beautiful and bizarre settings, and excellent dancing. Lee Bowman, Janet Blair and Ross Hunter add to the cast, and Rita herself was never lovelier.

YOU'RE only young once? It's not necessarily so! Trouble is, the under-thirty age is apt to be the careless age. If (perish the thought) you've been saying "It can't happen here," consider the example of Rhonda Fleming, featured in David O. Selznick's "Spellbound."

Rhonda, at the tender age of twenty-one has decided not that the years "can't" but won't catch her off guard. Health is the cornerstone of glowing good looks. For the sparkle that has stamina, Rhonda depends on sufficient sleep, a well-balanced diet and plenty of exercise.

Next to health comes habit—the consistent daily attention that adds up to good grooming. That wealth of Fleming mahogany hair stays at the peak of its shining perfection with vigorous brushwork and efficient shampoos. Rhonda doesn't worry about sallow skin or enlarged pores. Instead, she staves them off with frequent soap-and-water washings followed by icy rinses or a mild astringent. Her anti-wrinkle campaign includes mid-day cream cleansings and overnight lubrication. Her rich, dry skin cream does double duty around the delicate eye areas and the extra-sensitive throat skin.

So much prevention takes so little time—and does so much to hold back the toll of time!

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

AT UNIVERSAL:

EASY TO LOOK AT will also be easy to listen to, because Gloria Jean sings to Kirby Grant. Is that bad?

BLONDE RANSOM stars Donald Cook (whose bit with Paul Henreid in HOLLYWOOD CANTEEN proves what a handsome indie he still is), Virginia Grey, and George Barbier.

THAT'S THE SPIRIT is keeping Peggy Ryan busy with Jack Oakie, Buster Keaton, Johnny Coy (the dancing genius who is one day going to be as famous as Astaire), and Gene Lockhart.

AT WARNERS:

THE BIG SLEEP is the Bogart-Bacall excitement with John Ridgely, Regis Toomey, and Theodore von Eltz. Mr. Bogart and Miss Bacall have been dancing at various night clubs between the Bogarts' "reconciliations."

HOTEL BERLIN is the scarey with Raymond Massey, Helmut Dantine, Faye Emerson, Peter Lorre, and Alan Hale.

THIS LOVE OF OURS involves John Garfield, Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark, and John Ridgely who will have to see a priority board about a bicycle if Warners continue to use him in two pictures at once.

MILDRED PIERCE is the picture you must make room for on your 1945 calendar. This will give Joan Crawford one of the best pictures of her career and will undoubtedly re-establish her as one of Hollywood's greatest actresses. Jack Carson is to play her sincere, pathetic husband. Zachary Scott is the wolf, and Ann Blyth is the singing daughter with the soul of a man-eating shark.

AT COLUMBIA:

A THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS, in Technicolor, stars Cornel Wilde and Evelyn Keyes. To judge from advance notices on Wilde's performance in "A Song To Remember," this picture should establish him as a top drawer name in Hollywood.

ESCAPE IN THE FOG is an edge-of-the-seater with Nina Foch and Otto Kruger.

THE POWER OF THE WHISTLER is a newie in the series with Richard Dix and Janis Carter.

ROCKIN' IN THE ROCKIES is a hoss opera with Mary Beth Hughes, Tim Ryan, and piles of granite.

THE FIGHTING GUARDSMAN has John Loder and Anita Louise at work. John was recently laughing over the titles of his recent pictures. Previous to his guardsman duties, John was in "The Brighton Strangler" for RKO, and before that he was prominent in "The Hairy Ape."

WE NOMINATE FOR STARDOM

PETER LAWFORD

BECAUSE his success, at 21, is a combination of talent, experience, and great good luck . . . BECAUSE his work in "Mrs. Miniver," "White Cliffs of Dover," and "Mrs. Parkington" has given him a solid backlog of good performances and speaks well for his future . . . BECAUSE he will be seen in bigger and better roles in "Son of Lassie" and "The Picture of Dorian Gray," which proves that MGM is thinking seriously about him . . . BECAUSE his charm and humor have captivated the femmes.

BING CROSBY, who started out as a crooning playboy and developed into one of Hollywood's most solid citizens, has arrived at the top of the cinematic ladder—which is to say, he has become a producer, than which there is nothing whicher.

However, anybody who expects Bing to be the traditional type of producer, full of temperament and ulcers, is due for disappointment. He's long been noted for his relaxed and rhythmic style of working, and there's nothing to indicate he's going to change. He makes all decisions with a minimum of fuss and feathers that never ceases to astound the hyper-thyroid citizens in that city of organized confusion.

Nobody knows how long the idea of producing pictures independently has been simmering in the back of his head. It's a safe bet that it's in the back of every actor's head at some time or other. The distinctive thing about Crosby is that he keeps his ideas to himself till he's ready to act on them, and then he acts. That's how he avoids the prodigal waste of time and energy for which Hollywood is so famous.

The old Groaner has always had many extra-curricular activities, outside his movie and radio work. Some of these are well-known, such as his devotion to horse-racing and golf. Others, less well-known, are on the commercial or even philanthropic side, including an interest in a Pasadena steel foundry, and the Crosby Laboratory, which Bing and his brothers founded to help inventors perfect and market their ideas.

On a Friday night, you'll generally find Bing in a ringside seat at the American Legion Stadium; so it's not surprising that for his first production, he chose the story of John L. Sullivan, one of the most fabulous characters in prize fighting history. It came about so naturally that you might even say the story chose him.

To begin at the beginning, Frank Mastroly, who was a sports writer in New York more than twenty years ago, and who later wrote for King Features under Frank Menke, got the idea some time back that Sullivan's life was material for a bang-up good screenplay. After coming to Hollywood, he still thought so, but never got around to doing anything about it.

One day he mentioned the idea to his friend, James Edward Grant, former Chicago reporter, now a writer of lusty Hollywood scenarios ("Boom Town" and "Johnny Eager," among his best). Grant liked the (Continued on page 57)

BELL IN TWEEDS

Dorothy McGuire, whom you have already seen in "Claudia," and whose next two pictures are "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn" for 20th Century-Fox and "The Enchanted Cottage" for RKO, was talking about her romance with her husband, John Swope.

She met John, with his brother, backstage during the New York run of "Claudia." She noticed his brother; noticed him to the extent of thinking him most attractive, interesting, and worthy of future dates. This was in February, 1943. But the play went on tour, and then Miss McGuire was tagged by Hollywood for a film version of "Claudia."

One day on the set the telephone rang and a pleasant masculine voice introduced the speaker as John Swope, remember? He had met Miss McGuire in New York. . . .

Of course Miss McGuire remembered. She bit her tongue in time to forestall the question, "And how is your brother?" Him, she remembered in the foreground, with his brother as a pleasant but shadowy background. She agreed to have dinner with Mr. Swope, who had come up to Hollywood on brief leave from Thunderbird Field in Arizona, where he was a civilian flying instructor. It was April. The weather was urbane, the moon was full and free of fog. With such a benign beginning, it is not surprising that, within a few months of sincere effort, Mr. Swope had established himself as No. 1 on the Smit Parade. Miss McGuire was as definitely (Continued on page 86) in the water or on the beach. The kids I played with were like myself, interested in sailing. One summer we built a boat all by ourselves, warping our own lumber, carefully shaping and fitting each piece, conducting every operation as we had seen experts do it. The result turned out to be quite a boat, and for some time I could think of no occupation so absorbing as boat-building.

My hopes of becoming an Olympic champion were wrecked when I received a spinal injury.

A doctor . . . I went to college to take a pre-medical course. I still like the idea of being a doctor, but the courses offered were to me tedious and dull. I found them so boring I gave up my medical ambition, floundered around for a year trying to find out what I was fitted for, and then—

I WAS INVITED

To do a part in a college play. Up to that time, I had rather looked down on actors. Men with make-up on their faces! I hadn't troubled to discover what intrigued them about acting. But once I had tried the stage and found it absorbing, I knew I had the career I'd been looking for.

I LIKE

Thomas Wolfe's novels, Grieg, rare steak, the color red, my pipe, songs of the sea, jazz.

I DON'T LIKE

Squash, hillbilly music, exaggerated lipstick, show-offs or people who talk in the theater.

I REMEMBER

A pair of high button shoes my grandmother gave me as a surprise when I was in grade school. None of the other kids wore such shoes. I suffered agonies. I used to hide my feet as much as possible, and the only thing I noticed about a schoolmate was his footgear. My grandmother had meant to please me, so I couldn't let her know how I hated those shoes. I wore them for what seemed years—until they were completely worn out.

I'LL NEVER FORGET

How thrilled I was when my father, after broad hints, bought me a pair of

"KEEPING BOOKS" ON MY CAREER

BY

Barbara Stanwyck

As told to

HELEN LOUISE WALKER

Barbara Stanwyck doesn't pretend to be a crack businesswoman. She has as much trouble balancing her bank book, keeping track of red and blue points at the market, and making out her income tax as you and me. But she does have an "elephant memory", and in it she's stored away dozens of items, tabulated mentally as assets and liabilities to her career and her happiness.

Barbara Stanwyck tells in her own words how she's moved some of her liabilities over to the credit side of the ledger, and how she's learned to deal with those left as debits.

DEBITS . . . . LIABILITIES

DATE ITEMS DEBITS

1. My black Irish "moods." Only a person who has experienced these can understand what they are. It's as if a suffocating cloud of gloom enveloped you, as if you were in a dark mental prison and couldn't see the sunshine. Other people, no matter how much they love you and want to help you, can't get to you, even though you reach vaguely and helplessly toward them. You can only wait for the cloud to lift.

I call this a particularly ugly liability, a real debit, because it is so easy to make a wrong impression—to lose a friend or even an opportunity. When I was working in "Annie Oakley," years ago, Fred Stone brought his brother-in-law, the distinguished author, Rex Beach, on the set to meet me. I had admired Mr. Beach for years and wanted to meet him. Unfortunately, I was in one of my dark moods that day, but I thought I had it under control. Afterwards, when I told Fred what a privilege I felt it had been to meet and talk with Mr. Beach, he said drily, "Well, one would never have known you felt that way! Rex went away feeling that you had been bored with him and his presence on the set had been much, much less than welcome!"

I had lost an opportunity which I valued very much. The only thing I know now to do about these moods is to stay away from friends and business associates. I walk . . . and walk . . . and walk, trying to wear them out. It is not only the danger of being misunderstood which makes these things a liability, it is the loss of precious, God-given time when I might be enjoying other people and accomplishing something. It is sheer waste.

2. My supersensitiveness. I used to carry my heart on my sleeve and a good sized chip on my shoulder. Someone told me to blame it on my "sign of the Zodiac" and for awhile I had a fine time, excusing myself and blaming the stars! But I found that alibis wouldn't do. Came the time when Bob and I were invited to a very special party. I simply outdid myself with a new frock, with "the works" at the beauty shop, and I told myself I wasn't bad! But Bob didn't notice a thing! I seethed.

When we arrived at the party, I made every effort to be the life, if not the belle, of the ball! I chattered and preened myself and smiled like crazy. I was getting along all right, too, but not actually enjoying myself too much, when I caught Bob's eye across the room. He grinned and gave me a very special, wicked wink, as if to say, "Havin' fun, Babe?"

Suddenly everything was fine. I felt a little silly, but I felt good, too. Once I would have been utterly dejected if Bob had failed to notice my appearance for a special occasion. I'd have asked myself the torturing questions, "Doesn't he care any more? Has he lost interest?" But now I knew that it didn't matter whether he said anything or not. We were aware of one another, we were together, even across a huge roomful of people. That particular debit would never bother me again!

3. My inability to "put on an act." This sounds like a funny one, but it has always seemed a definite liability to me that I, who aspire to be an actress, can't assume a

CREDITS . . . . ASSETS

DATE ITEMS CREDITS

1. Two friendships. Two wonderful assets at the very outset of my career were the friendships and incredible kindnesses of two men—Billy La Hiff, of the Tavern (a night club in New York) and Mr. Willard Mack, the playwright-producer. Billy used to stake chorines when they were down on their luck. He did it with utter tact and quiet kindliness. Among the chorines he helped was Stanwyck—when I was discouraged and short of "eating money," but wild with ambition to get into a Broadway play. It was practical help combined with the assurance that he believed I had what it took. It was an immeasurable help.

Willard Mack gave me my first role in a play called "The Noose." He rewrote the part to fit me after he had seen my tryout. He even gave me my name. I've told again and again how he changed Ruby Stevens to Barbara Stanwyck by combining two names on a convenient billboard.

The friendships of those two men were the most wonderful assets I could have had. Their kindness put me under an eternal obligation to help other struggling artists. It is the only way I can possibly repay Billy La Hiff and Willard Mack for what they did for me!

2. Lack of Education. I know it sounds funny to classify that as an asset, and it certainly wasn't in the beginning. It was a debit which I managed to turn into a credit, so it goes on the other side of the book. I was a poor child, grew up in a poor neighborhood and went to work very early. Fortunately, I was conscious of my lack of book knowledge. I was humiliated by it.

There was the time, when I was in the chorus, that I remarked, ruefully, "Guess I'll have to invest in a new pair of shoes. These are just plain dilapitated!" One of the girls sneered at me. "I think you mean 'Dilapidated'," she corrected. My temper rose. "I don't! I mean dilapi*tated*!" I insisted. "These are very special shoes!"

But it hurt. I had to tell myself again and again that lack of education was not like the lack of an arm. You could get an education if you wanted it badly enough and tried hard enough. What was more, I told myself (and I still do!) you have more appreciation of more alertness about the things you read and learn yourself, than you do about the things just handed you in easy-to-take capsules while you are young.

I read a great deal now, but I never take any book for granted. I am always supremely grateful to the person who wrote it, grateful for the privilege of being allowed to read it and especially grateful for the heightened perception I developed through having to find out about these things for myself.

3. I learned to trust the right people. Today I have sense enough, I hope, to trust anyone who is an expert in his line, whether he's a photographer, a costume designer, a business manager or a lawyer. Until I learned some lessons, the hard way, I had very definite opinions about how everything should be done. Several years ago, in a court case, I asserted myself and went against the advice of the expert I was paying to advise me. I found out right then how valuable expert advice is on any problem!

By JOAN MICHAELS

One of "dem bums", Dane Clark footballed his way through law school, then literally dug ditches to Broadway and Hollywood success

DANE CLARK'S guardian angel gave up the ghost the night he was born, and he's had to fight his own battles ever since. He's a guy who can smell a challenge coming a mile off and then go to meet it halfway, rolling up his shirt sleeves as he goes. He's always done it—and if the self-made man appellation didn't smack so soundly of things political, we'd use it here.

Dane laughs about it now. "Sure," he says, "I always get everything I want out of life—as long as I break my back to get it!"

In Brooklyn, when he was little Bernie Zanville, he made up his mind to become a lawyer. But Cornell University and St. John's Law School, both of which he selected personally, had certain requirements to be met—including specified amounts of coin of the realm.

In Dane's flattened condition, this was a definite challenge, but he met it by cinching in his belt and becoming a professional football player. After a while he added baseball to his accomplishments. Then boxing. When he finally got the money together and shoved it across the college till, he entered the halls of learning, proudly waving his battle scars and Charley horses like a school pennant.

There he crammed and pored over weighty tomes. He grew hoarse with his imaginary jury pleas. But he graduated, literally drunk with knowledge and the prospects of his future as a full-fledged lawyer.

Clutching his sheepskin, he made tracks for the law firm that had promised him a shiny new desk and a reliable, though inconspicuous, place to hang his shingle.

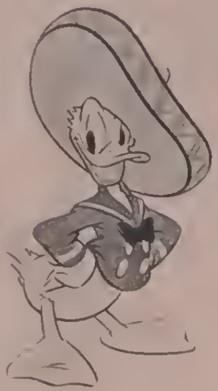
But Dane, being young and full of dreams, reckoned without this year of depression vintage. Firms were firing, not hiring, and somehow Dane's shiny desk transferred hands overnight to become a haven for the senior partner's nephew.

Dane took his shingle home for kindling.

His new-found gauntness didn't complement his unique brand of good looks, so he resumed his three squares a day by wielding a shovel in a local ditch. The fresh air, the weekly paycheck, and the twenty-minutes-for-lunch fattened him up a little, and before long he began varying his dig-that routine with boxing. He became sparring partner for a slap-happy pug at a training farm just outside of town.

About this time Dane saw his first play. But his initial contact (Continued on page 83)

"THE THREE CABALLEROS"



VIVA "The Three Caballeros!" This is the movie everyone wanted Walt Disney to make. This is the revolutionary technical achievement that will make film history, with animated characters appearing on the same screen with real life personalities. It must be seen to be believed, but it may mark a moment for the industry as historic as Edison's first experiment with the "shadow box."

Like all Disney films, it's more than a movie. It is an experience. A story; a reappearance of old friends like Donald Duck, and new friends like Jose Carioca, and Panchito (a Mexican charro rooster) and the flying donkey; novel experiments with design and color—pure "impressionism"; and real life senoritas—Latin America's top musical comedy stars. There are moments everyone will cherish. There are song hits composed by Augustin Lara, Ary Barosa and Manuel Esperon. Truly, this picture is an accomplishment—a fusion of all the known mediums of art and expression.

How sensational can a girl get! In racing circles, they'd call it "picking a longshot"; Hollywood calls it—Bacall!

"HOW LITTLE WE KNOW" . . .

A GIRL like Lauren Bacall comes along—long-legged, tawny-haired, all the right curves in all the right places . . . she doesn't diet, has no mysterious beauty secrets, and isn't particularly interested in sports, she's not beautiful in the usual sense—but she's arresting, photogenic, has the sort of face that attracts attention and stays remembered.

And what it all adds up to is a dark-horse movie entry who "caught on," and fast! One picture—her first ("To Have and Have Not" with Humphrey Bogart) and the brothers Warner didn't have to read notices, or consult the three wise men of the East, to know that a new star had been born.

But would you believe it? It wasn't so very long ago . . . the scene was the St. James Theater in New York . . . the girl, this same Lauren (then Betty) Bacall. She was an usherette. George Jean Nathan, dean of drama critics, was at the theater one night with his friend—the friend being a fellow by the name of Bill Saroyan. (Oh yes, you must have heard of him!) "Pretty girl," observed Nathan. "Right," confirmed Saroyan. "Suppose there's a

WHAT would YOU do, to get into the movies? Rather, what wouldn't you do?

Sometimes it takes tricks to get into pix. That's why a number of the best players on the screen are there—because their wits were quicker than the casting-director's. They had the ability; what they needed was the chance. And they took it.

Consider Alexis Smith. Time was when that was more than the movie industry would do. "Can you do ballet dancing?" a director inquired at last. It was her first hint at a break. "Of course!" Alexis cried eagerly, because by then she'd grown so used to answering "of course" when they asked if she could sing or swim, both of which feats were among her accomplishments. Before you could say Ernst Lubitsch, Alexis had been hired for a ballet role, with orders to report in a week.

She began to explain. Then stopped. After all, how did she know she couldn't do ballet? She'd never tried. That next week she (Continued on page 59)

SUB-SIXTEEN

Born in London, of an English father and an American mother, Elizabeth Taylor came to this country with her family just shortly before England declared war. How did she get into pictures, having had no idea of becoming an actress—taking, rather, after her father (who has an art gallery now in Beverly Hills) and liking to draw and paint? It all started with "Lassie Come Home"—a hurried call to the studio, five minutes to study the script, ten minutes to make the screen test, and she was in. When "Lassie" was finished Elizabeth concluded that acting "is fun," and set her heart on playing the role of Velvet in "National Velvet." She was tested for it—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer casting directors had been testing for nine years, trying to find the right heroine for the English steeplechase story. Was this child what they'd been waiting and searching for—was she the one? She loved horses, had been riding since she was three years old, and still spoke with a trace of a British accent. But alas, she was too small. A year later, though—a year during which Elizabeth sacrificed all else to a "growing campaign," eating and sleeping at every opportunity—she had added a full five inches. And that did it! An actress only a year and she's a star—not just by luck, but because she deserves to be. She has what it takes.

n "National Velvet" (with Mickey Rooney) Elizabeth stands in the path of a charging orse, waves him to a halt. She refused a double, insisted on doing the scene herself.

She owns three dogs, two horses, and two kittens; wants some day to live on a ranch.

A Brand-NEW delightful dimension is added to motion picture entertainment!

Imagine, for the first time on any screen—Donald Duck and company romping, singing, dancing and especially romancing with live and lovely senoritas in the same scenes! It's the kind of "seeing-is-believing" magic only Disney can bring you —and wonderful!

Your Problem and Mine

Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve that problem for you. Write her at Movieland Magazine, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am engaged to a very wonderful boy who went all through high school with me, but my parents object to our getting married just because his brother has a prison record.

I know this is an awful thing, but I can not see how it can influence our lives, or why it should make any difference to me or to my parents.

Do you think they are right?

Sincerely,
Alice H.

Dear Alice:

No, I certainly do not think one's life should be influenced by another's errors. If you love this boy and know him to be a fine, upstanding person who commands respect, there is no reason why your happiness should suffer because of his brother's disgrace.

It is all part of the wonderful freedom which we enjoy in this country of ours, that a person has the right to pursue happiness on his own merit, without the help or hindrance of others. If you are sure of your choice within your heart, then your path seems clear to me.

Best wishes.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I went with a boy the same age as me, eighteen, for nearly a year, but now he never comes to see me. He told me the last time I saw him that he still loves me, but I have found out that his mother does not approve of me. I have been broken-hearted over him, for I know he still loves me, but he listens to his mother, and she has turned him against me.

What should I do? I have not gone out with any other boys, but now I wonder if I shouldn't start dating again, since it seems that he has made up his mind about me.

Yours,
Ruth T.

Dear Ruth:

Under the circumstances, I definitely agree that you should start going with other boys and take renewed interest in your old friends. Only in this way will you be able to forget this boy, and gradually you will come to realize that if he is the kind of person who is so influenced by others, perhaps he is not the right person for you anyway.

Try this method, and see if you have a different outlook six months from now.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I graduated from high school this summer. My problem is that I have always wanted to become an actress, so I would like to get some kind of dramatic training, but my parents want me to get a Teacher's Degree.

What do you think I should do?

Ellen W.

Dear Ellen:

Why not settle this problem by a happy compromise with your parents?

You can start college, enroll in the Teacher's Course, and still undoubtedly enroll in the local dramatics courses and clubs on campus. In this fashion, you will be satisfying your parents by grounding yourself for the future with a credential, and still you will have ample opportunity to try your hand at acting, and study dramatics.

Good luck to you.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

Having been a victim of infantile paralysis as a child, I still wear a leg brace. This handicap stands in my way toward making friends, and since I am nearly twenty, I would like to have some boy interested in me, but I naturally have a terrific inferiority complex when around people.

How can you suggest that I overcome this mental handicap and make my life a happier one?

Susan McK

Dear Susan:

Your attitude as shown in your letter is certainly commendable, and I can not help but feel that you will solve your own problem, and well.

I suggest that you engage yourself in as many outside activities as possible, church groups, war relief work, etc., in brief, all kinds of activity that necessitates your mingling with diverse groups of people. In this way, you not only will overcome any self-conscious feeling you may possess, but, more important yet, you will put others at ease around you.

A person is only shy of another's physical handicap when he feels there is also a mental barrier. By convincing your friends that such a barrier does not exist, you place yourself on an equal level with them, and there is no reason why you will not be able to pick and choose friends as you wish.

Try and maintain your cheerful nature and sense of humor as much as possible, all the while remembering that thousands of returning soldiers are experiencing the same problem.

My best wishes to you.

RIGHT GUY

It was a two-year wait, but he made it! Dick Jaeckel, alias Chicken, late of Hollywood, now a Merchant Marine. He's a regular fellow, a credit to his uniform

By FREDDA DUDLEY

THE first fact that one must face in discussing this rugged character, Richard Hanley (Jake) Jaeckel, is that much which he has told about himself is pure fable. He has an Insidious Secret that he strives manfully to hide. He has a Lurid Past that he is eager to ignore.

The truth is that he was born with a (hush, hush) silver spoon—if not in his mouth, at least safely stored in a commodious family silver chest. His formative years were spent, not in sackcloth, but in plush. His family, let us face it, was social.

These frightening facts are skeletons that Dick would rather not rattle. When asked at 20th Century-Fox about his birthplace, he said "Long Beach, New York." Dick was really born on a Long Island estate.

Dick gives the impression, whenever possible, that he belongs to the great American newspaper tradition . . . selling dailies by the penny on a blizzard swept corner. Actually, he was taken to France and covered the swank Mediterranean circuit with his sleek, beautiful, soignée mother until he was about eight years old.

Most deadly secret of all is that Dick first learned to speak French, can still spout it like a native although he would probably die of hunger before he would admit same, and eventually learned his English with a French accent. Having returned to America by that time it required just seven violent fights for Dick to convince his contemporaries that an accent in no way inhibited masculinity, and to convince Dick that he wasn't going to say ANYTHING until it sounded strictly from Brooklyn.

It was probably this bitter young experience that persuaded Jake that, to be respectable, one must be slightly frayed at the seams, somewhat wobbly in the wallet.

As he was growing up his mother would gladly have awarded him a munificent allowance, but he accepted 50c per week until he was informed by contemporaries that they were getting $2.00; whereupon he petitioned for a raise, feeling right about the whole thing.

He never missed an opportunity to turn an honest penny over and above his allowance. One November, Mrs. Jaeckel was thrown from her horse and sustained a broken back. For weeks she (Continued on page 53)

FIVE BEST PICTURES OF THE MONTH

COMES a time, we suppose, in every movie critic's life, when there's a picture which can't be classified. Yes, it is a musical; but it does have a plot, and the music is more symphonic than syncopated—Tchaikowsky, Chopin, Lizst, Grieg.

Which indicates that there's an orchestra—which there is. And a peep at what the story's all about discloses June Allyson as a winsome but plucky bass-fiddler whose husband is "missing in action," just when he's about to become a father. Margaret O'Brien figures in this heart-tugging drama of life and problems on the home front, as June's small sister; the little girl with a big Faith, and a trust in the Almighty as big as her little girl heart. In addition to his talent for music, Jose Iturbi comes to the fore as an actor. (We might even go further, and express it in terms related to his piano: applause for his acting should not be kept pianissimo.) Jimmy Durante adds more than his comical usual, which is always good; and Marsha Hunt, Marie Wilson, Hugh Herbert and Larry Adler fill out the bill, with honors due and collected.

The picture is Grade A for appeal to anyone seeking good music outside a big city concert hall—and it doesn't seem amiss to toss in a hunch that "Music for Millions" will make converts of many who've not had such a taste, or for some reason been reluctant to recognize it.

MUSIC FOR MILLIONS
M-G-M

BRING ON THE GIRLS
Paramount

FUN-LOVERS, this is it! Eddie Bracken, Veronica Lake and Sonny Tufts in a wacky Technicolorful comedy about a millionaire sailor, his guardian pal, and a gal who gets herself engaged to both. Set that to music, spread it over a series of lavish Florida sets running the gamut from splendiferous hotels, to glorified night clubs and dream-scene swimming pools; add a dash of humor-with-pathos, and without; and glamorize it with lovely Marjorie Reynolds who comes up singing and dancing, and being prettier than you've ever seen her.

Maybe it has no more "book" than most musicals, certainly it doesn't set out to make very much sense. But anyway, it keeps a fast pace and has lots to offer, and lots that's good.

It's enough to make you laugh long and often, almost enough to make highly improbably situations seem convincing. Veronica's cigarette-girl-with-ambitions performance should lift her out of the "beautiful face with two expressions" classification, for those who've held that against her. Missy emerges with new versatility, singing in styles strictly "something different" from anything he's tried before; and there's a new dancer to make Fred Astaire look to his laurels, but fast! This lad has what it takes, and it will take a bit of doing to match his routines.

FROM a casting director's viewpoint, who could ask for anything more—than a leading man like Gregory Peck to play opposite Ingrid Bergman? With "Spellbound" (the psychoanalytical mystery picture based on a novel titled "The House of Dr. Edwardes"), it's more than "just possible" director Alfred Hitchcock has established a new acting team. It's happened! And seeing one without the other, from now on, will be as just half-satisfying, and far more a sacrifice, than getting bread without butter.

The story, to tell it briefly, is about a befuddled amnesia victim, suspected of crime—murder, perhaps. With no memory of the past, he believes that he might be guilty. Ingrid Bergman is a psychiatrist, in love with Peck and determined to solve the mystery through scientific analysis of what she diagnoses as a mental illness. Figuring importantly in the solution are clues she gets from a dream. Peck is the dreamer, Salvador Dali designs the sets for it—and the result is the dream life of a disordered mind, represented by chairs and tables having human legs, roofs that slope at 45 degree angles, and Bergman as a statue, no less!

Ben Hecht wrote the screenplay, from an adapation by Angus MacPhail, eminent English psychoanalyst.

NEVER was there a more tender story, and rarely has a studio's confidence in the building of a child star been so convincingly justified. For "National Velvet" is all those things which make a movie a popular success. More appealing to animal lovers even than "Lassie," more vividly dramatic than "Home In Indiana," we'd like to say: and all because a soulful-eyed youngster by the name of Elizabeth Taylor plays the role of Velvet. But that would leave the commenting incomplete; for in praising the face (Elizabeth's) that's so alive with youthful spirit, and the voice with the softness of a sweet melody, it's important to add that Anne Revere and Donald Crisp are superb as the little girl's mother and dad, Mickey Rooney's last performance before going into the army is one of his best, and little Jackie Jenkins adds a dozen chuckles as the young sprout of the family.

Based on the novel by Enid Bagnold, and directed by Clarence Brown, it's a tale of two English youngsters, a butcher's daughter and a youthful vagabond, who train a fine sorrel gelding to run in the greatest, most thrilling of all races, the Grand National Steeplechase. The scenes are kept out of doors, for the most part—beautiful English countryside, wind-swept and colorful. Fanciful it may be, but with enough sweeping human appeal to be thoroughly captivating.

HERE'S the picture several million people have been looking forward to since the day they read the last page of "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn." To those millions, and the millions of others who haven't yet read the book, we say you've a treat in store! You'll not be disappointed in the picturization of the "Tree" Betty Smith made more famous than the village smithy's.

Closely following the book, or as closely as any picture can follow a novel, it gives those two very competent youngsters, Peggy Ann Garner and Ted Donaldson, as Francie and Neeley, the best parts of their careers, to date. And to old-timers Joan Blondell and James Dunn, who play Aunt Sissy and Johnny Nolan, comeback parts that definitely put them back "on top" in Hollywood. Dorothy McGuire, heretofore known to screen fans as the lovable but scatter-brained "Claudia," demonstrates her versatility here by playing Katie Nolan, just as you'd imagine her to be—the hard-working young wife and mother to whom "life is real, life is earnest."

Special honors also go to Lloyd Nolan as McShane, the policeman whose inarticulate love for Katie Nolan finally wins her, and James Gleason as McGarrity, the philosophical saloon keeper.

And to 20th Century-Fox go the very top honors for their excellent handling of this poignantly real-life drama.

CAN YOU TIE THAT!

What's Frank Sinatra got that Benchley wants? Woman power! Robert, the big brain man, scorns adopting that boyish smile, that sweet sentimental voice. He figures he can do it all with a bow tie!

Therefore, the Benchley shows how it's done. First he advises grasping both ends of the tie with either hand—that is, if you're able to find each end first.

Next step requires a bit of head work, remembering whether it is the long end or the short end of tie that goes on top.

Pull is a big help on any job, says Benchley, so he goes in for it. (He is currently going in for "Duffy's Tavern" on the Paramount lot.)

Well, bless the bow-knot and call him Frankie, Benchley version. You may also bring on the femmes—the silk stocking and nylon set, pul-ease!

lay in a cast. To keep her muscles from atrophying, she had been ordered to get up, encumbered as she was, and to move about until utterly exhausted.

The night before Thanksgiving, Dick was late for dinner without having telephoned to explain such absence. He was still missing at eight, nine, ten, and twelve o'clock. In desperation, Mrs. Jaeckel — who had been trundling her cast to the window every few minutes since dinner time—telephoned the hospitals. No, they had not admitted a tow-headed, sunburned individual answering to the name "Hanley"—his mother's maiden name, and that by which she always addresses him.

Next she called the police and asked them to put out a drag net.

A few moments later Dr. Livingston arrived without benefit of Stanley. He was too excited to notice the icy atmosphere. "I won the contest," he announced with rare exuberance. "Can you beat it? I won 55 pounds of turkey!"

He had been out selling magazine subscriptions from door to door. When an inquiring householder answered the bell, Dick—his best Sunday School expression shining like a klieg in a coal mine—would say, "I'm trying to sell enough subscriptions to earn a turkey for my mother. She's lying at home with a broken back." And, disarmed by such filial devotion, the householder invariably signed on the dotted.

Mrs. Jaeckel laughed until she cried. Climbing back into bed she wailed, "But we already have a turkey—a 20-pound turkey! The cook has it cleaned, dressed, stuffed and ready to go in the oven." Then she remembered. "Go call the police and tell them to stop looking for you."

That mission was more rugged than earning 155 pounds of turkey would have been, but he completed it. After all, he was a working man and he had been out on a legitimate commercial expedition.

The next morning, Jake started out with his turkeys. From helpful members of his shanty club, he learned the names of four families who were planning to celebrate Thanksgiving with a few fried eggs and a dish of cereal. He knocked at the door, explained that the magazine for which he had been gathering subscriptions the day before had selected this family—from the city directory—to participate in its celebration of the most successful city subscription drive in the nation, and handed over a turkey.

The beneficiaries of this hoax were stunned but grateful. They began to realize the power of the press and the excellence of the printed word.

Having been graduated from High School at the impressive age of 16, Dick had to wait for a year until he could get into the Merchant Marine. Since war had been declared, Dick had talked of nothing but the dilatory habits of the stork in having deposited him about two years late in the scheme of things. Had he been 18, now, he could have been in blues! He could have been out there, slugging.

While waiting for time to elapse and make him a fighting man, Dick went to work in a drug store, then a drive-in, and finally wound up in 20th Century's mail room. One of the executives decided that the hefty kid with the marine face would do for Chicken in "Guadalcanal Diary" and made contract suggestions which Dick had to refer to his mother because of his sub-citizen status. "They'll call her to the telephone at the Beverly Wilshire," he said, scrutinizing the floor.

Sympathetic oldsters concluded that Dick's mother was employed at the hotel, and assured him that they didn't want to get her into any trouble. Somewhat later it was learned that social Mrs. Jaeckel lived in the hotel, of course.

All of which brings us to the consideration of Jaeckel, the actor, Jaeckel, the public personality, Jaeckel, the ordinary seaman. As far as he is concerned you may forget the first two categories and take heed of the last. The only way Mrs. Jaeckel persuaded him to make "Wing And A Prayer" was to refuse to sign his papers allowing him to join the Merchant Marine until he agreed to make this last picture.

Dick is probably the least actor-y of all the young group of male players. The average man who gets a picture break has been praying for that break for months or years. He has engaged in Little Theatre activities and has grimly read Shakespeare, Shaw, and O'Neill. He has learned voice placement, pantomime of the emotions, and projection of attitude. He has been a Thespic boot, done theatrical k.p., and has really sweat it out.

Dick simply happened to look like a writer's dream of a certain character. He didn't . . . and doesn't . . . want to be an actor. This attitude is subject to change, of course.

What he does want to be with a determination and an eagerness almost pathetic, is one of the guys. The characters he admires are currently wading up a beach under fire, or riding a tank against a pill box, and slogging it out with the infantry. When it became clear, after months of training on Catalina, that the war might be over before Jaeckel could see action, he calmly de-enrolled and went to San Francisco, where he joined the seamen's union and signed on a tanker. "There's always a chance that a sub is going to take a pop at you if you're on a tanker," he wrote to his mother.

Another salient characteristic of Admiral Jaeckel is his reluctance to betray his emotions. When he was ten he was given a springer spaniel that he adored. After a year it sickened and had to be destroyed, a process that Dick accepted stoically A week or so later his mother said briskly that they must visit a kennel and acquire another pet.

Dick shook his head. "No more dogs for me," he stated with finality. "It's too hard on a guy to lose one." And from that day to this he has foregone canine ownership.

When he came home just before shipping out on the tanker he learned that his mother had purchased a house at the beach for him. He had never liked her rather impressive house at Malibu, so she had picked up a ramshackle little cabin in Pacific Palisades, had a fireplace installed, furnished it with miscellaneous furniture that had been loaned to friends for years or had gathered dust in the attic, then left the painting and other improvements to Dick.

Dick looked the place over, starting with the bedroom and bath, on street level, and dropping down a flight of stairs to the mat-carpeted living room with its huge lounge and miscellaneous chairs. His color had gone a deeper red, showing through his tan, and he was having trouble keeping his grin under control. "Very reasonable, Mom," he said. "Very reasonable little spot." Which is the ultimate in Jaeckel praise.

Later in the day he found occasion to study his mother's appearance. "You sure look sharp," he assured her, busying himself at the desk. As she was wearing a dress that he had seen at least a dozen times before, and as her hair was in typical beach condition, she accepted this praise for what it was: Dick's way of expressing extreme gratitude for his land yacht.

When "Guadalcanal Diary" was in production a scene was being rehearsed in which Dick, as the baby marine, was supposed to project fright. He was doing very badly when the director took him aside and said, "What's wrong, Dick? I know you have this scene in your system somewhere. Why don't you give?"

"Because, even if I was scared absolutely nuts, I wouldn't want anybody else to know. If a guy is a Marine, he doesn't show the feather, especially when he's around other Marines."

The director solved this impasse by doing closeups in which fear was a vividly present, but a rigidly controlled thing.

Dick was sensitive about his height (5′ 7″) when he was making "Guad." But he wouldn't have admitted it for worlds. He said one night to a friend, "A guy keeps right on growing until he's 20 or 21 sometimes, doesn't he?"

The friend said dubiously that most kids had attained adult height by the age of 15 or 16.

As if it had nothing to do with the subject under discussion, Dick said, "My dad was a tall man. Big, too. A real athlete."

But when he came home after an absence of several months, the first thing his mother noticed was that he towered above her. He had grown three inches! "My goodness, how you've grown!" she laughed.

"Guess I'll be as big as my dad was yet, huh?" he beamed.

He has a girl friend who was in High School when he was, but he refuses to give her name to interviewers. He calls her "My Girl," and describes her as a "very reasonable cookie," but he refuses to subject her to publicity. Together they worry over Superman's current difficulties, and they get lathered over Dick Tracy's contretemps. They also dote on movies, steaks, green salads, and gallons of milk. The Palladium gets their dance dollars; Dick has perfected one tricky step that no one but The Girl is able to follow. Together they really heat a solid sole.

When it comes to his own publicity, Dick is relaxed to the point of complete inertia. A recent deal called for each of a number of start to sign autograph cards—about 500 of them. Dick envisioned this protracted penmanship and shook his head. "That's not for me," he ruled. But when it was explained that the autographs were distributed in a fund-raising scheme for a celebrated Worthy Cause, Samaritan Dick gripped a pen, slid his tongue between his teeth, lowered his head, and went to work. For his own benefit he wouldn't exert himself; for someone else's comfort—yes.

Probably the clearest total index of Dick's general attitude is the way in which he travels. Because of the munificent financial standing of his mother, Dick could go anywhere he wished in super-first class. Yet, after he finished "Wing And A Prayer" he and a boy friend decided to take a brief vacation in Mexico. The normal young man in Dick's position would have driven his own car (Dick had a classy job sitting in the garage with ample gas coupons available, because he had been riding in a car pool)—or would have flown. Not Dick. He and his buddy made arrangements to work as swampers for a Mexican trucker at six pesos per day. It was, he announced with enthusiasm, a wonderful vacation.

When he had to travel from San Francisco to Los Angeles in order to get his mother's signature on papers allowing him to join a seaman's union so that he could ship out on a tanker, he stepped out on the highway, thumbed a ride on a passing potato truck, and leaped off some 20 hours later with cricks in his back and $27 in his pocket.

No wonder his friends say that he's mastered his three R's. He's a rugged, regular, right guy.

blue corduroy bell-bottoms. I was nine and the first boy in my class to achieve such a possession, at the time every boy's heart's desire. No garment ever gave me so much pleasure.

I RECALL, WITH PLEASURE
The days I studied at the Neighborhood Playhouse School of Dramatics in New York. I had a small allowance with my scholarship there, but it always ran out before the end of the month. The boy who shared my room was also usually low in funds. Once we were down to fourteen cents between us; we bought a quart of milk and made some biscuits from buckwheat pancake flour we happened to have on hand. That meal was delicious—or else we were just very hungry. We were young and strong and confident; lack of money was a good joke.

I ENJOY
Horseback riding;

Horse-racing;
Barbecues;
Stirring music;
My role in "Valley of Decision," with Greer Garson.

I HATE
Too efficient people—they seem like robots to me;
Malted milk;
Monotony;
Self-conscious beauty.

MY FIRST BIG ADVENTURE
Came near being fatal. In LaJolla, we kids used to dive for abalone. We'd take an iron bar, dive some ten feet down to the rocks where the fish had fastened themselves firmly, pry them loose and come up with our catch. One day I dived as usual, but my bar slipped and my finger was caught under the rock. I struggled but I couldn't free myself, and I was all but drowned by the time the other kids noticed I was missing. They dived after me and brought me up, but I was completely out and the lifeguard worked over me for a long time before I was revived.

I'M GUILTY OF
Not caring anything about clothes;
Never shaving unless I'm working and have to;
Being lazy—I'm the laziest man on earth;
Having a one-track mind. Once I concentrate on a thing, I think of nothing else; my next appointment is forgotten, which is usually very unfortunate. I'm so eager to finish what I'm doing, I don't remember Time.

THE FIRST THING I NOTICE
About women—or men, for that matter—is whether they are easy and natural, or are putting on an act. I can't stand artificiality, and the person who is trying to impress me with a pose—doesn't.

I USED TO DREAM
Of rescuing a ship lost at sea;
Winning the war single-handed;
Returning a kick-off for a touchdown;
Doing all sorts of wildly improbable but noble things. Doesn't every kid?

I'D LIKE TO
Ride on a rocket plane;
Understand woodlore;
Be a good friend to my son Jonathan;
Speak Chinese . . . I had to learn a long paragraph of Chinese for my part in "Keys of the Kingdom." I knew the translation, but though my wife and I worked over that paragraph for fifty hours, it still failed to make sense to me.

IF I HAD TO LIVE OVER ANY PART OF MY LIFE—
And I can't say that I wish I could—It would be the time Guthrie McClintic gave me my first Broadway role, the lead in "Morning Star." It was terrifically important to me to make good, so after we opened in Philadelphia I sat up till 3:30 a.m. to read what the critics had to say. They tore me apart, called me a tailor's dummy, inept, amateurish, everything they could think of. I was completely crushed for a time. I knew I couldn't afford to get bad notices in New York, or I'd be finished as an actor before I had really begun. I worked like a slave over my lines and I fairly sweated blood over the performance on our Broadway opening night. Again I sat up waiting for the notices, and this time the critics were wonderful. That taught me the value of fighting through.

I BELIEVE IN
Fate or Destiny, but Luck is not to be ignored. In the long run, I think what is yours will come to you, if it's important. I've been lucky in getting breaks, but I know that I must fight for what I want, not merely sit around wishing and waiting for it.

SOMETIMES
I'm down in the depths for an hour or more, when something goes wrong. Then I give myself pep talks. I say: "Remember how you felt when this happened, and how well it turned out, after all," or I remind myself how dejected I was over that and what good came of it. And presently I bob up once more.

I'VE LEARNED
From the stage: That one should live life to the hilt. The stage requires intense concentration; every detail of a character must be right, every tiny inflection or movement is important. Once you've mastered this, you find yourself adopting it offstage.

From the screen: That one should be completely natural and sincere. The camera photographs thought, so you can't be phony and get away with it.

From my wife Greta: How to enjoy living. When we met, I was a pretty grim sort of person; my one-track mind was concentrated on work—that's all I thought of, all I did, all I cared for. I must have been a deadly bore. But Greta is a very gay, happy person. She loves a good time and she showed me how to have fun, too.

I'M CRAZY ABOUT
Greta; Cape Cod; green apple pie; the Arizona desert; Brahms' First Symphony; Houseman's poem: When I Was One And Twenty.

I DON'T WANT TO
Play Hamlet; slaughter wild life; eat three-decker sandwiches; or get in a rut.

I'M NO GOOD AT
Figuring out my income-tax, drawing up contracts or getting myself more money . . . I let other people handle those items.

I DON'T BELIEVE IN GHOSTS
But if there are any, they'd be well-advised to haunt old theaters; they're such spooky places.

My sole experience with the supernatural occurred in Indianapolis' eighty-year-old English Theater. There's a legend that the daughter of an early owner fell in love with the man at the box-office. Her father, discovering the romance, fired the box-office man and broke up the affair. The despairing daughter climbed to the fly-gallery and leaped a hundred feet down to death on the stage. She is supposed to return, on occasion.

One night, Cecil Humphreys and I had a scene together on that stage. Suddenly he cried: "What was that?" and clutched his sleeve, his eyes following some invisible thing offstage. I had a line to speak, but it didn't fit his exclamation and I forgot it until the prompter handed it to me. Meanwhile, Cecil stood there, shaking all over. We finished the scene somehow, but he told me later that something had struck him on the arm with great force, then run away. Everyone remembered the ghost of the daughter.

I can't explain this incident, but I still DON'T BELIEVE IN GHOSTS.

I HAVE FUN
Cooking special dishes. I make beef stew, which I imagine excels that made by famous chefs. I like to barbecue steak and spare ribs. A steak is best if quickly seared over a flame and then broiled; I don't hold with the school of thought that wants to do exotic things with this essentially simple dish. But I like to smear chili sauce and honey on my spare ribs, and cook them no more than ten minutes.

SOME DAY I WANT TO Travel all over the world, see the places I've lived in on stage and screen; but first I want to Explore America, where we have practically everything.

Own a California ranch, with an informal ranch-house and riding horses. It would be a practical ranch where we'd raise real crops. I'd like an apartment in town to live in while working in pictures. My children could grow up on the ranch, going to public schools, but they'd know city life, too, and be at home in either place. I'm interested in woodlore and the ranch would be a good place to go into it thoroughly and teach my children to enjoy and understand it.

Form a co-operative company for the production of plays on both stage and screen. Each has much to learn from the other, and a combination of the two should be interesting.

idea so much that he offered to do research work and write the story. About a year later, he asked Crosby to read it and give an opinion.

Crosby read it, and his opinion was that the story was so good they'd better all get together and make it into a picture at once. Practically on the spot, and without any more ado, Crosby Productions, Inc., was formed, with Bing as president. "The Great John L." as its first production, and Frank Mastroly and Jimmy Grant co-producers.

That much being settled, the first job was to get an actor to play the name role. It was Crosby's idea to give the chance to an unknown, and 75 tests of candidates were considered before a decision was made. Then a young man named Dale Easton was chosen, and his name, according to the good old Hollywood custom, was changed immediately to one which is supposed to lend itself better to exploitation—Greg McClure.

Greg started his career as a laborer at Warners, where, because of his brawny build, he was assigned to wrestling with heavy pieces in the scene dock. This was tougher on him than he wanted his foreman to know, because of an old back and knee injury he got playing football (and which makes him 4-F). So he soon got himself signed up as an extra, which was much easier, and paid better.

When he heard about the search for an unknown to play "The Great John L.," Greg hied himself to the studio and asked the director, Frank Tuttle, to make a test of him. It was made, and after a wait of three months, Greg was called in to play the role. He's an easy going, friendly, down-to-earth sort of fellow who's frankly delighted over his good luck, but takes it in his stride. He's making friends fast, and they're all betting that he's one guy who won't go Hollywood.

The next thing Bing had to do was gather up the folks who know all about the fight business. There's quite a colony of ex-fighters, seconds, sparring partners, and such in Hollywood, and they've all been rounded up and turned over to Johnny Indrisano, who's technical director for the fight scenes. And as right as can be for the job! Johnny has been in the fight game for 27 years and has been adviser for a host of fight movies. For fourteen years he was a boxer, fighting all over the United States and licking five world champions; but he always went in overweight so that though he won the fight, the champ retained his title.

Johnny has studied the history of fighting from the days of the Roman gladiators, has an outstanding collection of books on boxing, and is an authority on all types—crowd fights, rough and tumble, knife fighting, dog fights, cock fights, etc. It's in a picture like this, when fighting is not a mere incident in the story, but the backbone of it, that Johnny's in his glory.

He's more than pleased with Greg McClure's imitation of the Sullivan technique. Greg, in spite of his splendid physique, was pretty raw material, his actual fighting experience having been limited to a couple of bouts with grammar school bullies. But he worked hard and faithfully with Johnny, spending his Sundays rehearsing at a gym and many evenings watching fights, and after about five weeks of intensive coaching, he was functioning as "The Great John L." in a way that had the whole studio wreathed in happy smiles.

Among the former fighters working on the picture are many names familiar to fight enthusiasts—among them Bob Perry, Frank Moran, Ace Hudkins, Freddie Steel, Frankie Dolan, Phil Bloom, Tony Williams, Jack Perry, Ben Conley, Johnny Condi, Bert Keyes, Sammy Shack, Gentleman George Delmont, Charlie Sullivan, and Eddie Randolph.

John L. Sullivan's championship dates from February 7th, 1882, when he knocked out Paddy Ryan in nine rounds. It took John L. just ten minutes and thirty seconds to win the $5,000 prize and championship.

But Sullivan's career really began in a Boston theatre in 1877, when the management invited anyone in the audience to come up on the stage and tackle a local pugilist named Scannell. Young John L. (whose parents wanted him to be a priest) was out front. He took up the invitation, strode across the stage, and knocked out Scannell in one amazing wallop. Scannell wilted like a piece of boiled spinach and rushed to the nearest saloon to drown his humiliation. But Sullivan marched up to the footlights and bellowed: "My name's John L. Sullivan, and I can lick any man alive. If any of 'em here doubts it, come on!" One doubter came up on the stage, and Sullivan sent him flying through the air with the greatest of ease in one blow, after which the theatre emptied.

This episode, which is of course included in the Crosby film, made local history, and convinced Sullivan's parents that their John was never meant to be a priest. They withdrew their affectionate interest in molding his life, and let nature take its course.

John began perfecting his fighting technique, which was notable for its simplicity. He had little if any real boxing training, but was simply a natural fighting machine, with a broad, thick-set figure, powerful neck, and muscles so perfectly developed that there were no visible bunches on his arms. He had tremendous force in his shoulders and back.

Incapable of considering his own defeat possible, Sullivan had no mental obstacles to overcome. Another important asset was a deadly glare, so terrifying that he usually unnerved an opponent with it before the blows ever started flying. He had no fancy footwork or trick methods. He would simply walk up to his opponent, glare, and start pounding. As a rule, it took just one or two of those terrific swings to put the other guy out cold. John L. would never defend himself. Occasionally he would drop his hands and let his adversary hit him a few times on the chin, which was about as effective as beating on a granite wall. Then Sullivan would rush at him for the knock-out.

The fighter had a reputation for out-drinking, out-fighting, and out-yelling every man he met. He loved to be the center of attention, was a show-off, wildly extravagant, vulgar, and profane. And yet there were in him many of the homely virtues and a rugged character that commanded respect of all classes. In all the mass of anecdotes about his drunken escapades, there is nothing to indicate that he ever lost his chivalrous attitude toward women or his gentleness toward children. His name was synonymous with fairness and rigid honesty. It's well known that he never in all his career threw a fight, and his answer to a proposition made him by Jem Mace (who wanted Sullivan to agree to let him stay four rounds) is famous: "If Mace can whip me, let him do it. If I can whip him, so much the better. I will try to knock his block off from the moment I enter the ring until I leave it."

Sullivan loved to fight and took great pride in his profession. He also loved his public, and never forgot that they were responsible for his fame and fortune, which is probably why the crowds always loved him.

He held the heavyweight championship of America for ten years, and was unofficially called "champion of the world" though this latter title did not really belong to him. He never fought a foreign scrapper except Charley Mitchell, who never held the English championship, and no decision was reached in either of their fights. The first, held in Madison Square Garden, in 1883, was stopped in the third round by the police, and the second, fought at Chantilly, France, in 1887, was declared a draw after 39 rounds, lasting three hours and eleven minutes.

By the time Sullivan met Jim Corbett, on September 7, 1892, his dissipation had begun to tell on him, and he was no match for the younger man, who was so light and quick on his feet. Another thing, when John L. turned that terrible glare on Corbett, it didn't work. Gentleman Jim simply looked straight back at him with a supercilious smile on his face which enraged Sullivan so much that he, instead of Corbett, was unnerved. The knockout came in the 21st round. As soon afterwards as he could, John L. pulled himself together and came over to the ropes, silencing the crowd by holding his hand up in the air. Then he said: "Gentlemen, I have nothing at all to say. I came into the ring once too often, and if I had to get licked, I'm glad I was licked by an American. I remain your warm and personal friend, John L. Sullivan."

The crowd remained his warm and personal friends, too. They cried over him that night.

It may be worth noting here, too, that George N. Bush, who was with Sullivan when he died, February 2, 1918, said, "He scrapped it out to the last. His mind was clear, and almost to the minute he died, John was saying, 'I'm all right, George. I'm getting better right along.'" Jake Kilrain, whom Sullivan had licked in a 75-round battle in Richberg, Miss., in 1889, served as an usher at his funeral. And attending as official representative of Sullivan's native state was Hon. Calvin Coolidge, then lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts.

So Bing Crosby, the old Groaner, is off to a flying start in his new venture, with this tale about a roistering, swash-buckling, lovable American. And having assembled a competent staff to put over the job, Bing did an unheard-of thing for a producer: he gave them a free hand and left town—in fact, left the country to go overseas and entertain servicemen.

certainly tried, with concentrated lessons every day, and reported back more dead than alive with this much to her credit: she could stand approximately on her toe tips for approximately three seconds without clutching at the furniture.

You know the movies. Alexis bounced on the set in her little muslin ballet skirt, and they sent her back to the wardrobe department for an afternoon dress. "We decided to eliminate the ballet sequence," they explained. But, whoops! Alexis was in, and she stayed.

Dance steps appear to be a matter over which screen aspirants are likely to stumble, and we do mean stumble. June Allyson was another pseudo-dancer. But pseudo!

With her eye on Hollywood, she wanted to get into a certain New York show. They would hire only girls who could dance, and, well, June teetered forth on opening night without knowing a double shuffle from a double coke. She was terrible, but cute; and, sure enough, Hollywood beckoned. Before her first picture hit, in "Two Girls and a Sailor," June had learned to dance with the best of them, yet she might never have reached the West Coast if she hadn't made her own breaks.

Esther Fernandez likewise danced her way onto celluloid, and by a strange trek from Mexico. Esther happened to be a friend of a dance team, husband and wife, in a Mexican night club, where they did a fiery fandango. The wife fell ill, and the husband frantically said, "Esther, you've got to take her place—we can't break up the team and lose the job!" Esther had never danced professionally, but anything for a friend.

In a fortnight, she had learned the routine with a dollop of adagio thrown in. Her aunt made her a gold and crimson costume, and Esther made such a sensation that she was snatched for the movies. So then they put her in "Two Years Before the Mast," where she doesn't dance a step.

Hollywood glimmered in Roz Russell's mind even when she interviewed a New York stage producer for her first Broadway role. He offered her a minor part. Oh, dear, no! Miss Russell couldn't consider anything but the lead. (One consideration being that you get to the screen faster from the top of the stage ladder.) As Roz talked, the producer became so impressed by her verve, not to say nerve, that he finally said he couldn't assign the leading role to her because his partner had practically decided on another actress. But stick around and meet the partner.

Rosalind stuck around. When the partner appeared, he turned out (to her surprise) to be a producer she'd recently met at a dinner party. He'd been phoning all over town to try to locate the handsome girl who had talked so brightly (and imaginatively) of her recent theater triumphs. She would be perfect, he had decided, for the leading role. Since Roz had already decided the same thing, they signed the contract. Not long after the end of a successful run, Rosalind also signed a movie contract. Which shows you!

Are you in the know?

Try this often, if you aim to be—☐ A good skate
☐ A pretty Kitty
☐ Queen of the Ice Follies

You're on thin ice, complexion-wise, without a daily workout. If you'd be a pretty Kitty, get that out-of doors glow . . . it makes your skin look smoother, clearer. And you needn't skip those skating sessions on certain days. Moderate exercise is helpful—and comfortable, with Kotex. For Kotex gives you the kind of softness that doesn't just "feel" soft at first touch. Unlike flimsy napkins, Kotex stays soft while wearing. You get hours of chafeless comfort with Kotex sanitary napkins.

Would you say this character was—☐ Slightly balmy
☐ Learning sign language
☐ Getting glamour-hands

Time on your hands is well spent. Glamour-hands can be yours by faithfully massaging each finger with a softening cream. (Pretend you're smoothing on a snug glove.) Shrewd grooming helps to banish self-consciousness. So, too, on calendar days, self-consciousness departs when you're shrewd enough to choose Kotex. Kotex is different from thick, stubby napkins because Kotex has flat, tapered ends that don't show. So no revealing lines can ruffle your smoothness, your poise.

For tearless tweezing, should you—
☐ Soften brows with hot water
☐ Spread skin taut
☐ Use quick, firm pull

When weeding out wayward eyebrows—weep no more, my lady. Just follow the routine given above. (All three answers are correct.) By the way, did you know that Kotex offers three answers to napkin needs? Yes, only Kotex comes in three sizes—for different women, different days. There's Regular, Junior and Super Kotex. And all three sizes of Kotex have that special 4-ply safety center that gives you extra protection.

Bill Eythe, Tallulah Bankhead in a scene from "Royal Scandal," 20th Century-Fox pic.

Another star who bluffed her way into a Broadway part, with Hollywood just below the horizon, is Claudette Colbert. She let stage producer Brock Pemberton think she'd had three years' experience in theatre. As a matter of fact, she had none; but what Pemberton didn't know, didn't hurt him—or Claudette. He gave her an important spot in the production, gave her the star spot in the next production, and pssst! First thing you knew, Claudette was a screen queen.

Nobody thinks of Bob Taylor as needing any first aid to get into films, but he did need it, badly, and because —of all things——lack of fat. Bob, who had already been "discovered" on his college campus by a talent scout, knew that the movie people wanted athletic heroes at the moment, and that the talent scout had been pleased by the breadth of the Taylor shoulders. Unfortunately, from overstudy and a recent illness, Bob was considerably underweight. The wide shoulders were there, but the rest of him was too thin.

At his first session with studio officials, Taylor wore a padded suit, two sweaters, and a set of long woolen underwear. They signed him, but they had to fatten him up before he appeared on the screen.

Horses have been a help and a horror to several film favorites who dashed across the screen in gallant Westerns, clinging—you'd be surprised how prayerfully—to their saddle pommels. They all graduated later, with yells of gratitude, into society dramas.

Bob Young, for example, let 'em think he could ride because he wanted to be in a Western picture. That is, he wanted to be in any picture whatever. By the intervention of a kindly fate, as he stood wondering how to climb into the saddle, Bob was hailed by a messenger who yanked him off the set. The studio had decided to cast him in a different picture!

Frances Gifford and Richard Arlen began their careers as cayuse-loving characters who thundered o'er the range, though it's a toss-up which is more reluctant to remain in the vicinity of a horse. Arlen often admitted that he "didn't trust 'em", and Frances privately declared they terrified her pink.

As for Jack Carson—turned down again and again by studio after studio, he brought the thing upon himself. Goldwyn, so Jack heard, intended to make a Western and wanted a cowboy hero. Jack applied. Did he love horses! Had he been brought up in the saddle! Had he roped cattle deep in the heart of Montana! (A slight mispronunciation of his real birthplace, Canada.) In short, Mr. Carson was a rootin', tootin' cowhand and could ride like nobody's business. Which last was accurate, if you construe it to mean that he had no business on a pony.

They took a week's option on Carson. Out he tore, hired a mount, and for a week—no fooling—ate his dinner off a shelf. He donned cowboy clothes and swaggered before his mirror. He rolled his own till he stood ankle-deep in spilled tobacco. At the end of the week he went back to the studio and found they didn't want a comic cowboy, on second thought, so they'd signed Gary Cooper. What Jack said ought to have put blisters on his tongue, instead of where he had 'em.

Not horses, but directors, were what scared Marlene Dietrich, believe it or not. When she was trying to get out of the ranks of the extras in a Berlin studio, no director seemed to notice the since-celebrated Dietrich legs. Somebody told her she ought to try to stand out from the crowd; why not pretend that she couldn't see well, why not wear a monocle? It would reflect the lights, at any rate, and attract attention. Next day, Marlene appeared on the set with a monocle in her left eye. The day after, she had a bit part. And from there on, the going proved easy.

In a way, Helmut Dantine followed the same method. That is, he allowed himself to become conspicuous, though indirectly. When he knew they were looking for a man to play the role of a Count in a New York stage production (once more, here was an actor with his gaze turned toward Hollywood), he induced a friend to address him in the producer's hearing as "Count." Dantine, recently released from a German concentration camp in Austria, didn't care what anyone called him so long as he got work.

The ruse succeeded. Delighted at discovering a real Count, the producer cast Dantine in the part. But the backer of the piece vanished with his bank role, and Count Dantine took the count. But the Hollywood bug had bitten him, the few weeks of stage rehearsals had proved he could act, and he went to Hollywood, anyhow.

On the other hand, Marsha Hunt, then a Powers model, let on she had come from New York to Hollywood for a social visit, merely. Go into movies? Mercy, no! This went on for weeks, till with her face and style and figure she had agents crawling on the doorstep. And Lana Turner, spotted at a soda fountain by a talent scout—she patronized that fountain because talent scouts patronized it—said she'd rather drink sodas and continue her studies at high school. This made the scout as determined to sign her up as Lana was inwardly determined to sign.

Such is the competition among those trying to crash the gates, that innocent deception isn't confined to human actors, either. The brown and white collie, known off screen as Pal, masqueraded as a girl in the name part of "Lassie, Come Home," though he's a boy. To make it more confusing, he also played his own son in the sequel, "Son of Lassie."

And that pooch in Cary Grant's picture, "None But the Lonely Heart!" Seeking a mutt for the role of "Nipper," the studio, after prolonged search, picked this funny looking animal. Everybody agreed that it was a typical mongrel. When they finished the picture, the news leaked out that "Nipper," owned by Eleanor Griffin who wrote "Boys' Town," is an English pit bull and the champion of his breed. He has more ribbons and medals than an Admiral.

But, animals aside, some of the funniest gags pulled by folks who were willing to be stars have to do with accents. Joan Leslie turned a clever trick of this sort, and it turned right back on her. She was a young girl not in her teens when MGM, ready to produce "Rasputin," was looking for a real Russian to play the royal daughter of Ethel Barrymore's Czarina. Joan (she was Joan Bredell then, and had been in vaudeville since the age of five) went to the studio for an interview and gave a perfect imitation of a Russian girl who had once been on a vaudeville bill with the Bredells.

The director was entranced. Joan went home hysterical with joy. A week later she read that Jean Parker had been signed for the role.

Not till years afterward did Jean Parker happen to tell Joan Leslie that the studio people had mentioned a very talented girl they'd wanted—but she spoke with a Russian accent. At first, they thought this would be perfect. Then they remembered that none of the Barrymores had a Russian accent, so why should one player alone burst out with it? Had they known Joan's accent was a phony—Well, Jean Parker became a star in that picture, and Joan Leslie had to wait for years.

Among the others who toyed with an accent or so are Laraine Day and Sigrid Gurie. To snatch a desirable role, Laraine pretended she could speak French, and then sprained her brain to master enough of that language to get by. Sigrid Gurie, you'll recall, pretended she could hardly speak a word without a Norwegian flavor to the pronunciation, though she had been born (of a Norwegian family, to be sure) in Brooklyn. A Norwegian accent, she thought, had more distinction than one from the Brooklyn borough.

Leo Carrillo talks, even in private conversation, with a wild and intriguing Spanish accent, though he went to school in Boston and speaks English as well as you do (anyway, as well as I do). And John Harvey practiced a Texas drawl for a week, till he could say, "Hiya, podner!" like a native, to land a part in John Golden's "Free and Equal."

But the pay-off came when the popularity of English actors and English plots rose to its height. Bob Cummings, of Joplin, Mo., happened to be doing a minor stage role in London at the time. He induced a friend, who was a theater manager, to put the Cummings name up on a cinema marquee long enough for Bob to snap a picture of it.

Then Bob sent the snapshot to a Hollywood agent with a letter saying that this famous English actor was en route to the States. When Bob arrived, complete with Oxford accent, the agent was waiting on the pier, and a contract waited in the New York office of a Hollywood studio.

This proved to be harvest time for Margaret Lindsay, too. Margaret, from Dubuque, Iowa, had been doing small parts here and there in Hollywood, and felt pretty discouraged. She wanted a role in "Cavalcade," the English picture to be produced by Twentieth Century-Fox. The trouble was that they wouldn't accept anyone whose birthplace hadn't been England. But Margaret had played on the London stage for a year. She went to Twentieth, talking English so English that scarcely anybody but an Englishman could understand what she said and (by Jove!) landed in the cast.

The English accent still proves a help. Even as recently as "Jane Eyre," Hillary Brooke assumed the incisive speech of British high society to capture the part of "the other woman." Hillary, like Sigrid Gurie, is from Brooklyn.

Yet the best trick ever turned by an actor-to-be had to do not with an English but with a Russian accent. It's a Hollywood classic.

DeMille wanted a Russian actress to play the lead in "The Godless Girl," a genuine Russian who spoke broken English. Somebody brought Sonia Karlov to his office. DeMille spoke to her. She hunched her shoulders and shook her dark head. No spika da Eenglis', but make wiz ze eyes, all right. Exotic, dazzling, she proved to be exactly the type for the part, and they set about teaching her enough English for the dialogue in the film.

While she learned dialogue, and draped it in the most fascinating broken English you ever heard, they gave press parties for Miss Karlov. When addressed, she shook her lovely hair-do in apology and murmured, "'Scuse, pliss," and smiled a smile right off the steppes—or maybe the tundra. They ran the make-up department ragged on her behalf. They drove the costume department crazy, creating new clothes. And she was a knockout in every way.

But she was also Jeanne Williams—from Brooklyn, of course (it must be quite a place)—the wife of an illustrator to whose home she retired after that picture. She retired, however, with the satisfaction of having fooled everyone. DeMille himself freely admitted he hadn't once suspected the hoax.

Ah, Hollywood! What won't people do to get into the "in"!

role and live up to it "off the cuff," as it were. I've had an almost reverent admiration for Ida Lupino ever since she walked into Bill Wellman's office and made herself "be" Bessie for him (the girl in "The Light that Failed"), thereby getting herself that wonderful role. Little Freddie Bartholomew did it years ago when he was introduced to Louis B. Mayer and said, simply, "I am David Copperfield." Stanwyck can't do it! Without the reassurance of make-up, lines, lights and the approval of a director, Stanwyck is just Stanwyck—and no help for it. I can't even put on a "social act." The worst performance of my career, I think, was the one I gave on the occasion of my first, and only, big party in the Hollywood tradition. I rehearsed for days, being the sparkling hostess, and what I turned out to be was just Stanwyck, very unhappy, very confused, and showing it! It was the worst stage fright I have ever experienced, and I've had my share of opening night jitters. It's a great help to any woman, especially an actress, to be able to "assume a character" and be convincing in the role. But I can't do it. I wish, I DO wish, I could!

4. Impetuosity. I'm still trying to cross this one off, and it isn't easy. All the self discipline I have been able to muster hasn't cured me of blurting out something I think or feel strongly—sometimes at very awkward moments. It isn't only that I'm quick-tempered. That gets me into trouble enough. But I'm also given to hasty judgments, to making decisions without giving them enough thought—to doing things and considering the consequences later.

Some people can get away with this and give you that old "strike while the iron is hot" bromide. But I can't. I almost invariably find that my first impulse was a wrong one, and I wish to goodness I'd kept my brain buttoned up until I had time to weigh and balance and all those other dull things.

Maybe I'll learn some time. And then again, maybe I shan't!

CREDITS . . . . ASSETS

costly lesson, I've also learned how much easier life can be for a busy person if she will only trust the experts. I have to know I can trust them; I have that old elephant memory and I never forget if anyone betrays a trust. But once I know, I find it's a very good idea to let the make-up experts, the cameramen, the business managers attend to their jobs while I concentrate on mine. Learning this has been good business on my part—it's worked to my advantage. And it certainly has made life more pleasant for me. That's another "debit" that I can move over to the "credit" side of my ledger!

4. Love for my work. I'm not kidding. If you don't like your job, then you won't do very well at it. I like mine, always have, and always will. I have none of those ideas about "retiring to the country" and raising orchids or something, because I'm "so tired of it all." I'm not tired of it, and I don't expect to be. I want to act until they have to shoot me, and I hope that time is a long way off. Nothing—but nothing!—makes me as impatient or as sore as the fatuous soul who inquires, "What sacrifices have you made for your art, Miss Stanwyck?"

I haven't made any and I'm not even sure it is "art." It's a darned good job, and I'm lucky to have it. I think that feeling this way about it has been one of the most important factors in my success. My greatest asset of all has been a genuine love for "the profession" and the resultant determination to give it the best I had—always.

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

A BELL FOR ADANO is now in its second month with Gene Tierney, John Hodiak, Bill Bendix, Richard Conte, and Allyn Joslyn enacting the story of Italian reconstruction.

CAPTAIN EDDIE, being produced by Winfield Sheehan and directed by Lloyd Bacon (whose picture SUNDAY DINNER FOR A SOLDIER is going to be a smash hit), is the story of Eddie Rickenbacker. Fred MacMurray gets the plum role of his life as Captain Eddie, and Dick Crane will be stupendous as Captain Cherry, the pilot.

THE BULLFIGHTERS will be funny if you can stand Laurel and Hardy.

COLONEL EFFINGHAM'S RAID will be a honey. It can't miss with Charles Coburn as the bumbling Colonel aided by Joan Bennett, Bill Eythe, Allyn Joslyn, and Frank Craven.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

BLOOD ON THE SUN, the Cagney picture with Sylvia Sidney, Robert Armstrong, John Emery, and Rosemary DeCamp, is now in its second month of production.

G.I. JOE—the picture being made from beloved Ernie Pyle's book—has Burgess Meredith in the Ernie Pyle role. Most of the rest of the cast are little known actors who are getting the break of their lives. Whatever you do, don't miss G.I. JOE.

A WALK IN THE SUN is the latest Dana Andrews picture, and the one on which fellow performers were happy to help Dana welcome his new son. Those cigars came in gratefully, due to the cigarette shortage.

BEDSIDE MANNER is an Andrew Stone comedy with Ruth Hussey, John Carrol, and Ann Rutherford. Ann has been losing her mind over the recent adventures of Dick Tracy, Vitamin Flintheart, and Snowflake Falls. Each morning for a week she quizzed members of the cast as to what plot turn they next expected. No one guessed right.

GUEST WIFE is another of those inimitable Colbert comedies in which she is aided by Don Ameche, Dick Foran, and Charles Dingle.

AT MGM:

HOLD HIGH THE TORCH, the story of a war dog, stars Elizabeth Taylor, Lassie, Frank Morgan, and Selena Royle. If you haven't seen NATIONAL VELVET, Elizabeth's first picture, haunt your local theatre until it plays. Miss Taylor is really something.

WITHOUT LOVE is in its third month of production with the labors of Katharine Hepburn, Spencer Tracy, Lucille Ball, and Keenan Wynn. On the set, Keenan was telling his fellow players about the pair of huaraches that Van Johnson brought him from Mexico City. Seems the Mexican method of tanning leather is inclined to leave the shoes with an odor four feet taller than high. At a party one night Van endured the aroma as long as possible, then slipped over to growl at his friend, "Take those things off and hide them under the piano. The guy who gave you those shoes was crazy."

P. Muni, M. Chapman: "One Against Seven."

OUR VINES HAVE TENDER GRAPES is keeping Margaret O'Brien, Jackie Jenkins, Edward G. Robinson, James Craig, and Frances Gifford busy. Picture in its third month.

WEEKEND AT THE WALDORF with Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner, Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson, Keenan Wynn, Robert Benchley, Leon Ames (remember him as the father in MEET ME IN ST. LOUIS), and Xavier Cugat, is in its second month. Latest rave was caused by Lana Turner appearing with her hair cut 2½ inches all over her head. "Fugitive from heaven," grinned Mr. Ames.

TWICE BLESSED is a story about twins, written for those terrific twins, Lee and Lyn Wilde. Gail Patrick, Preston Foster, and Marshall Thompson are also cast.

THE HIDDEN EYE should be a goodie. It is a whodunit that begins with two bodies already scored to the credit of the secret murderer who has a habit of leaving beside the deceased a highly-scented note. Frances Rafferty is the girl in the case, who expects to be prone with perfume at any moment; Paul Langton is the fiancé who is suspected, and Edward Arnold as the blind detective, Duncan Maclain with his seeing eye dog, Friday, solves the mystery.

HER HIGHNESS AND THE BELLBOY is coming along rapidly with Hedy Lamarr, Robert Walker, June Allyson, and Warner Anderson.

AT PARAMOUNT:

DUFFY'S TAVERN is in its fourth month—a riot of variety acts. Everyone on the Paramount lot is in it—but wait until you hear Betty Hutton sing "The Hard Way." You'll be spending juke box nickels on it before long, because it's solid.

THE LOST WEEKEND, with Ray Milland having the staggers and Jane Wyman viewing him with indulgent alarm, is in its fourth month. Did you see the pictures in LIFE, showing how some of the scenes were shot on New York streets without the idle passersby becoming conscious of the camera?

THE LOVE LETTERS is in its second month of production with Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Cecil Kellaway, Anita Louise, and Reginald Denny.

THE AFFAIRS OF SUSAN has Joan Fontaine, George Brent, Dennis O'Keefe, and Walter Abel in make-up. The tagline of this story's synopsis is worth repeating: "So Susan, instead of being all things to all men, decides to be all women for one man."

THE VIRGINIAN in Technicolor is still walking the still streets at sundown knowing that he must kill Trampas. Joel McCrea is on one end of the gun, and Brian Donlevy at the other. Barbara Britton is the gal who gits her man, podner.

GOOD INTENTIONS are what Eddie Bracken has toward Veronica Lake, Albert Dekker, and George Zucco. Paul Jones, who produces the "Road" pictures is the producer of this one, and George Marshall is directing.

HARD TO HANDLE is an action picture with William Gargan, Ann Savage, and Leo Gorcey. You should hear Leo tell about the trials and tribulations of being an ex-dead end kid. Seems every frustrated local fisticuffer wants to pick a fight.

AT RKO:

THE INVISIBLE ARMY deals with John Wayne's adventures with guerrillas like Richard Loo, Beulah Bondi, Tony Quinn, John Miljan and Paul Fix.

THE SPANISH MAIN, in Technicolor, is still rocking from the shouts of Paul Henreid, Maureen O'Hara, Walter Slezak, and John Emery. Incidentally, Paul Henreid's personal Christmas cards were among the most appealing in town: an informal snapshot of Paul, Lisl, their cocker spaniel, and their glamorous daughter, Miss Monica.

JOHNNY ANGEL is the name of the George Raft picture with Signe Hasso, Claire Trevor, and Hoagy Carmichael. Margaret Wycherly, who played the unforgettable role of Gary Cooper's mother in SERGEANT YORK, is also in the cast.

FOLLOW YOUR HEART has Jack Haley, Marcy McGuire, and Glenn Vernon on the down beat.

AT REPUBLIC:

UTAH is now being commemorated by Roy Rogers, Gabby Hayes, the Sons of the Pioneers and Peggy Stewart. Did you see Trigger dance in HOLLYWOOD CANTEEN? Pretty nifty.

AT INTERNATIONAL:

ALONG CAME JONES is distinguished by Gary Cooper, Loretta Young, William Demarest, Willard Robertson (who has published several successful novels) and Dan Duryea. This is a western, concerned with a case of mistaken identity which causes el Senor Cooper to dodge lead intended originally for a less wily frame. During the scene changes, Loretta Young was called upon to write a brief note to a friend. "I hate to do this without a dictionary at my right hand," she said. "I'm the world's worst speller." While she was in New York she wrote to her sister (several years ago) "I'm crazy about this town. You should see our wonderful siut, I mean, swite, I mean—well, it sounds like 'sweet,' but I'm not sure how to spell it."

To People who want to write but can't get started

Do you have that constant urge to write but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty said on this subject:

"There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Service Wife Secures Reporter's Job Through N.I.A. Training

"I had just finished N.I.A. Training when I saw an advertisement in our daily paper for a woman reporter! I answered the ad, was called in and given the job. Financial arrangements were adequate, and I was darned proud. With my husband in the Navy, I am helping keep our home and family intact."—Mrs. Mary L. Herring, 628 E. Center Street, Marion, Ohio.

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

NEWSPAPER Institute of America offers a free Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others. You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers. It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

LAUREN BACALL

spot for her in this play I'm doing?" But the verdict was no.

We can't tell you the name of the play, nor the role Lauren Bacall came that close to having, because we don't know. And anyway, does it matter? Fact is, probably there are any number of stories like that one, coming to light now. A lot of directors and producers who "just missed" being Bacall's "discoverer."

What was the formula . . . what is the secret of her success? You can't get the answer from Lauren herself, because she can't give it to you. She's still pinching herself and saying, "Isn't it wonderful? But really, I'm as surprised as everyone else!" You can't even get an "explanation" from Director Howard Hawkes; because though it was he—yes, you've undoubtedly heard how the story goes. How his wife saw the girl's picture on the cover of a fashion magazine, thought she "looked interesting," and suggested a screen test. Director Hawkes instructed his agent to write to New York for some information about the Bacall girl. There may, or may not, have been some misunderstanding about the instructions. In any event, instead of information, Bacall herself arrived in Hollywood!

Hawkes, being a man of long and successful experience, signed a good bet when he saw one, and put the ex-model under contract. But he was in no hurry about launching his "find," preferring to save her for the right part.

And then you might take the case of Hoagy Carmichael. It's again probable, as well as possible, that when Maestro Hoagy composed his new number, "How Little We Know," he didn't even know Lauren Bacall—much less, that hers would be the voice to plug his new tune on the screen. And again, too, Lauren herself wouldn't have known. Music was to her just something to enjoy, until one of her screen tests called for a bit of warbling, and what came out was a potentially fine singing voice, low and throaty—torrid is a better word for it, maybe. Like the gown she wears on the screen when she's singing the song. Bogart took one look at her in that dress, what there was of it, and said: "You won't have to sing much in that!"

Come to think of it, though . . . that Carmichael title does a lot of saying, applied to the gal it fits best. "How little we know" about Bacall, except that she was born September 16, 1924; is 5 feet 6½ inches tall, weighs approximately 119 pounds, and has eyes described as blue-green—and her next picture with Humphrey Bogart, coming soon, is called "The Big Sleep."

But speaking of working on the new picture, here's something that happened one morning when Lauren was on her way to the studio. Her small coupe broke down on the way from Beverly Hills (she lives there, you know—with her mother), and she had to hitch-hike over to Warner Bros. Not to encourage all comers, however, we think we should tell you—the coupe-trouble is fixed!

It's the first car she's ever owned, the first she's ever driven, and she says she's going to keep it the rest of her life . . . "just for sentimental reasons."

Our guess is that Missy Bacall is sentimental—and rightly so—about most anything connected with that first start which put her where she is today. Fortunate is too mild a word to express her sentiments about the chain of events that led to this climax. She regards the whole affair as one of those things that just couldn't happen—but did. And let's let it go at that.

THE END

Harper's BAZAAR

BLOOD DONOR SERVI

Lauren Bacall was destined for fame when she posed for this Dahl-Wolfe cover photo.

NOTES of Grace

Yvonne De Carlo, of the graceful gyrations, holds beauty in the most beautifully kept hands. She glamorizes her every movement with a kind of "fluid drive".

IT takes more to be a dancer than a pair of twinkling feet. Watch for Yvonne De Carlo, star of the Universal production, Salome — Where She Danced, and you'll see what we mean. Years of rhythmic exercise have trained Yvonne's every movement. Perhaps this is the most apparent in the way she uses her hands.

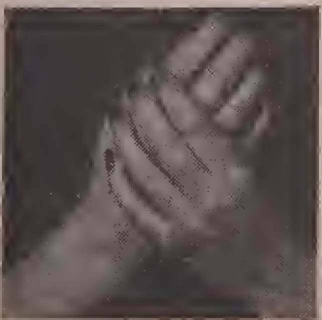
Sad as it seems, many girls spend many, many hours on face and figure and completely overlook an outstanding key to character—their hands. Yet a few tricks in time could spell the difference between charming grace and disgraceful lack of appeal.

Not every one is blessed, as Yvonne is, with slender, tapering fingers, stemming from fluent, fragile wrists. But in this age of individuality, shape and size need never be a handicap. Beautiful hands are those which reflect relaxation, expression and good taste (in other words—good grooming!)

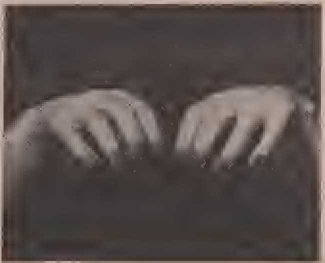
Yvonne, putting a sensible slant on an outworn slogan, believes in "grace through strength" and tells us that hands, to be attractive, must be worked on—and with. Primarily, the idea is to develop each muscle until it functions easily and smoothly. Like the normalizing of any other part of your body, that demands exercise. And, for your specific information, three of Yvonne's pet workouts are illustrated.

Next to knowing how to move, the most important thing is knowing when and how not to raise a finger! Though it may not be easy, force yourself to keep your hands in repose unless they punctuate your prose with punch.

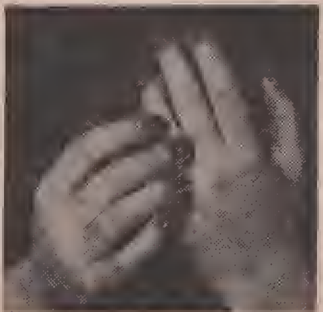
Whatever your hand type, Yvonne believes it can be the loveliest of its kind if you give it the proper external care. First, the hand cream or lotion habit. Before and after water immersion, before and after weather exposure, stroke the skin with cream or lotion to keep it moist and pliant. Two or three times a week, massage well with a rich dry skin emollient. Take a moment or two at bedtime to rub cuticles with a special softener. When you give your flexible hands the care they deserve, they're all set —for the flattery of a colorful manicure.



Hold hands up and clasp them tightly. Now "wring" briskly to stir up the circulation.



Cup hands on any flat surface and type on an imaginary typewriter.



Apply cream. Roll fingers of one hand between thumb and index cushions of the other.

Keep backing 'em up with War Bonds!

There's a day coming when you'll want to stand up and cheer the greatest victory in history.

In fact, let's not start it at all—over here. Let's leave it to the fellows who are doing the job—to begin the celebrating.

Let's keep bearing down till we get the news of final victory from the only place such news can come: the battleline.

If we do that, we'll have the right to join the cheering when the time comes.

kind of billing are you getting?" she wanted to know, obviously under the impression that both men were still doing one-nighters, or at best, split-weeks. "Any new gags in your act?"

Before either of the men could explain the activities in that obscure little town called Hollywood, the landlady continued encouragingly, "Jack, I saw you in a picture the other day. Yes, sir, one of those movies. Pretty good, too. That ought to do you some good with booking agencies. You just wait—before long you'll be playing THE ORPHEUM CIRCUIT."

MATURE DECISION:

When hunk-o-man V. Mature was a Hollywood Indian, few indeed were those fellow tribesmen who gave him credit for being psychic. Yet he must have some sort of pipeline to destiny. His great and good friend, Carl Schroeder, joined him in San Francisco for several days, but when Thursday night came and Carl stated flatly that he had to leave Friday morning, the Mature voice was lifted in protest.

Vic said it was silly for Carl to leave before Sunday. Carl said Business, Business, Business, etc.

Victor, loathing an argument that he can't win, calmly snatched Carl's airline ticket and tore it up.

The plane on which Mr. Schroeder would have been riding, except for his friend's violent invitation to remain in San Francisco, crashed within two minutes of the Los Angeles Airport.

SLIP UP:

Mrs. Pat O'Brien administered a prolonged scolding to her young son, Sean, dealing with 1) the virtue of cleanliness, and 2) the evil of misrepresentation.

A few moments later she overheard Sean's sister, Mavourneen, asking in hushed tones, "But how did Mother find out that you just SAID you took a bath, instead of really taking it?"

"I forgot to wet the soap was all," explained Sean.

CLUCK:

If you think Edgar Bergen has trouble with Charlie McCarthy, you should talk to him about Effie Clinker. This new character on the Bergen knee has come in for some hot criticism from her radio audience. She sounds too much like Charlie; she doesn't have the proper henny-penny personality; she sounds 'scared.

Mr. Bergen, growing more nervous by the broadcast, finally hit upon a solution: just before going on the air, he drank a cup of steaming chicken broth. The hot fluid relaxed this throat muscles, restored his confidence, and Effie emerged from his larnyx with the proper cluck.

LIEBESTRAUM:

Dana Andrews, living in a small town hotel while he was on location, was given a day off, so decided to sleep late. He was dozing fitfully when he heard a key turn in the lock of his room. He lay still as the door softly opened and a pair of presences hesitated on the threshold.

Perhaps, he thought, if he played possum he would be undisturbed.

Said one feminine whisper, "I never saw a movie star asleep before. He looks just like any other man—rumpled and beardish."

"But kind of handsome," breathed the second feminine voice. "Let's leave his room 'til the last, so he can sleep."

"Good idea," said the first. She tiptoed to the bed and rested her hand on an available Andrews shoulder. Shaking him gently, she explained, "We won't wake you just yet. We'll clean the rest of the rooms, then come back."

Then she rejoined her friend and—their aprons making a skirty rustle—they withdrew.

PROP CORN:

The prop man was puzzled . . . and embarrassed. When he had originally decorated the Christmas tree for the Noel scene in "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes," he had festooned paper chains amid the boughs, along with tinsel, cranberry strings, and threaded pop corn. The pop corn had been important because it gleamed snowily among the green boughs and was picked up eagerly by the black-and-white camera eye. Yet, after each take, there seemed to be fewer strands of pop corn. It was a mystery enough to beat the Charlie Ross case.

Col. Jimmy Roosevelt, Faye Emerson; an after-honeymoon evening at the Mocambo.

Bonita Granville ("Never Too Late") out dancing with Dean Harens ("The Suspect").

Any correlation between this fact and the identity of two members of the cast must be regarded as purely coincidental.

P.S. For three days Margaret O'Brien and Jackie Jenkins took no interest in their regular meals.

FOR LUCK:

It happened in Chicago, in a rather celebrated, very crowded restaurant. One woman, quiet, handsome, well-dressed was established in a twosome booth when another woman was seated across the table by a service captain, hard-pressed for space.

The newcomer was abubble. "I'm so excited I can scarcely stand it," she confided. "Guess who I just saw! You'll never guess, so I'll tell you: Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Taylor. Really! I was waiting at the hotel entrance when they came out—wait until my granddaughter hears that!"

The first woman nodded and smiled softly as she studied the menu.

The second woman went on. Miss Stanwyck looked just exactly as one would expect. Didn't she have beautiful eyes? And Robert Taylor! My, wasn't he handsome. She paused to ask, "Have you had a chance to see them?"

The first woman said, "Yes," and returned to the menu.

"Where? What were they doing? Did you have a chance to get their autographs?

The first woman said hesitantly, "I . . . well, I live with them."

Her seat companion's jaw slackened perceptibly, then the expression about her eyes changed. "Of course," she said placatingly, as one addresses the very drunk or demented. As soon as possible, she moved to another spot.

The first woman was telling the truth. She was Hollis Barnes, Barbara Stanwyck's close friend and hairdresser, and she had made the trip to Chicago with Barbara, when Miss Stanwyck went east to visit her husband.

POLITICAL PROPHECY:

Van Johnson, chatty and convivial character, was strolling through the Metro publicity department recently when he was hailed by Gloria Valdez, one of the switchboard operators. As Gloria had a few spare moments between calls, she had been writing to her girl friend, a student at Stanford University.

"Just write your name at the bottom of this page, will you?" Gloria asked, explaining, "this friend of mine is positively swoony over you—when she has time to be. She studies pretty hard, but when she takes a deep breath between chapters, she looks at your picture on her desk."

So Van, indulging in a little Gallup forecasting wrote: "Study hard and you may become President."

RESIGNATION:

The Dennis Morgan children have endured a winter of ailments. All three had colds, the older two had mumps, chicken pox, and measles. Stan, speckled, was lying in bed one morning, meditating upon the woes of childhood, when his mother entered the room with some broth. "Heavens," she said, "I believe that's a mosquito buzzing against the window pane."

"Leave it alone," counselled Stan wearily. "We might as well have malaria and have it over with."

GOOBERNATORIAL:

An infantry officer, overseas for two years, was talking to Bing Crosby in a shattered chateau one night. "I thought, when I was shipped out, that I'd miss women, steaks, and good music, in that order. Now that I've been out here I find that I miss peanuts, cokes, and women—in that order."

Bing shipped him a case of peanuts for Christmas.

BRASS:

Agnes Moorehead was a lieutenant-colonel of the WAC in Metro's distaff service picture now titled "There Were Three Of Us," starring Lana Turner. Each evening, when Lt.-Colonel Moorehead came home, she teased her husband, Jack Lee—who also works in pictures—by giving him orders. She said that she had placed their home under military law, hence was the senior officer in charge.

Then one night Mr. Lee came home and began to countermand his wife's orders. He had just been cast as a FULL COLONEL in "G.I. Joe," the film version of Ernie Pyle's book, "This Is Your War."

GOING, GOING, GONE—WITH TOP HAT:

Alexander Kirkland, Broadway star and recently divorced husband of Gypsy Rose Lee, returned to Hollywood to dispose of 12 rooms full of antique Mexican furniture—some priceless, some chili and beans. This announcement was carried in all metropolitan daily Los Angeles papers, of course, and one writing wag, noting that a number of handsome bedsteads were in the lot to be auctioned, suggested that the auctioneer placard the beds with the announcement, "Gypsy Rose Lee Slept Here."

The following morning Mr. Kirkland received an irate telephone call from the auctioneer who was to handle the sale. Mr. Kirkland would please to refrain from placing or allowing to be placed in the public print, such light-hearted publicity. It detracted, said the auctioneer, from the dignity of his profession.

starred in a picture being made by a quickie producer. In one scene the girl was asked to jump from a very high cliff into a pond. When the actress glimpsed the jumping point and the landing spot, she ran up to the producer exclaiming: "I refuse to make that jump. There's only a foot of water at the bottom of that cliff."

The producer assumed an expression of sweet reasonableness. "Of course, of course," he reassured her. "See, we wouldn't want you to drown."

CARRY ME BACK:

Joel McCrea strode into the Paramount Commissary wearing buckskins and a western shirt. An acquaintance asked, "What are you working in, Joel?"

"Picture called 'The Virginian'," he explained, amplifying, "it's really 'Buffalo Bill' with a Southern accent."

Joel, incidentally, owns several head of fine horses. But instead of using his own mount in the picture, he asked the studio to hire a horse for him. He figures that his old cowboy cronies who make their living by renting horses are entitled to his loyalty. He hasn't forgotten the times they supplied him with mounts in his early days before he owned a cricket, to say nothing of a horse.

HOW TO GET A BIRDIE:

Have you ever heard how Marilyn Maxwell happened to be signed to sing on Bing Crosby's Kraft Music Hall? It happened this way: When the celebrated golf match between Bing and Bob was to be held (added attraction, Mr. Frank Sinatra), each studio supplied a pretty girl to serve as caddy. Marilyn was sent from Metro.

Bing, spotting her, strolled over. Lighting his pipe, he said casually, "You're Miss Maxwell, aren't you? You see, whenever I go out on a camp show or a hospital tour, I meet dozens of G.I's. who have your picture tacked up somewhere, or who have seen you on one of your tours. They all want me to tell you hello when I get back to Hollywood. You know how it is: everyone who doesn't live in Hollywood thinks that anyone who does knows everyone in pictures."

"Thank you for all the hellos," beamed Marilyn.

"You sing, don't you?" asked Bing.

Marilyn said she did.

"You'll have to sing on my show soon," he said.

That was all the conversation that passed between them, but Marilyn's agent promptly followed it up—the job of agents—and you know the rest.

TIE THAT BINDS:

This is a story of noblesse oblige. Several weeks ago Bob Walker received a charming fan letter that enclosed a handsome tie. It was hand-blocked, pure silk, created by a famous cravat maker whose prices are higher than a turret gunner on a B-29. Bob, like most men, shrinks from the thought of getting ink on his fingers at a writing desk, yet he wanted to thank the generous and thoughtful donor.

So-o-o— he had a studio camera man take a picture of the Walker man wearing his gift tie, autographed the picture, and sent it off to the fan.

P.S. Under no circumstance does this department suggest that you send Mr. Walker swimming trunks. He hates water.

Ida Lupino, Anita Colby, Wynn Rocomoro, J. Moschio, R. Gordiner; party for L. Parsons.

MORE BIRD BUSYNESS:

In the home of Marcia Mae Jones and Lt. (jg) Robert Chic of the maritime service, a new Chic, male, weighing seven pounds.

In the home of the Busch's there was no beating around about the fact that Teresa Wright and Niven Busch had become the parents of a small shrub, a gentleman weighing seven pounds, four ounces.

In June, 1945, this column will have the pleasure of announcing the arrival of a beautiful bundle to Paulette Goddard and Captain Burgess Meredith, and

In July, 1945, the Rooneys will be three.

TAPS:

She used to come sailing into the RKO Commissary, her four-inch heels beating a merry tattoo on the hardwood floor. Between the tables she tripped, yelling at 70% of the occupants by first name. In the kitchen she selected her own luncheon, then carried the plate back to her place. When going from set to commissary or make-up department, she used to ride a huge tricycle, to which was tethered a doll carriage for the transportation of her two dogs, Chips and Chops. To see her scorching along the macadam—bright head shining, fringed dress flying, ringed hands waving—was a sight. Usually the dogs were barking a merry obligato. If an articulate observer had been asked to describe her in one word, he would have inescapably said, "Alive!"

Yet Lupe Velez, one day, found the life she had lived so eagerly, so fully, to have become an intolerable tangle.

Please do not charge the tragedy of Lupe Velez against Hollywood. The man whose refusal to marry Lupe caused her to take her own life, was no more a part of Hollywood than the itinerant who passes along the highway through Butte, or Dubuque, or Denver, is a resident of that city. Nor, it is imagined, will he ever become an addition to the town that will long remember the loss of so vivid and sparkling a person as Lupe Velez.

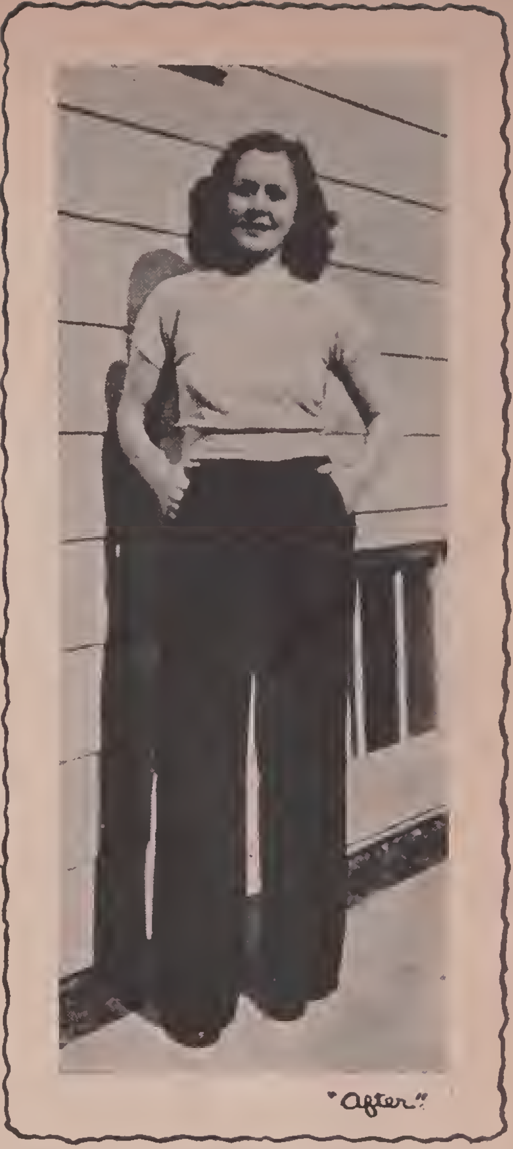
When John Barrymore saw his superb performance in "Oscar Wilde," he said of Laird Cregar, "That is the most gifted young actor I've seen in twenty years."

Equipped with great imagination and sensitivity, a flexible, resonant voice, and excellent cultural background, he had but one handicap: his great weight. He made of it, however, an implement of his craft. Size was an important part of his characterization in "Hudson's Bay," and who could forget the humorous majesty of his performance in "Charlie's Aunt." As the psychopathic detective in "I Wake Up Screaming," and as the paranoiac Jack, The Ripper, his bulk gave credence to his part.

But Laird Cregar, like all able and ambitious men, wanted to give his talent greater scope, and in order to do so he set forth on a rigid regimen of dieting. This was also necessary because he was to undergo surgery to correct hernia.

When, just before entering the hospital, he made his will and placed his affairs in order, he told his attorney laughingly, "I know this is just a formality, but it gives me the jitters."

It was not a formality. And, in the death of Laird Cregar, motion picture audiences everywhere lost a favorite who could have given them many hours of intense enjoyment. He was only 28, and—like so many others today—he was too young to die.



"20 POUNDS GONE- I'm SLIM again!"—says Mrs. Lois Cameron of Chicago, Ill.

Lois Cameron needed more energy to take care of her sturdy baby and she wanted to lose 20 pounds she had put on after her baby came.

"The DuBarry Success Course answered all my problems," says Mrs. Cameron. "I lost 16 pounds in 6 weeks; since then, have lost 4 more. I have so much vitality that I feel I have been reborn! And what a surprise for my husband when he returns from overseas and finds me slim again!"

As a result of years of swimming, Lois Cameron had developed an athletic figure. Usually, that means hard-to-lose pounds. But "eating as a beauty eats" and fun-to-do exercises reduced her weight from 136 to 116—just right for her 5 feet 2.

Her waist 3½ inches smaller, and hips 4 inches smaller, she now wears a size 12 instead of 16. Her skin is softer; her hair shows great improvement. Happy Lois Cameron says: "I'm living the DuBarry way of life!"

HOW ABOUT YOU? More than 175,000 women and girls have found the DuBarry Success Course a simple, practical way to lose unwanted pounds, gain vital energy, improve skin and hair, look and feel like a new person. Through the Course you learn to use at home the same methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon, New York.

When this Course has meant so much to so many—at home, in school, in business, in war work—why not use the coupon to find out what it can do for you?

WORDS OF MUSIC

Dick was Harry's vocalist.

Speaking of Harry James, is Betty Grable going to have another baby, or isn't she? The rumors have been flying around, but so far Betty has denied it to her studio, even though she has made no secret of the fact that she'd like to retire from the screen.

The story behind Frank Sinatra's new radio show for Max Factor is amusing. Frank's manager, Al Levy, was Xmas shopping in a Los Angeles department store and bumped into his friend, Factor, who was doing the same thing. They got to talking and Al told Factor Sinatra was parting company with his Vimms sponsor. Factor told Levy he was looking for a radio show, and he'd like nothing better than to have Frank, so they got together with "The Voice" the next day and made the deal. Quite the opposite from the usual long sessions of conferences, auditions, bickerings, etc. Incidentally, in the new set-up, Frank will be complete production boss on the program.

Eddie Miller is organizing a band and will probably debut the outfit in New York. Eddie was doing okay as a maestro before he went into the army a year or so ago. Since his medical discharge he has been working in radio in Hollywood. But his friends in the music business convinced him he should take up the baton once more, and inasmuch as he owns most of the old Bob Crosby library, whipping a new outfit into shape shouldn't prove too much of a headache.

Marion Hutton, who has been doing socko business in theatres, may be headed for California before long. The studios have been bidding for her, especially Paramount, who would like to team her in a film with sister Betty.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISK:

Victor: Swing and sway fans should be happy with Sammy Kaye's new record, "Don't Fence Me In," with a Billy Williams vocal, and the waltz, "Always," sung by Arthur Wright. "Don't Fence Me In" is the Cole Porter western hit.

Artie Shaw's first waxing with his new band is a goodie. "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive," the Johnny Mercer tune, has a vocal chorus by Imogene Lynn and "Jumpin' On The Merry-Go-Round" is an instrumental, highlighted by the Shaw clarinet and some fine piano work by Mike Marmorosa.

Dinah Shore offers "Auld Lang Syne," the old Scotch melody, and "I Can't Tell You Why I Love You, But I Do," from her picture, "Belle Of The Yukon." Albert Sack's orchestra and the Sportsmen Quartet provide the background.

Two of the tunes from the Broadway hit, "Bloomer Girl," are done by Charlie Spivak and his orchestra, "Right As The Rain," and "A Wonderful Winter." Both vocals are by Jimmy Saunders.

Martha Stewart makes her debut on the Victor label with "All Of A Sudden My Heart Sings" and "There Goes That Song Again." "My Heart Sings" is the lovely French ballad which has been such a hit in this country. You'll also hear it in Sinatra's picture, "Anchors Aweigh."

Vaughn Monroe is in again, with "The Love I Long For," from the musical, "Sadie Thompson," and "This Heart of Mine," from Metro's forthcoming "Follies" picture. Incidentally, Vaughn has replaced Marilyn Duke with a new singing group, The Norton Sisters and Mary Lee.

Lena Horne has two fine sides in "I Didn't Know About You" and "One For My Baby." Horace Henderson made the arrangement and conducts the orchestra.

The new Jerome Kern hit, "More and More," is done by Tommy Dorsey's orchestra, with Bonnie Lou Williams on the lyrics, and features the Dorsey trombone and string section. On the reverse side you'll find the old favorite, "You're Driving Me Crazy," with the Sentimentalists doing the complaining.

Duke Ellington is present and accounted for with two of his own compositions, "Don't You Know I Care" (Or Don't You Care To Know) and "I'm Beginning To See The Light." Al Hibbler sings the first side and Joya Sherrill the latter.

"Sweet Dreams, Sweetheart" and "Twilight Time" serve as a coupling for Shep Fields and His New Music, with Meredith Blake singing both numbers. Shep uses no brass in his band, claiming he gets all the effects he wants from reed instruments.

The Phil Moore Four have recorded "Together" with a Billy Daniels vocal and "I'm Gonna See My Baby," with Phil himself doing the singing. The Moore Four is really a quintet, being composed of piano, drums, bass and two guitars. This group has been a big success at New York's Cafe Society Uptown.

Elton Britt, one of the more successful of the so-called hill-billy artists, has a new twosome, "I'm A Convict With Old Glory In My Heart," and "The Best Part of Travel." Elton's record of "There's A Star Spangled Banner Waving Somewhere" sold over a million copies.

Decca:

Here comes Jimmy Dorsey with "I Dream of You," sung by his new vocalist, Patti Palmer, and "Magic Is The Moonlight." Patti and Teddy Walters share honors on this one.

The Andrews Sisters jump in with "Rum and Coca Cola" and "One Meat Ball," both novelty tunes and both done in typical Andrews style. The "Rum" side is a take-off on the Calypso manner of singing and "One Meat Ball" is all about a poor character who doesn't have enough dough to buy a full meal.

Fred Waring has a pleasing duo in "Strange Music," the haunting melody from "Song of Norway" and "Waltz in C Sharp Minor." "Strange Music" is done by Gordon Goodman, Jane Wilson and the Glee Club and the reverse side credits the Concert Pennsylvanians, with Harry Simeone at the piano.

If you like Hildegarde, you'll want "Who Are We To Say" and "Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye." Harry Sosnick's orchestra.

Charlie Barnet's newest is "You Always Hurt The One You Love" and

"Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall." Kay Starr, who for my money is one of the best of the band vocalists, sings both sides.

Columbia:

Kate Smith sings "Don't Fence Me In" and "There Goes That Song Again," with Jack Miller's orchestra.

If you want a different version of the latter tune, you can get Kay Kyser's record, with Georgia Carroll's vocal, backed up by "I'm Gonna See My Baby", with lyrics by Sully Mason.

Frank Sinatra's new platter is "I Dream Of You" and "Saturday Night" (Is The Loneliest Night In The Week) and it should sell a few copies. (Am I kidding?) Axel Stordahl's orchestra and arrangements, as usual.

"Evelina" and "Right As The Rain" are the numbers chosen by Frankie Carle for his latest disc, with Paul Allen singing both sides. "Evelina" is the catchiest tune from the "Bloomer Girl" score and lends itself very well to the Carle piano style.

I think you'll agree with me that Les Brown has the best band of his career after you hear his "Sleigh Ride In July" and "Robin Hood." Gordon Drake sings "Sleigh Ride" and Butch Stone, Les' vocal comedian, dishes up "Robin Hood."

Here's "Don't Fence Me In" again, this time by Horace Heidt's orchestra, with Gene Walsh on the lyrics, and "I Promise You," sung by Bob Matthews and the Sweet Swingsters.

Columbia has brought out two records by Benny Goodman's old band, which have not been released before. The first couples "How Deep Is The Ocean" with "My Old Flame," and on the second you'll hear "Fiesta In Blue," done by the big band and "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," with the Sextet.

JAM NOTES:

Bob Chester has broken up his band and gives agent trouble as the reason . . . Ray Eberle, who has been spending most of the time in California, is off on an eastern theatre tour . . . Also playing theatres are the Pied Pipers and June Hutton, the vocal group heard all last season on the Johnny Mercer air show.

Major Glenn Miller and his great Air Force band have been in France. Talk to any returning G.I. who has heard the Miller organization, and he'll tell you they have done a terrific morale-building job with their music. Johnny Desmond, who handles the solo singing chores for Glenn, has become the vocal sensation of England. In civilian days, Johnny was with the old Gene Krupa band. Incidentally, Mrs. Miller recently adopted a baby girl from Chicago's famed "Cradle" institute.

Peggy Lee, who jumped to fame via her recording of "Why Don't You Do Right" with Benny Goodman, has been signed to an exclusive deal by Capitol. Paramount has also been testing her for pictures, so maybe she'll come out of retirement. Let's hope so . . . Danny O'Neill, the popular Chicago tenor, is set for a big buildup by C.B.S. He has several coast-to-coast sustaining shows weekly . . . Helen Forrest has always been one of my favorite girl singers, but lately she seems to have changed her phrasing and picked up a southern

NEW PICTURE GUIDE

HOLD AUTUMN IN YOUR HAND (United Artists) is the story of one man's love of the land and the sacrifices made to keep his farm. It's a hard life and the land is poor, but Sam's deep love of the earth gives him courage to go on. Excellently portraying the leads in this Steinbeckish film are Zachary Scott and Betty Fields. Miss Fields, you will remember, made her screen hit as the flirt in "Of Mice and Men."

GOD IS MY CO-PILOT (Warner Bros.) Don't write this off as "just another war picture," because it's more than that. It's the history of American aviation and an air-happy kid who grew up with his planes, attached himself to General Chennault's Staff in China, became known as the "one-man air force". Dennis Morgan portrays Col. Robert L. Scott, author of the best selling book; Andrea King, his wife; Raymond Massey, General Chennault; and Dane Clark, another pilot.

THEY SHALL HAVE FAITH (Monogram) was produced by Jeffrey Bernerd, a far-sighted deliverer of movies with a message. Given here, through the formula of a simple love story, is an idea about a new system for curing infantile paralysis. Rather, it's a story about a doctor (Aubrey Smith) who's in the process of experimenting with the new method, and his daughter (Gale Storm) who contracts the dreaded disease, and the doctor's young assistant (Johnny Mack Brown).

IT'S IN THE BAG (United Artists) rates as the wacky picture of the year, and small wonder—what with Fred Allen, Jack Benny, Bill Bendix, Bob Benchley, Binnie Barnes and Jerry Colonna all bidding for laughs. Fred is supposed to inherit millions from his uncle, but instead gets only five chairs—which he sells. Then he finds that the money was concealed in one of the chairs, and from then on it's a merry chase with everything happening.

THE BIG SHOW-OFF (Republic) is none other than Arthur "Dagwood" Lake playing incognito as "The Devil," a vicious masked wrestler. "Blondie" fans can rest easy, as it's all a case of mistaken identity. Our hero is hindered in the wooing of the lovely songstress, Dale Evans, by the well-intentioned but disastrous efforts of their employer (Lionel Stander), the owner of the Blue Heaven Club. Anson Weeks' band (radio's "Dancin' with Anson") provides the music for the Dale Evans ditties.

THE BIG BONANZA (Republic) is a blood and thunder epic of the mining town of Nevada Springs, during Civil War days. Richard Arlen plays the wronged Cavalry Captain who cleans up the town and gets the gal.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES

Technicolorful musical ". . . it's inevitable!"

Fashion is no mere accident; style-setting represents the sum total of given influences. So says the "originator" of the upswept hairdo, the ballerina-length evening dress, the design with a drape. Loper's most recent addition to his fast-accumulating list of "firsts" is the Portrait Dress—the influence there comes from the Elizabethan period, when women first acquired corsets for the development of a small waistline figure and "exaggerated hips."

That hour-glass silhouette is coming back, Loper says. Tight corsets, too? Only for those who will want to go to that extreme. Considered design—namely, accenting and exaggerating the hipline—can do much toward creating the illusion of a small waist; dressing the figure, Loper calls it, instead of victimizing it.

For "Belle of the Yukon," however, the costumes he designed for Gypsy Rose Lee and Dinah Shore were "pure, authentic period." And they did have to wear corsets—Gypsy, Dinah, and the thirty-one other girls in the picture. Their midriff reducers were individually fitted, and cost from $150 to $300 each. (Gypsy's all had the distinction of being adorned with hand-painted lilies!) Important, too, to the success of those costumes, was that every girl be trained to use gestures and movements "to suit." They had to learn how to walk, how to sit, how to glide into a room "in character" with the clothes they wore. (You think that's easy? Try it sometime!)

"All costumes, particularly period costumes, have a source. My sources for 'The Belle'," Loper explains, "were Boldini and John Sargeant paintings of fashionable women of their time. I also took one or two of my ideas from Gainsborough. Let me point out that Parisian couturières today are showing the same influences—particularly with their new hat designs. Pure Boldini!"

But lest it be concluded that he's recommending the big Boldini-style hats for every woman of fashion who would follow the trend and be fashionable, Loper intrudes a quick and decisive "No!" Declaring that it's a mistake, often a sacrifice of what's most becoming for what's new and in style, he says: "My advice to the would-be well-dressed woman is to adopt what's comfortable; to establish her own personality and dress for it. Her selections need not be expensive; far more importantly, she should choose with discrimination."

Colored shoes? Never! Wonderful hats? Yes, but not to compete with the dress or the effect of the costume as a whole. Simple hats for elaborate dresses, or vice versa; there should be but one interest-center, the rest should be planned to complement not to challenge.

And having gone on the record with those specific do's and don'ts, the dancer-set creator-clothes designer (for he qualifies as all three) explains his basic theory of design as being a striving after complete unity, rhythm, a relating of all the arts. From working as an interior decorator, for example, he knows that the "dark dress for large women" principle is false and unsound. The very premise for creating the illusion of smallness is all wrong; for any decorator knows that a dark room looks larger, not smaller.

Born in Toledo, Ohio, where his father owned and operated a chic dress shop, Loper was educated in England (his mother was English). He returned to this country, shortly before the war, as a dancer—having toured for several years in England and on the continent, particularly in France. His clothes-designing career actually began when he started doing costumes for his dancing partner, Maxine Barrat. It was for her, and prompted by the wartime shortage of materials, that he created the ten-inch cocktail gown known as The Degas Dress.

As a dancer, he was a hit in several Broadway musical shows—"Very Warm for May" and "One for the Money," to mention two. Then he went into the Copacabana, taking charge of the whole show for that popular New York nitespot. He designed the costumes of, and did the choreography for, the Six Copa Beauties (June Allyson was at that time one of the six). And so successfully did he prove his "all arts are one" theory that now no one any longer thinks it so surprising.

In Hollywood, he started in "Lady in the Dark." He'd just finished his "Belle of the Yukon" and "It's A Pleasure" (the new Sonia Henie picture) assignments for International, when next came a call taking him back again to Broadway, for the staging of "In Central Park."

THIS WAS HOLLYWOOD

By Jane Wilkie

Jean Harlow, queen of platinums 10 yrs. ago.

ONE YEAR AGO: Frank Sinatra started his own air show. . . . Joan Blondell and Dick Powell came to parting of the ways, Joan went to Broadway to look for a play. . . . Donald O'Connor married Gwen Carter. . . . "Lifeboat" best picture of the month, with Tallulah Bankhead and John Hodiak. . . . Capt. Clark Gable dating Kay Williams. . . . Ronald Colman and Benita Hume infanticipating. . . . Ida Lupino proudly displaying clipping of Louis Hayward's action under fire in South Pacific. . . . Veronica Lake and director Jean Negulesco a definite twosome. . . . Rita Hayworth and Orson Welles perpetually denying rumors of an expected baby. . . .

FIVE YEARS AGO: George Brent, squiring Bette Davis, swore he wouldn't marry until 1943. . . . Adrian designed zippered diapers for expected baby. . . . Miriam Hopkins and Bruce Cabot an item. . . . Cary Grant stopped dating Phyllis Brooks in favor of Fay Wray. . . . Ty Power and Annabella planning to tour the country in their new amphibious plane. . . . Lew Ayres dating Greer Garson. . . . Jane Wyman married Ronnie Reagan. . . . "The Grapes of Wrath" best picture of the month, with Henry Fonda. . . . After dating Marlene Dietrich, Jimmy Stewart took Olivia de Havilland to the premiere of "Gone With the Wind." . . . Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier started romance. . . . Bill Powell married Diana Lewis. . . . The child adopted by Ann Sothern and Roger Pryor was taken back by his parents. . . . George Raft trying to divorce his wife with intention of marrying Norma Shearer. . . . Alan Curtis in love with Sonja Henie. . . . the Chaplin-Goddard marriage showed signs of going on the rocks. . . . Lana Turner had eyes for no one but lawyer Greg Bautzer. . . .

TEN YEARS AGO: Jean Harlow wearing white cellophane bathing suit in newly completed swimming pool. . . . The first film version of "March of Time" was made. . . . Bing betting on a horse named Bing Crosby—and it hadn't paid yet. . . . Cora Sue Collins, now married and estranged, was learning to read. . . . Colleen Moore fulfilled ambition of completing a half-million dollar dollhouse (this came under the heading of a hobby). . . . Rumored that Jeanette MacDonald had married Robert Ritchie. . . . Merle Oberon came to Hollywood from England to star in "Folies Bergere de Paris." . . . Mickey Rooney broke his leg on a toboggan ride, held up production of "Midsummer Night's Dream." . . . Dick Bartholmess returned to screen after year's absence. . . . "Naughty Marietta" best picture of the month, with Nelson Eddy and Jeanette MacDonald. . . . Elizabeth Bergner took Hollywood by storm. . . .

accent somewhere, which, to my way of thinking, detracts from her natural, free style. Helen was one girl who never needed any vocal tricks to be good, so I hope this is only a passing fancy with her.

"The Voice" has caught the sailing fever from his pal and arranger, Axel Stordahl, and together they have purchased a schooner . . . By the way, Frank Xmas-gifted his Nancy with a gorgeous Baum-Marten fur jacket . . . And Charlie Spivak played Santa to the boys in his band with beautiful gold identification bracelets. Singer Irene Daye received a gold pin and earring set.

Perry Como told me a funny story about his nine-year-old son, Ronny. Mrs. Como took him to the Roxy Theatre in New York to see his father in "Something For The Boys." Ronny seemed to enjoy it until Perry did a love scene with Vivian Blaine, whereupon he shouted out in the quiet theatre, "Mother! Look! Why is Daddy kissing that lady?" Mrs. Como took him by the hand and made an embarrassed exit. And Perry says it took a lot of explaining to convince Ronny it was all for the sake of the movie camera.

Georgia Gibbs has signed to do some records for Victor. She has had all sorts of offers for big things in radio, but the Jimmy Durante-Gary Moore show has her under exclusive contract . . . Movie scouts have been trying to talk Ray Herbeck into giving up his band and becoming an actor. Ray is one of the more handsome batoneers, looking like a blond Ray Milland . . . "The Trolley Song" is one of the few novelty hits you don't get tired of hearing. Here's hoping it gets the Academy Award for the best song written for a motion picture in 1944 . . . One of the top girl jive singers and one of the better known swing orchestra leaders are planning marriage, if and when they both get a divorce.

YOUR PROBLEM AND MINE

Dear Jane:

Although this may not seem like an important problem to you, it is very important to me and I would so like your advice.

I am eighteen and considered quite pretty, with good features and a good figure. However, the one blemish I have is a shadow of a mustache on my upper lip. This worries me nearly to death, and I have tried covering it up with make-up but it doesn't help much. I have become so self-conscious about this that I hate to meet new people or go out with boys.

Please help me.

Josephine B.

Dear Josephine:

Are you sure your ideas are not exaggerated by your own close examination of your face in the mirror every night? Many people have a slight down on their upper lip, and it is easy to magnify the importance of such a thing in one's own mind.

However, if this is truly a serious handicap to you, and can not be concealed by cosmetics, why not have a heart-to-heart talk with your family physician over the matter, and ask his advice. He may be able to help you, but I would certainly advise against taking such matters in your own hands and tampering with your face. Serious scars and blemishes can result from the wrong use of chemicals or drugs of any kind on tender skin. Remember this, and also try to think of the people, the occasion, or other impersonal views when you are with friends, and train your mind away from your own personal problems. Try this, and watch the results.

Yours,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I have been in love with a boy for two years, and he has been overseas for the last six months. We write to each other all the time, and he tells me he is really and truly in love with me. Just before he left the country, we had a quarrel, and he took back his fraternity pin that he had given me on my birthday. Later we made up, and everything is swell. But he hasn't returned the pin. I keep hinting about it in all my letters, but he just doesn't do anything about it.

I am so worried about this. Please tell me what to do.

Helen

Dear Helen:

Your problem doesn't really exist, as far as I can see. You say he loves you very much, and still writes you regularly. I fail to see the importance of a mere fraternity pin which he might even have lost, in the face of these facts.

There are so many more important problems in the world today. I am inclined to think you are thinking a little too much about yourself these days. Come on now, snap out of it, and make him proud of you while he fights for you.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I know how important it is for everyone to do her part these days, and I try awfully hard, just every day, but I can't seem to do much about it.

SERVICE WOMEN'S Guest House

THE Studio Club in Hollywood has long been a famous place. Starlets on small salaries have lived there for years, and many of the top stars of today are alumnae of the Club.

An elevated theatrical boarding house you might call it—consisting of a fine old building and shaded lawns.

The house itself overlooked an empty lot adjoining the property. When war came, some of the girls decided to utilize the lot by starting a victory garden. But before anything was begun, somebody had a better idea. Hollywood was crowded—servicemen were having to sleep in hotel lobbies. If the men couldn't find a room on their furloughs, what about the girls in uniform?

So the Club members passed the hat among themselves, and issued an s.o.s. call to their studios, the U.S.O. and the Los Angeles Military Housing Committee. Within a few months, there was enough money to start construction.

Now the lot boasts a house surrounded by trees and flowers, and a colorful patio in the center. The dormitory can accommodate one hundred women of every rank and service.

Each room has pastel walls, a double decker bunk done in old rose and powder blue. There are pressing rooms, full length mirrors and private showers. There is a grill room in bright yellow, for breakfast and light snacks. The patio, equipped with comfortable garden furniture, is planted with a lawn and palm trees.

Service girls coming from all parts of the country are likely to find themselves greeted by Ann Richards, Donna Reed, Louise Allbritton, Barbara Britton or any number of starlets. The girls in uniform say that the Guest House is both a touch of glamour and a sure cure for homesickness.

As a matter of fact, the Studio Club members are slightly covetous of the homelike atmosphere and complete femininity of the Guest House. But they're proud, and feel they have done a good job.

Although I work at a defense plant here in town, and I like my job and the other girls in the plant, my big problem is getting up in the morning. When the alarm goes off at six, I just can't make myself want to get up, and so pretty soon it is nine and then it is too late to go to work.

That isn't every day, but after three or four days of getting to work right on time, then this happens one morning and boom! there goes my efficiency!

What do you suggest for this problem of mine?

Theresa McN.

Dear Theresa:

I am surprised that you could even write that letter to me without being thoroughly ashamed of yourself and your apparent negligence and laziness.

Does it ever occur to you that the boys in fox holes and trenches don't like getting up at six any better than you do, that is, IF they have had the blessed opportunity of sleeping the night before? Do you think every serviceman and servicewoman in barracks enjoys reveille anymore than you do?

Blinded by your own selfishness, you are not even trying to think this problem through to the point where you will realize that millions of people today are doing these and other things they do not ENJOY doing, but MUST do to make the right kind of world survive.

If many people who work in war plants felt the lax sense of responsibility that you apparently do, it would be a sad day for our country and for the world.

Think this over.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My problem is that I can not seem to choose between two boys. Although I am in my middle twenties, I am not married as yet, but am more or less engaged to a boy who is in the Army in England. He writes me all the time, and is very much in love with me.

However, I have been going out with a fellow here at home who is in love with me, and I can't make up my mind which one is the right one.

Please help me.

Mary Ellen H.

Dear Mary Ellen:

I really cannot see what help I can be to you with this problem. You are certainly old enough to know your own mind and your heart, and have definite ideas of the kind of man you want to spend the rest of your life with.

It is only fair of you to think this situation over very carefully, decide on which boy you love, and then let the other one know your decision without hesitancy.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a senior in high school, and feel very bad over something that has come up in the last few weeks.

Although I have been very particular with whom I go around and what I do, someone has started spreading terrible rumors about me, and this is just about driving me crazy. They have absolutely no truth to them, and I don't know what to do to prove this and clear myself.

Please give me some advice to follow to help me.

Dear Katherine:

I can understand your concern over your problem. However, if your conscience is clear, then you really have nothing to worry about, and should let your friends realize this fact. Rumors are a terrible thing, and often are started by some perfectly innocent but misunderstood incident or conversation; but they can become dangerous and damaging to your reputation.

In such a situation you must prove yourself a big person, bigger than the persons who carry rumors, and by your own innocence you can cause the rumors to die a quick death. This takes courage, and I am sure you have it.

Sincerely yours,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My problem is a different kind, for it concerns ages.

I am twenty-one, and for the past ten months have been going steady with a boy who is not quite eighteen. I know this sounds awful young, but he really seems a lot older to me, and I like him far better than any of the older boys I have gone with.

Do you think it is unwise for me to keep going with him, with this difference in our ages?

Beverly T.

Dear Beverly:

In the first place, give this boy a chance to stand on his own two feet and mature, and then to choose you, instead of your being the aggressor in this match. A matter such as this needs very careful consideration and thought, especially if you are seriously thinking of your relationship with a boy almost four years your junior.

Time is the best cure for your problem, for as you both mature, this age difference will either estrange you completely from each other, or disappear as an unimportant factor between you. Some people mature quicker than others, so my advice is for you to keep your relationship with him friendly rather than serious for the time being, and give both yourself and him a chance to go with other people of your own ages, and see if this will change your feelings.

Yours,
Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

My problem is a touchy one, because it concerns a very serious thing. You see I am part Jewish, and I have fallen in love with a Protestant boy who lives in a nearby town. My parents strongly object to our marrying, and Mother says we will never be happy because everyone will always know the difference in our religions, and there will be nothing but unhappiness for us.

Do you think this is true?

Sincerely,
Maria B.

Dear Maria:

Your problem can easily be answered in one sentence: What are we fighting this war for, if not Tolerance?

It is true that older people still cling to old-fashioned ideas, and perhaps your parents have seen so much intolerance in their lives that they are only thinking of your happiness. However, marriage between two people of different religions, regardless of what kind, is a very common occurrence today, and certainly an accepted one.

However, your problem lies within yourself and with your fiancé rather than with other people. For you should have a sincere and serious understanding with him on this problem, both of you completely understanding each other, and then face the world as proudly and happily as any two people rightfully in love can.

Sincerely,
Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

My problem may sound trivial to you, but it has bothered me so much that I can't sleep nights worrying about it.

My husband, who is also eighteen, has taken to kidding me about his former girl friends. Not just light kidding, you understand, but making fun of the way I wear my hair because Dottie used to wear hers a different way, and the way I dress because Marge used to dress another way, and so on and on until I think I am going to go mad!

We have been married for two years, and both have been happy until he recently started all this, and I don't know what to do about it.

Anne McK.

Dear Anne:

I know this must annoy you, this habit of your husband's, but why not dose yourself with a sense of humor about the whole thing? Instead of being hurt and annoyed when he talks of the way his old girl friends dressed or acted, why not laugh it off, and tell him that's all well and good but THIS is the way Anne acts!

Also, perhaps you would do well to take yourself in hand and see if you can make any self-improvements. Husbands have been known to use this semi-serious method to let their wives know they are not the well-groomed girl they used to be. Perhaps a new hair-do would help, as well as a new sense of humor.

Yours,
Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I have been going with a married man for six months, and we both love each other very much.

However, he does not trust me at all, and is always fighting with me because he is so jealous of me. He is twenty-five and I am twenty.

I can't go on fighting all the time like this, and yet I can't seem to forget him.

Your friend,
Catherine M.

Dear Catherine:

In my opinion, what you need is to pick yourself up by the bootstraps, and start anew. Isn't it logical that he can not have complete trust in you since you go with a man who is married to someone else? Certainly this is not a very sound basis for romance.

Are you sure glamour does not enter into your thoughts about him? Assuredly, there is nothing glamorous about a single girl going with a married man. It is not normal, and so can not have a normal basis.

Make a project out of yourself—form new friends, join club circles, and give yourself a chance to meet new boys. Remember that the old "half a loaf" adage does not hold true in marriage.

Yours,
Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

Since you are married, I feel you can help me with my problem.

I am a divorcée in my middle twenties, and have had the invaluable help of an older man all through my difficulties with my husband, getting the divorce, and so many problems that came up at the time. He is a very wonderful person, although quite a bit older than myself, and now he wants me to marry him.

My problem is what to do—should I marry him because he has been so swell to me, even if I do not love him, or should I refuse him, knowing that I would not be happy and so I don't see how I could make him happy?

Please send me your answer or print it in the next issue of MOVIELAND if possible.

Bernice F.

Dear Bernice:

In writing me of your problem, I believe you have inadvertently answered it yourself. I can not read your heart, but your solution seems to lie in that part of your letter where you state that you do not see how you can make this man happy when you will be unhappy if you marry him.

No successful marriage can be built on a beginning where any unhappiness is involved, and your own heart apparently speaks for you in this matter.

Think this over carefully, and remember that it would not be fair to either of you to bring unhappiness into your marriage.

Yours,
Jane Wyman

DANE CLARK

with the theatre left him cold, for to this day he can't remember the name of the opus. The mingled odor of ham and greasepaint that usually lures all prospective actors found Dane indifferent and completely tempt-proof. It wasn't until three years later that the acting bug really got through his then-thick skin.

The arty grouppie he began taking up with (he still calls them "Bohemians") deserve some sort of kudos for their part in Dane's first stage role, no matter how left-handed their efforts might have been.

One night Dane was cornered by an enthusiastic actor of the group, who inflicted on him his version of a role in a current Broadway hit. Then he invited comment.

Dane was polite. "It stank," he said.

Now that actor is rare who can take criticism kindly, and this guy was just the ordinary run-of-the-mill ham.

"What do you know about acting?" he hissed.

"Only that if you're portraying a flesh-and-blood guy, you ought to talk and act like one," Dane said. "That's just common sense."

Five minutes later the group, having sided with the hamola, took up arms against Dane and challenged him to a bout with a producer, to show what he could do.

Maybe it's anti-climactic to say Dane got a small part in a Broadway show because of this challenge. But facts are facts. He read his cues instead of his lines, but, by applying that common sense, he landed a small part with Van Heflin in "The Night Remembers."

"And I kept hoping," Dane says, "the critics would forget."

This was the beginning that led to more plays and better parts. But every actor has his day and more often than not, his layoffs, too. It was during one of these periods of hunger that Dane tried radio.

"But if I'd been an insurance salesman," Dane remembers, "I couldn't have had a sweeter brush-off."

Because he was interested in ether whodunits, and because this brush-off routine was another challenge to him, Dane conceived the idea of giving radio Dane Clark in sugar-coated pills. He wrote four or five air thrillers and into each he wedged half a dozen parts that Dane Clark could play with his hands tied behind his back.

When he sold his first play he automatically sold his services as an actor, and from then on he was "in." He emoted in mysteries and soap operas and straight drama spots and he found himself with an occasional steak instead of the old and wearisome routine of ham-and. He kept plugging at radio until he was writing, directing and acting in his own air show. Then he went back to Broadway.

"Look," says Dane quickly, "this is not the recommended way of breaking into radio. It's just the way I do things—the hard way!"

A few more Broadway plays under his belt and he found himself wanting new fields to conquer. Hollywood offered a challenge, and he threw his carpet bag into a second hand jalopy

Sweethearts' Bridal Set

GUARANTEED SOLID STERLING SILVER

Both Only $1.69

Leading jewelers ask how can we afford to "give away" two such gorgeous rings for only $1.69. We don't expect to make money on this offer—but we do expect to make thousands of new customers. Both rings are dreams of beauty. The SWEETHEART SOLITAIRE is a flashing, brilliant, simulated diamond solitaire, about 3/4 karat in size, set in fabulously expensive looking, engraved genuine STERLING SILVER mounting. The SWEETHEART WEDDING BAND combines beauty, good taste, and superior value. Beautifully engraved and of genuine STERLING SILVER. Please understand that these rings are not plated, but GUARANTEED SOLID STERLING SILVER ALL THE WAY THROUGH! Why wear plated rings when you can now have fine jewelry at such unbelievable bargain prices? Just send name and address, together with ring size; say "I love to wear fine jewelry." Enclose $1.69 in full payment for both—nothing more to pay. If C.O.D., pay postman $1.69 plus postage, C.O.D., and handling fee. Wear 7 days at our risk. If not delighted, your money back. Fair enough? Write now!

and headed West, changing the tires every thousand miles.

A few months of kicking around the cinema capitol with just a handful of walk-on parts didn't do his morale any good and he began haunting the casting offices.

At Warner Bros. one day he played a hunch and walked into an office he'd been chilled out of the day before by the receptionist. He felt like a fool, staking his chances on a dark horse, but he went in anyway.

When he emerged he was tripping over clouds, and a contract crinkled comfortably in his coat pocket. Jerry Wald, producer of "Action in the North Atlantic," had taken a gander at the Clark phizz, had listened to the Clark delivery, and had signed him on the spot.

Dane got through that picture only because it was another challenge. But he'll tell anybody who will listen how much Humphrey Bogart helped ease him over the rough spots.

For a couple of months on the picture, Dane worked on a blazing oil tanker, breathing flame and coughing smoke for weeks. He still doesn't know how anybody saw his work through all the burning oil.

"I might have been Donald Duck," he says.

But Donald Duck or Dane Clark, his performance so impressed the brothers Warner that he was thrust quickly into "Destination Tokyo" with such cinematic vets as Cary Grant, John Garfield and Alan Hale.

"I'm sunk," he moaned. "I can't compete with those guys. And I've never done comedy in my life!"

How wrong can a guy be? Today Dane's still shaking his head over it.

"Gosh," he says. "The studio bosses here really know what they're doing. They insisted I do comedy, even when I told them I specialized in dramatic stuff. But they were right."

After Dane's performance as a lovable comic in "The Very Thought of You," his name was removed from the supporting players credits and he was given equal billing with star Dennis Morgan.

He's starred in "Hollywood Canteen," too, and has just been handed "This Love Of Ours," in which he'll co-star with Garfield and Eleanor Parker. None of this is exactly hay.

A chronic beefer, Dane is the most personally pessimistic guy in town. He has a whopping sense of humor (he drives a '29 Ford coupe with a flamboyant oil sign on the left door), but still his blood pressure soars when he's on a worry jag—which is every day.

He even broods about his I.Q., which the diploma he's stuck away in a trunk does nothing to dispel. "I read all the time," he says. "I belong to every book club in the country and my mailman hates me because he's getting round-shouldered lugging all that print. I keep up on all the current news magazines, too. But I'm worried. Something is wrong with my mental makeup. You know, I can't make myself read poetry! I just don't understand the stuff!"

Dane's a perfectionist, as far as his career is concerned. "I love acting," he'll tell you. "Love every bit of it. I'm so darned stage struck right now, it's almost embarrassing. I particularly like pictures because they appeal to such a universal audience, and have such power for good or evil. I want to learn everything there is to learn about my craft. I can do drama and comedy. I have written plays, and I'm working on a screen play right now. But that isn't enough. Next year I plan to go to classes in stage direction at UCLA. I feel that only when you know everything about your profession, can you do a real job of being a success. And that's what I'm working toward."

But don't let him kid you. He doesn't work all the time. He reads till two every morning. And if you happen to catch a glimpse of him some time sporting under-orb circles, blame it on Maugham—not Mocambo. He avoids night clubs because he doesn't need external stimulation. He plays squash incessantly. Mainly for fun, but partly because he has to work at keeping his weight down. Right now he's on a buttermilk-soft-boiled-egg-sliced-tomato-melba-toast diet.

Dane likes Hollywood and he likes the people in it. "Most of them are real guys," he says. "They look you in the eye when they talk to you, and they give you a good, firm handshake. People like that are okay. I don't care what stories are told about the insincerity of this town. I have found it warm and human. I'm glad I'm living here with people like John Garfield and Keenan Wynn and Gene Kelly."

These men are his best friends. You might know it. Nobody else can keep up with Dane's rivet-gun delivery, his constant stream of yatta-ta.

Dane likes to tell this story about himself and two other glamour boys.

"I got a call from Johnny Garfield one night," he says. "He was lonesome and blue because his wife, Robbie, was in New York. 'Take a walk and meet me at Schwabb's,' Johnny said."

Schwabb's, gentle reader, is the film colony's general store—a pharmacy holding court at a very busy intersection in Hollywood.

"I walked down to the corner and met Johnny. And then Gene Kelly came along. He looked kind of beat. 'My wife's in New York,' he said. 'I don't know what to do with myself.'

"We stood on the corner for a while and just talked. Then we had a coke and decided to call all our friends and see who was in and receiving. We waited in line to use the phone, but none of us had any luck. So we just stood some more. Pretty soon a girl in an open car stalled right in front of us, and we pushed her all over town, until we found a gas station. She never knew who we were.

"When we got back to our stand at the corner a couple of soldiers spotted us, and before we knew it we were putting on a show for them on the corner. Our audience got up into the hundreds—most of it made up of G. I.'s—and then a cop came and broke up the crowd for obstructing traffic."

Then there was the time a woman walked up and slapped his face because he wouldn't speak to her. "She'd just seen me in a picture," Dane says, "and she thought she recognized my face—thought she'd met me somewhere before. There was no answer to that one."

But there is an answer to Dane's screen career. Unless he gets prematurely gray from that daily worry-whirl, he's going to be way up on top of the ladder before you can say Bernie Zanville.

DOROTHY McGUIRE

taken with the man. And so, on July 18, 1943, Dorothy and John Swope were married.

A year later, when the Swopes celebrated their first anniversary, a friend asked, "How long did you know one another before you were married?"

Dorothy hesitated. "So brief a time that I'm almost ashamed to admit it," she said with a mischievous smile. "Only about five months!"

"Good heavens—that seems to be a socially acceptable time, almost a conservative waiting period in Hollywood," the questioner observed. "Mickey Rooney only knew his present wife a week before they were married."

Dorothy considered this solemnly. "But Mickey is so much shorter than I am," she pointed out.

This example of zany logic is typical of Dorothy McGuire and constitutes one of her chief charms. Her sense of humor is piquant, whimsical, and naive. So is the rest of her personality.

She is that rara avis, a dramatic natural. When she was 13, she marched down to the Omaha (Nebraska) Community Playhouse to try out for a part in "A Kiss For Cinderella." The Omaha enterprise was one of the few remaining stock companies; this particular play was to be distinguished by the return of one of the Omaha Alumni members who had made good on Broadway, Henry Fonda.

Dorothy promptly developed a king-size crush on her leading man, a state marked by starry-eyed breathlessness and an inclination to help her mother out after rehearsal by carefully putting the sugar bowl in the ice box and the butter in the linen closet.

On opening night, Mr. Fonda sent his pixie-ish leading lady a boatload of red roses with a card reading: ". . . with his amazing romantical mind—David." It was a line from the play, and David was the name of the character played by Henry Fonda—but Dorothy lived on that sentence for years.

Her reviews were blaring battalions of words, marching like be-flagged trumpeters across Omaha's drama pages. She read them with awe and a feeling of unreality. As far as she was concerned, the fanfare belonged to a strange girl. Dorothy's father, eager to strengthen this viewpoint, told her kindly, "Don't take this praise too seriously. You have a lot of studying to do and a lot of experience to endure before you can be a real actress. Just remember that critics are always nice to children."

After finishing grammar school in Omaha, Dorothy attended the convent school, Ladywood, in Indianapolis, then Pine Manor in Wellesley, Massachusetts, for two years. By that time she had concluded that she had acquired enough academic knowledge and she burned to learn about the practical side of building a career.

Instead of going to a dramatic school, or getting herself an agent, or doing any of the ordinary circuitous things a novice Thespian is likely to do, Dorothy scraped her saddle oxfords up and down Broadway in simple search of a job. She had heard

Without Painful Backache

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

that Jed Harris was one of the best producers on Broadway, so she saw no reason for directing her talents toward a lesser mark. She was admitted to see Mr. Harris, who—with the true flair of a born theatrical man—sensed the insouciant McGuire personality. He reasoned that a girl with so much presence had obviously enacted several Broadway parts. Her voice, her tiptilted face, her easy calm bespoke the professional.

"I've seen you before. Where?" he asked to speed the interview.

"I've been in lots of school plays," explained Miss McGuire helpfully.

Somewhat staggered, Mr. Harris gave Dorothy a script to read.

She clutched it as a radio heroine hangs on to her horrors, and started to read.

"Just a minute," interrupted Mr. Harris. "My hearing is perfect. Don't scream your lines."

That did it. Dorothy dropped the script and ran.

A few days later she tried out for a play entitled "Bachelor Born," and amazingly enough, won a part—the only American in an all-British cast. Somehow she had managed to submerge her midwest accent under a sub-layer of stage English and a top layer of quickly acquired Oxford accent. It was rugged going. Each day she rehearsed, and each night she rehearsed.

Plodding up and down before a mirror, listening with critical ear to her lines, she was overcome with apprehension. She cried. Then she fell asleep exhausted, only to awaken a few hours later to start the crying all over again. After a week of this she had a case of shivers to make a quaking aspen shed its leaves in envy. The director drew her aside, explained kindly that he thought she would be happier in some other part in some other theatre. Curtain.

After that she secured several small parts in plays that expired after their Broadway opening nights, then she won the job of understudying Martha Scott in "Our Town." In her mind's eye she enacted dramas in which Miss Scott should be convulsed with some obscure disease that caused her to swoon for three acts (while her understudy caused audiences to follow suit with approval of Miss McGuire) then to recover with no ill effects whatsoever. This dream proves two points about Miss McGuire's character: her sense of drama, and her essential tenderness. She wanted to succeed in at least one performance of "Our Town," but she didn't want anything serious to happen to Miss Scott.

This proves that right thinking will triumph over all. (Slogan.) Because Hollywood snatched Martha Scott, and Dorothy McGuire got the chance of a starry-eyed understudy's life.

As that play neared the end of its run, Dorothy read a new play that enchanted her: "Liberty Jones." When she tried out she was told that she needed a bit of seasoning. "Go on the road," she was advised. So she took another understudy part, this time with Julie Haydon in "The Time Of Your Life." She studied; she conferred with Miss Haydon, who is almost as brilliant an inspirational teacher as she is an actress. When, after her hard apprenticeship, Dorothy returned to Broadway as thoroughly seasoned as a Texas

CALLING ALL RADIO FANS

Did you know that with just a flick of the dial you can tune in on five stirring confessions each week?

Straight from the pages of REAL STORY Magazine come the poignant problems of everyday people—problems which you or your friends may be facing at this very moment. For instance, what about that young bride who lives in your neighborhood? It's perfectly obvious that she's money-mad and that she's trying to insill the same ambition into her husband. But will her scheming make or break him?

Well, you may not find your actual neighbor in "Real Stories from Real Life," but you'll meet someone who's struggling with a similar conflict. Her way of solving it can't fail to hold you spellbound.

So if you like true dramatizations well spiced with human interest and human emotions, make this program a listening habit! You'll find it on WOR or your local Mutual Network Station Monday through Friday, at 9:15 to 9:30 PM, EWT.

"PHOTOGRAPHY OFFERS WOMEN UNLIMITED OPPORTUNITIES"

Says Jetta Youngblood* Who Became Manager of a Photography Dept. Even Before Completing Her N. Y. I. Course.

"Knowing nothing about photography, I was amazed at how quickly I grasped every phase of N. Y. I. training. Even before graduating, N.Y. I.'s Employment Bureau secured a position for me as Photography Department Manager of Trans Lux Theatres—a chain of six news reel theatres. Not only did I earn an unusually good salary, but I know I can look forward to the future with confidence."

Photographic Opportunities Biggest, Most Varied Ever

Today photography offers women greater opportunities than ever, and a sound, substantial postwar future as well. N.Y.I. trains YOU at New York Studios or at home by mail for this fascinating field. Every step of your instruction personally supervised. Courses in Commercial, Advertising, News, Fashion, Industrial, Portrait, Motion Picture and COLOR Photography. Write TODAY for FREE book.

tamale, she learned that another girl had been given the "Liberty Jones" part. (A girl whom Dorothy greatly admired incidentally: Nancy Coleman.)

Disconsolate, Dorothy collected her shattered plans, and went to try out for another play, a confection called "Claudia." She didn't bother to gussy herself up for her interview; she wore a weary old sweater and matching skirt, a pair of properly aged saddle oxfords, her hair in a windblown tousle, her nails sans polish, and a tweed coat over one arm. After ten sentences with Rose Franken, who wrote the original stories and the play, Miss McGuire had come into her own: she was Claudia.

Latch on, men, and take it from there. The music goes like this: from stage "Claudia" to 20th Century-Fox' "Claudia." Hence to "Tree Grows," hence to "Enchanted Cottage." So much for the McGuire career.

While she was on tour with "Claudia" she discovered that she was earning enough money to have some fun. Her idea of fun was to roam through the shops in whatever city she might be, accumulating the treasures of the territory. In Canada she bought tweeds for a suit and a top coat, and a magnificent length of white silk pique. A year later that gorgeous length of gleaming white served an important purpose: Dorothy had it made into a wedding gown. She had a dressmaker copy one of her favorite afternoon dresses, a peasant style with full skirt, puffed sleeves, and a general air of insouciance. Then, while Dorothy was wandering through Mary Miles Minter's decorating studio one day, she glimpsed a length of ice blue brocaded satin. From that she had a peasant apron constructed, and wore it over her wedding dress. Fashion reviewers who covered the wedding were agog over such improvising.

While Dorothy was in Chicago she fell in love with a pair of rather large matched antique mirrors. She had them crated and sent to her hotel room. Then she added them to her normal baggage and carried them from town to town, gloating over them and wondering in what city they would one day come to be hung in an entry hall belonging forever to Dorothy McGuire. Sometimes she fancied that if she snatched one of the mirrors from its wrappings, she might surprise in its surface the reflection of her future. It was a thrilling thought.

When she reached San Francisco, Dorothy tramped the streets in her free hours and came to a conclusion: there was too much to see by mere walking power. She needed an auxiliary. So she bought a bicycle and wheeled joyously through Chinatown down to Fisherman's Wharf through Golden Gate Park, down to the beach.

When the company moved to Los Angeles, Dorothy supervised the shipping of her beloved bike. It had to be transported by taxi from the station to the Biltmore Hotel, where the cast was to live while the play ran in the south. There was a certain amount of consternation registered by drivers, doormen, bellhops, and others who had grown bored by the antics of actresses, but who had never expected to be asked to shepherd a bicycle. Dorothy made arrangements to park her transportation in the theatre.

Early the next morning she determined upon an excursion. She had heard, all her adult life, of Bullock's-Wilshire—probably one of the most beautiful shops in the world. She wanted to visit it, so she set out on her bicycle. She pedaled down to Wilshire Boulevard from the Biltmore (two and a half blocks), then blithely set forth on Wilshire. This is one of the busiest traffic arteries in Southern California, and it is traveled by motorists who are inclined to drive slowly past a pretty girl on a bicycle, looking at her fixedly to discover whether this is a press agent's gag or whether she really means it. The sun beat down, the hills lifted up, the miles stretched longer than the necks of the curious. But Miss McGuire, establishing some sort of an unrecorded record, finally reached her goal. She was too tired to wander through the acres and acres of resplendent bazaars stretching out in all directions from her weary eyes.

No matter what she had seen that day, it is doubtful if Dorothy's taste in clothes would have been much altered. As one might presume, having heard about her wedding dress, Dorothy's is an unique clothes sense. At present she has two dress loves, both to be worn at informal gatherings in her own home on Sunday nights. One consists of a red wool skirt, long, worn with a checkered shirt and an Indian belt. The other is a black velvet skirt worn with a yarn decorated sweater. She has been known to show up at Romanoff's in black suede sneakers, a brown tweed suit, and a yellow sweater. "The outfits I design myself," she told a friend laughingly, "should only be worn among those who know and love me."

Those who know and love Dorothy McGuire would arise as one knife and cut the heart out of anyone who dared criticize anything about Dorothy, from her choice of sweaters to her delivery of a line. The reason for this intense loyalty is simple: Dorothy herself is one of the most unchangingly loyal girls on earth. She has never forgotten a single person who has ever worked in a play with her, and that goes for the small character who passed through the last scene of the first act, crying "Fish For Sale." Wherever she goes, a crowd gathers. An admiring crowd that makes its own conversation, but listens with one ear always angled toward Dorothy, who is likely to bring forth a good crack.

Lately she has been telling about the letters she has received from her husband's nephew, who has never met his glamorous aunt-by-marriage. He wrote at one time, "I saw you in 'Claudia' again the other night. I've seen it several times. I guess you're a good actress, but you don't look very pretty to me."

He's wrong. Not only is she a superlative actress and a whimsical, great-hearted woman, but Dorothy McGuire is one of the really beautiful girls on the screen. Hers is a natural beauty. She doesn't need false eyelashes and a makeup department mouth to scintillate because her loveliness is that of the spirit. She glistens as snow glistens in sunlight, as tinsel sparkles on a Christmas tree.

She's Tinker Bell in tweeds.

In a Second He must Choose BETWEEN Honor and Love

THE young and handsome officer of the Royal Navy loved beautiful, blue-eyed, laughing Marguerite, but because of a foolish mistake, iron-willed, dominating, possessive Marianne travelled half-way around the world to marry him! Should he send her back, or should honor prevail? In a second he decided—and lived a secret lie for years. Haunted, tortured, still loving the girl he left behind, he fought against circumstances that would have crushed a less stalwart soul. But what of the wife who didn't know? And the sweetheart across the seas?

Winner of the largest literary prize ever offered (the $125,000 M-G-M Prize Novel Contest). "Green Dolphin Street," by Elizabeth Goudge, is a literary gem of the rarest brilliance, in a setting of such charm and beauty that every book-lover will want to wear it in his memory forever. No wonder it reached the very top of national Best-Seller lists almost overnight! "Another whirlwind has struck the literary horizon" said the Saturday Review of Literature. The regular price of "Green Dolphin Street" in the publisher's edition is $3.00, but now you can obtain a copy absolutely free with membership in the Literary Guild Book Club, as explained below.

LITERARY GUILD MEMBERSHIP COSTS NOTHING

Literary Guild membership is free—there are no dues or fees. Each month you will receive your copy of "Wings," the Guild's illustrated book-review magazine, which contains articles about the Literary Guild selection to be published the following month. From these articles you decide whether or not you care to receive the Guild book described. If not, you simply return the form supplied and no book will be sent to you that month. If, however, the Guild selection is one you don't want to miss, it will be sent to you on approval.

Save Up to 50% on New Books

Literary Guild books are selected by our Editorial Staff from proofs submitted by leading publishers long in advance of their publication date. Because the Literary Guild is the largest book club in the world, a huge special edition is printed at a tremendous saving in cost. This saving is passed on to members. The Literary Guild edition is manufactured at the same time as the publisher's edition, yet Guild members pay a flat price of only $2.00 for each Guild book accepted, instead of $2.50 to $4.00 for the same book sold at retail in the publisher's edition, to non-members! In addition, Guild members receive a $2.50 to $4.00 popular new book as a bonus for every four Guild books purchased! To be a "member in good standing" merely requires that you accept a minimum of only four Guild books a year out of the 12 or more new and important fiction and non-fiction Guild books submitted for your approval.

Send No Money — Mail Coupon

The convenience, the enjoyment, and the saving of about 50% of your book money will, we hope, prompt you to become a member of the Literary Guild at once. As a special inducement for joining now instead of "later" you will be sent—FREE—a copy of "Green Dolphin Street." As a new member you can start your subscription with any of the following recent Guild selections at only $2.00 each. See coupon.

Leave Her to Heaven, By Ben Ames Williams. (Publishers' Price, $2.50)

The Razor's Edge, By W. Somerset Maugham. (Publisher's Price, $2.75)

Anna and the King of Siam, By Margaret Landon. (Publisher's Price, $3.75)

Earth and High Heaven, By Gwethalyn Graham. (Publisher's Price, $2.50)

All publishers are operating under restricted paper quotas, thereby limiting the number of new members the Guild can service. Kotex
SANITARY NAPKINS
Containing a Deodorant
Kotex
Kotex

NOW you get this new protection for your charm, your daintiness—at no extra cost to you.

A deodorant is locked inside each Kotex sanitary napkin to help keep you fresh, lovely, confident. The deodorant can't shake out, because it is processed right into each pad—not merely dusted on!

There are so many important reasons why you should always insist on Kotex:

(1) Patented, flat tapered ends of Kotex mean no bulges, no revealing lines.

(2) You get lasting comfort, because Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing.

(3) The special four-ply safety center gives you extra hours of protection, prevents roping and twisting.

(4) Only Kotex has three sizes—Regular, Junior and Super Kotex—for different women, different days.

(5) And now this extra safeguard—the new deodorant in every Kotex napkin.

No wonder most women simply won't be satisfied with any other brand!

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins put together

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

Ho-hum! We've got spring fever! And a column to write!

* * * *

But this month we're lucky. America's most illustrious columnists are right on tap to do our job for us!

* * * *

Walter Winchell, for instance! Walter is the nation's No. 1 radio reporter. This is what he has to say about M-G-M's newest Technicolor hit: "NATIONAL VELVET will be hard to match all year long for the tops in entertainment!"

* * * *

And our very good friend, "Lolly"—Louella Parsons, the nationally known Hollywood columnist. For her money, "NATIONAL VELVET is tops in entertainment!"

* * * *

Then there's that distinguished duo, Bosley Crowther of the "New York Times" and Howard Barnes of the "New York Herald Tribune", who tell you they have both selected NATIONAL VELVET as "one of the ten best pictures of the year!"

* * * *

And that's not all! We've got millions of 'em! We mean those other well-qualified critics—the people who braved rain and sleet and snow (some of them standing on lines four blocks long) to smash all box-office records at Radio City Music Hall, the world's largest theatre!

* * * *

And just for your record, NATIONAL VELVET is a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture in Technicolor, based on Enid Bagnold's novel. Mickey Rooney is the star, supported by Donald Crisp, Elizabeth Taylor and Anne Revere. Other roles are portrayed by Angela Lansbury, Jackie Jenkins, and Arthur Treacher. A Clarence Brown production, the picture was directed by Clarence Brown and produced by Pandro S. Berman. Theodore Reeves and Helen Deutsch wrote the screen play.

This is Elizabeth Taylor. She's definitely the star-find of the year, says every critic.

* * * *

Yes, sir, we have a hit on our hands! It looks as though March will come in like a lion—as usual, an M-G-M lion!

—Leo

P.S.—Keep your eyes open for "Keep Your Powder Dry!" Yes, and another picture you'll want to see is "The Picture of Dorian Gray!"

By FREDDA DUDLEY

JUNIOR JIVE:

Two of the happiest people in Hollywood at present are pretty, vivacious Tess Bendix and that sterling actor to whom she is married, William. If an innocent bystander stands by for more than 20 seconds with either of them nowadays, he will hear paens of praise for the new Bendix daughter, Stephanie. She was flown, a gurgling infant, to Los Angeles to be adopted by the Bendix family, and she is now, and we quote, "The prettiest, smartest, cutest, best behaved . . ." If this gives you the idea that Bill, Tess, and Lorraine (their 15-year-old daughter) approve of the new addition—you're hep.

Elyse Knox and Lt. Tommy Harmon have announced that their junior is due in July.

Paulette Goddard is slowly recovering from the heartbreaking disappointment of losing her child.

Mystery story: She was young, pretty, blonde and sparkling-eyed. She entered the infants' section of an exclusive Hollywood shop and placed an extensive order. Puzzle is—was she ordering the beginnings of a layette for herself, or as she laughingly announced later, for a friend? The girl in the case was Faye Emerson Roosevelt.

THE UNINVITED:

Earnestly desiring that her wedding should be the dignified, solemn event that every girl dreams of, instead of the mad carnival that a movie church wedding causes among fans, Veronica Lake gladly accepted the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Gardner to have the ceremony performed at their home. It is a beautiful house, facing gracious lawns and protected by grilled iron gates, entrance through which was regulated by a police guard.

Veronica supplied the officers with her entire guest list and only those persons enumerated thereon were admitted. All was orderly; all was peaceful. Then a perplexed officer came running up the driveway, begged to talk to Miss Lake, said that an irate gentleman named Judge Charles Griffin was at the gate, excluded and pretty irked about it. Veronica clapped a hand to her forehead, remembered that he was to perform the marriage ceremony, and asked that he be shown every courtesy, including an apology.

A few moments later the same officer returned, something homicidal in the depths of his eyes. "And now," he announced, "there is a guy down there who keeps laughing fit to split his sides. Says his name is Andre de Toth and that the wedding can't even start until he gets here because he's the groom. How about that?"

A blushing bride admitted that the other name she had omitted from her guest list was that of her intended husband. Excuse it, please.

MATRON:

Cutest pair of newlyweds in town is Dick Crain and Kay Morley, who announced—during the Christmas holidays—that they had been secretly sealed since November 14. Theirs was no spantaneous grande passion, breaking into tumult after two days, as they had gone together steadily for 18 months. They had grown to know one another very well; understood one another's viewpoints, and thoroughly respected one another's ambitions. Yet, like all newlyweds, they continued to check one another in an effort to maintain the perfection of their happiness.

"There's one thing," said Dick one night, "that I think we should discuss. It's that black satin dress of yours. The one with the deep V neck and the slinky body lines. It was all right for you to wear before you were married, but now that you are a matron I think it is a little too sensational and revealing. I think you should give it away."

She did.

RIFTINGS:

Martha O'Driscoll filed suit for divorce against Commander Richard D. Adams, although she was well aware of the fact that the case cannot be resolved without her husband's consent, an agreement that he was reluctant to give. Those who know Miss O'Driscoll and her husband believe that this is another of those difficult situations brought about by the clash of careers. It is pretty tough for a senior naval officer to maintain his prescribed Navy aloofness, yet to be photographed with his beautiful wife at the Laddie Boy, just returned from a tour of Army hospitals, and 21-months-old Alana.

Mrs. Chas. Boyer (Pat Patterson) and Ronald Colman, at the banquet given to honor Pierre Blanchar, head of the Committee of Liberation for Motion Pictures in France.

night clubs where she must appear in order to further her career. It is also difficult for a non-professional person to understand the eagerness of a studio to have one of its younger stars be seen, properly escorted, about town. One of Martha's escorts has been easy-going, genuine, likeable Robert Walker—a fact that has been publicized by columnists. That Martha's dates were entirely friendly, comradely affairs might be regarded by a doting husband as fact—but he still might not like it. Perhaps, when Martha returns from her overseas U.S.O. tour, this rift will be patched up.

The spontaneous combustion marriage by airplane has long been an accepted modus operandi in Hollywood, but lissome Donna Reed (remember her in "The Human Comedy") recently reversed the procedure by flying to Juarez to obtain a divorce from William Tuttle, the make-up man she married January 30, 1943.

EMERGENCY

John Dall, whom you will see opposite Bette Davis in "The Corn Is Green," has just been made a star at Warners. To commemorate the event, he was briefing friends on his rocky road to recognition.

When he first came west from New York he secured what he considered to be a most attractive house and settled down to await a call from Warners, putting him to work. After he had moved in, he learned that the three previous owners had (1) been killed in a plane crash; (2) been murdered; (3) committed suicide.

People said commiseratingly, "John, you'll never have good luck as long as you live in that hoodooed home. Find another place to live." Haha. Try to find a vacant house, apartment, sty, or piano box. So John continued to live with other persons' memories, and wonder if he had become merely that to Warner Brothers.

Came a day when his telephone rang and a secretary said peremptorily, "Mr. Dall? Warner Brothers, Mr. Etcetera's office calling. Will you please see us at your earliest convenience?"

Mr. Dall, dry-throated, said he would. He took a bus, a streetcar, and a taxi. He arrived at the prescribed office disheveled and breathless, but he had made it in record time. The secretary beamed on him. "How prompt you are," she applauded. "I just wanted to give you an Identification Card. It will allow you to enter the lot through the motor gate whenever you wish."

HELP:

The doctor explained to June Allyson that this particular boy, in the ward she was intending to visit, had lost an arm and a leg in the South Pacific. He was a sensitive man, his spirit as seriously wounded as his body. "No one has been able to get him to talk, much less to smile," the doctor said. "It would help us to rehabilitate him if he would only cooperate by showing some interest."

So June, making no point of it, but coming to the boy naturally as she made her rounds of the beds, knelt beside him so that her eyes were on a level with his. He stared at her for a second, then turned his head toward the opposite wall.

June didn't move. The minutes ticked away. Two, three, four, five. Slowly the boy's head inched back. "Why are you bothering with me?" he demanded in a furious whisper. "What do you want here?"

June glanced quickly over her shoulder, then whispered in reply, "To tell you the

Be honest, now!

Be honest, now! Have you ever really investigated Tampax? Have you discussed it with women who are using it? Have you asked about Tampax at drug stores or notion counters? Do you understand the principle of internal absorption for monthly sanitary protection?

Tampax has grown to be an important name in feminine circles and to avoid confusion we want to give a clear, concise statement concerning it.... Invented by a doctor, Tampax is worn internally. It is specially designed for this purpose—made of pure surgical cotton compressed and firmly stitched. It comes in neat applicators for dainty insertion—your hands need not even touch the Tampax. When in place the Tampax is "conforming" in shape—wearer cannot feel it.

No belts, pins or external pads. No bulges or ridges caused in clothing. No odor, no chafing. Quick to change. Easy disposal. Sold at drug and notion counters in 3 sizes: Regular, Super, Junior. Whole month's supply will go into purse. Economy Box contains 4 months' supply (average). Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

truth, I've been walking these wards until my feet are killing me. I thought that if I could kneel here for a few minutes, I could take some of the pressure off my arches. To make it look as if I'm not stalling, could you sort of talk to me?"

The boy studied June's eyes, her earnest, tip-tilted face, finding in her expression something reassuring. "Sure," he said. "Ah—what shall we talk about?"

June asked where his home was, where he had been in school . . . all in whispers. She told him something about herself, about working in pictures. "Something crazy happened on the set the other day," she said, and told a studio gag. It was a silly, but the boy chuckled.

"I'm rested now—thanks a lot for helping," June said, winking, and moving on to the next bed.

When she had finished her round of the ward, she closed the door and was walking down the corridor when the doctor intercepted her. "Thanks," was all he said. It was more eloquent than a wordy ovation.

FURTHER VITAL STATISTICS

Amalgamations:

Alexander Knox (the celebrated "Wilson") and Doris Nolan delighted their friends by marrying. This story may be apochryphal, but it is worth repeating: seems that a wag wired the newlyweds, in defiance to the anti-congratulation edict of Western Union, "Have always approved your merger. Glad to see it become official and final." To which the new wife of Alexander answered, "Smart girl recognizes Opportunity when it Knox."

Leslie Brooks recently married Donald Shay, who was honorably discharged from the Marine Corps after serving two rugged years in the South Pacific. Leslie, her aunt and her cousin have made up one of the happiest families in Hollywood, so someone suggested that the trio would now be separated. "Nope," said Leslie. "Our trio needed a baritone, so I inducted one."

Joyce (Janie) Reynolds had to come to Hollywood to meet a man from Houston, one Lt. Robert Lewis. When they met, about a year ago, the first thing Joyce said to the marine lieutenant was, "Aren't you from the south somewhere?" Bob said he was from Houston, and mentioned his address. "My laaand," said Joyce in her best Texas drawl, "you and I grew up practically as neighbors!" That did it. They spent that evening, and dozens of others, talking about horses, bluebonnets, Taixus in general, and the people they knew in common. By the time Bob went overseas, he and Joyce hadn't exactly announced their conclusion that there must be something cosmic in two Texans meeting, so far from home, but the belief was deep in their eyes. An exchange of pictures and constant letters strengthened the belief. So—it was a double ring ceremony at the fern-draped Westwood Community Church.

GIG-GLE

When Gig Young crossed the Equator for the first time, his shipmates, who had on some previous voyage become Shellbacks, gave him a thorough initiation, one phase of which included the shaving of his head.

By the time he returned to Hollywood in January, his hair had grown about an inch over his entire head, giving him a strong resemblance to that terra-cotta Paddy that, when planted to grass, fetches forth a green thatch.

He hastened out to Warners' for a visit

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

AT COLUMBIA:

A THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS in Technicolor is now in its second month of shooting. If you have seen "A Song To Remember," Cornel Wilde's first starring vehicle, you will be destroying your more valuable fingernails to see his work in this new picture. Evelyn Keyes, Adele Jergens, and Gus Schilling are also in the cast.

THE FIGHTING GUARDSMAN is also in its second month of production with John Loder, Willard Parker, Ted Donaldson (Have you seen him in "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn?"), and Anita Louise.

TEN CENTS A DANCE is just what the title indicates—the story of a hostess whose fox trot is her fortune—with Jane Frazee, Jimmy Lloyd and John Calvert.

OVER 21 is the picture in which Alexander ("Wilson") Knox was working when he married Doris Nolan. Irene Dunne is his love interest in the picture; Charles Coburn and Jeff Donnell are in full charge of the comedy department. Those who have seen Knox as Wilson and think of him as a sedate, middle-aged man are in for a delightful surprise when they find Alex to be a pin-up boy.

KISS AND TELL is that picture you will see widely publicized by the fact that, in it, Shirley Temple gets her first kiss (it says here in small type.) This flicker is being made from a slightly-revamped stage script involving Walter Abel, Katherine Alexander and Darryl Hickman.

BOSTON BLACKIE BOOKED ON SUSPICION is another in the Chester Morris series. If you want to hear a man hailed by a million friends, you should drop into Romanoff's some late afternoon when Chester Morris also appears. What an ovation!

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

GUEST WIFE is still being shot under that label although everyone thinks it will be changed, which would be a pity. Claudette Colbert, Don Ameche, Dick Foran and Charles Dingle are having the time of their lives making the picture. Don and Dick repeatedly gang up on Colbert to rib her. Last instance was criticizing the handsomely tailored gray slacks she wears to and from the studio. Boys ventured criticism that they knew a tailor who would do much better by her. After about an hour's buildup, they said with a sigh, "Of course, this man charges $350.00 per garment for his work." Miss Colbert is working on a fitting reprisal.

PARIS—UNDERGROUND is the dramatization of Etta Shiber's Book Of The Month Club novel, which you probably read. Constance Bennett, Gracie Fields, Kurt Krueger are the principals.

AND THEN THERE WERE NONE is another whodunit with Barry Fitzgerald, Walter Huston, Louis Hayward (his first picture since he received his medical discharge from the Marine Corps), Sir C. Aubrey Smith, Judith Anderson, and Mischa Auer. Don't miss this one. It will also be marqueed as "Ten Little Indians."

Movieland's New Picture Guide

THE ENCHANTED COTTAGE (RKO-Radio), a remake of the movie that originally starred Richard Barthelmess and May McAvoy, in 1924; taken from a play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, written at the suggestion of the British government to provide entertainment with a morale lift for England's returned soldiers. (The play was produced first in London, in 1922, and again a year later, on Broadway, with Katharine Cornell.) The story is essentially the same in the new version, except that the time has been advanced to the present, and the locale is switched from England to Mass.

Robert Young plays the Oliver Bradford role—a soldier returned from the war, wrecked in body and spirit; Dorothy McGuire is Laura Pennington, a poor plain girl made beautiful by the miracle of her love for Bradford, which blooms in the Enchanted Cottage. Herbert Marshall is the blind pianist-composer, John Hillgrove, who tells this strangest love story in a tone poem the Enchanted Cottage couple inspired; Hillary Brooks, the financée left waiting for Bradford when he went off to the war. And add Mildred Natwick, Spring Byington, Richard Gaines and promising newcomer Alec Englander to that cast-as-mentioned, and as collected by Producer Harriet Parsons. There are no war scenes, no speeches or preachments about rehabilitating returned warriors—but it's all there, and vividly, "present-day real."

THE FIGHTING LADY (20th Century-Fox) is the magnificent documentary record, in technicolor, of "Our Navy" aboard an aircraft carrier. Here is our war in the Pacific. These are actual battle pictures of the historic engagements off Marcus, Kwajalein, Truk, Guam, Saipan, Tinian, etc. Not only do we see burning planes land precariously on "The Fighting Lady's" deck, but we get a complete picture of life below decks—the butcher, the baker, and the shoemaker are shown doing "their jobs," all hands joining to keep their ship ready for action against the enemy. Contributing to a "creditable" job are Lt. (J.G.) Robert Taylor, narrator, Commander Edward J. Steichen, in charge of the photography, and the unnamed 3,000 boys who fly, fight and make their home on "The Fighting Lady."

A GUY, A GAL AND A PAL (Columbia) is the story of lovely Helen Carter (Lynn Merrick) who's trying to get to Washington, D. C. to keep a date-to-get-married. Sharing and sometimes causing her problems in making the trip—we all know by now that it's no joke, the advice that warns "Don't Travel Unless Necessary"—is her ten-year old nephew (Ted Donaldson). And the Guy (Ross Hunter) is a Marine hero, enroute to collect a medal from the President. We say it's sentimental stuff, sold on the adventure plan, and good fun.

THE HORN BLOWS AT MIDNIGHT (Warner Bros.) Imagine Jack Benny in Heaven! Imagine Guy Kibbee, as Chief of Small Planet Management, designating Angel Benny to destroy Earth by one toot of his horn. Imagine Alexis Smith, a lady angel with a crush on Jack. Then imagine the Hotel Universe on Earth, where Jack goes to blow his horn, but is deterred by Fallen Angels John Alexander and Allyn Joslyn.

When no horn-blowing is forthcoming, Jack's angel love comes to Earth to find out what happened, and when she doesn't return the Chief descends to find her.

Throw all these wacky whimsicalities into Heaven and Earth, and it'll come out—well yes, just imagine!

MOLLY AND ME (20th Century-Fox)—Gracie (Pride of England) Fields and Monty (the Beard) Woolley are together again—which is what a lot of fans have been very much wanting, after the pair scored such a hit teamed in "Holy Matrimony."

As Molly Barry, Gracie is an actress out of a job and anxious to eat. She invades the home of John Graham (Monty Woolley), as his housekeeper. Roddy McDowall is the unloved son of the irascible but absent-minded Mr. Graham, and Reginald Gardiner gets in some good work as the drunken butler in the case, by name of Peabody.

Gracie has a singing chore in this one—and how she puts those songs across!

HAVING WONDERFUL CRIME (RKO-Radio) introduces a new team of amateur sleuths "a la Thin Man." The prescription here is Carole Landis in the role of the madcap mixer-upper, George Murphy, her newly wed hapless husband, and a be-derbied Pat O'Brien as the "brain" of the trio. Lenore Aubert provides the a-loore. It all scrambles around the missing trunk of "The Great Novel." Lots of mad shenanigans and action a-plenty.

THE GREAT JOHN L (United Artists release) is Bing Crosby's first offering as a producer; it's also the first starring role for a once-upon-a-time movie extra, Greg McClure. Barbara Britton is Kathy Harkness, Champ Sullivan's first and real love; Linda Darnell is Anne Livingstone, musical comedy star who loves the fighter and marries him, hoping to give him happiness in measure equal to his success and popularity. That she fails is not for lack of trying; and that this is one of the most heartbreaking love stories ever told—it's a fact. For fight fans only? Certainly not! Though it traces the personal and professional-life career of one of the greatest names in American ring history, accurately, completely and sympathetically.

PAN-AMERICANA (RKO-Radio) rates raves for being so authentically just what the title claims. Four members of the editorial staff of a big New York picture magazine (Phillip Terry, Audrey Long, Eve Arden and Want to be as svelt and shapely as starlet Dorothy Malone? Then take to the same kind of sculpturing session and watch the bulges melt away! These routines take off weight. What's more—they take it off in the right spots.

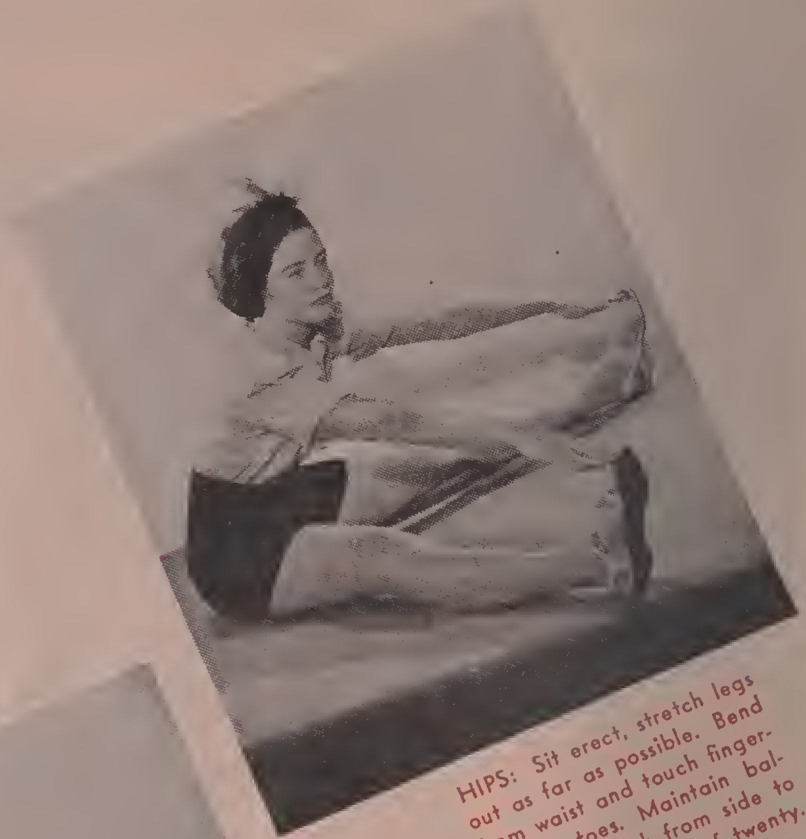
BY SHIRLEY COOK, BEAUTY EDITOR

UNLIKE the perfect marriage, the perfect figure is often made in Hollywood. According to Dorothy Malone (whom you'll be seeing in Warner Bros. "The Big Sleep"), a proper plan for paring proportions must make perfect—and practical—sense.

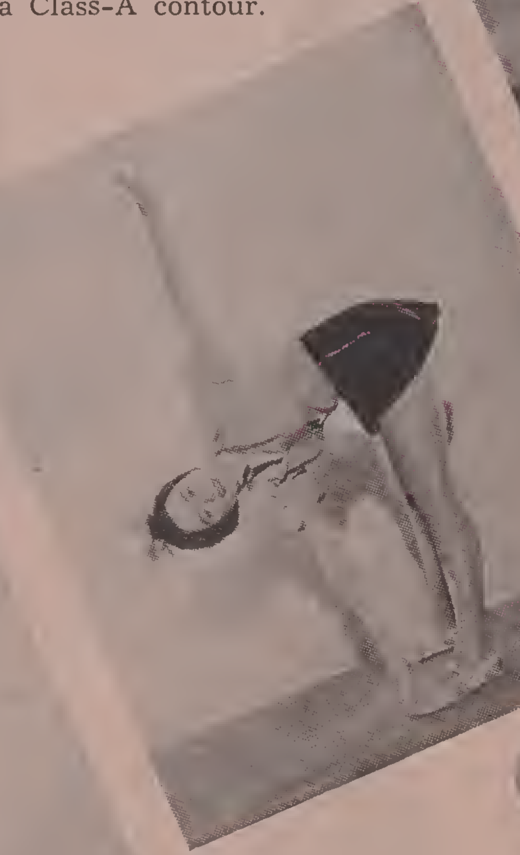
First of all, it improves on nature. That's because nature has a way of letting us slip into bad habits. It's natural, and fun, to stop for a sundae or a hamburger (and to indulge in a fancy dessert). But it's more fun to have a slim, straight figure, one that can slip with ease into a small-size and fashionable creation. So, first of all, we omit the unnecessary and weight-building calories. Meals are limited to a well balanced three. They are built around nutrition rather than negligence.

Diet can diminish pounds. Exercise takes off those extra unwanted inches and unlovely bulges that detract so from the appeal in appearance. Either, to be successful, must be consistent.

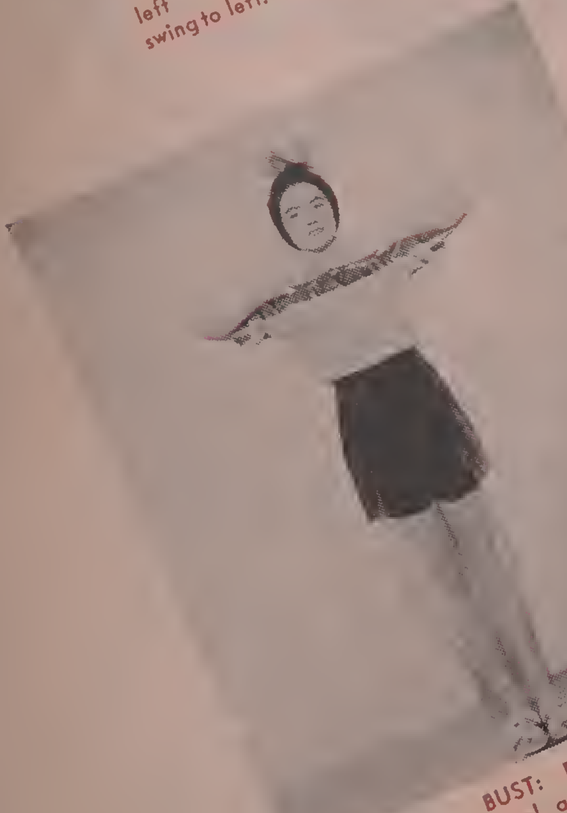
To be a Warner wonder, then, or a reasonable facsimile, combine sensible restraint in the face of food and enduring energy when it comes to the fifteen-minutes-a-day exercise period. The result, as Miss Malone so admirably illustrates, is a Class-A contour.



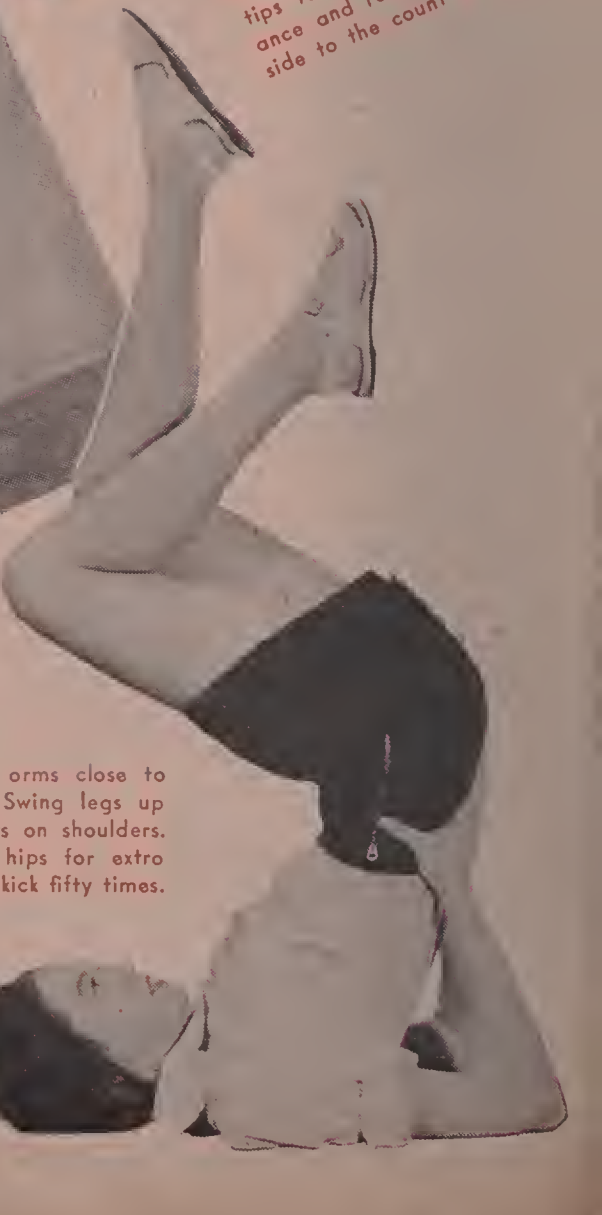
HIPS: Sit erect, stretch legs out as far as possible. Bend from waist and touch fingertips to toes. Maintain balance and rock from side to side to the count of twenty.



WAIST: Stand straight, feet apart, arms out, palms down. Swing torso to right, bend from waist and touch right toe with left fingertips. Reverse and swing to left. Repeat thirty times.



BUST: Raise arms to shoulder level and clasp fingers tightly. Hold firm and pull hard to count of ten. Relax and repeat.



THIGHS: Lie flat, arms close to sides, palms down. Swing legs up so body weight rests on shoulders. Place hands under hips for extra support and bicycle-kick fifty times.

THE EIGHTH DEADLY SIN

Is it worse than the other seven?

What shall be done to women who commit it?

"I will never let you go," she said, and Harland knew that was a threat . . . how terrible he was to realize later.

WHAT shall be done with a beautiful woman who is so insanely jealous that she cannot bear to share any part of a man's love with anyone else or any thing? "Leave Her to Heaven" is the answer of Ben Ames Williams in his new best-selling book of that title. It is yours FREE if you join the Guild now—but first read about this crafty woman.

Ellen Berent lived to conquer, and stopped at nothing to win victory after victory over men, women and even children. She was uncanny in her analysis of human actions and reactions, and used every fair or foul means to bend them to her will. She lied, cheated, and deceived, artfully and skillfully, to attain her ends.

While her own heart beat wildly at her daring, she played upon the heartstrings of others with masterful technique. Her eyes, her lips, her expression gave no hint of her falseness. Diabolically, she even cast suspicion on the innocent victims of her mad jealousy.

Seldom before has such a character been created. Seldom before has such a novel been written. You will be kept in impatient suspense until the very end. You will find yourself completely captivated by Ellen, by Harland, by Danny the crippled younger brother, loving, hating, comforting each as though they were part of your own life.

John Loder was sitting in his dressing room at Columbia, having just stepped off the set of "The Fighting Guardsman."

"Hedy and I were having a vacation at Big Bear," he said. "Our friend, who had turned over his cozy cabin to us for our honeymoon, had again offered us the seclusion of a mountain retreat.

"The day before, Hedy had finished 'Experiment Perilous' at RKO. I had wound up my radio program and finished my picture, 'The Brighton Strangler,' also made at RKO. We were both tired and glad to get away from Hollywood.

"After helping me carry in a big pile of logs for the fireplace, Hedy had curled up on the couch in front of the blazing fire. (Continued on page 85)

a BOY jerome courtland and a GIRL mona freeman

THE girl is Mona Freeman, one-time schoolgirl model for New York artist John Powers; the boy is Jerome Courtland, recently of Riverside Military Academy, Gainesville, Georgia.

In each case, selection for their roles in "Together Again" was a swift and sudden thing.

Mona was idling around the Paramount lot where she had played bits in two pictures, when she was told to report to Columbia Studios for a test. At 7:30 P.M., she got the script; at 8:30 her test began; at 9:00 it was finished; at 9:10 she had the part. They had been testing girls all day, so she should have been elated. She was happy to be working with Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer, but she really thought it was because everybody was worn out with testing and they'd finally said: "It's got to be somebody—let's take her!"

Jerome is 6 feet, 4 inches tall; he weighs 180 pounds, but as it is mostly in hard muscle, he looks lean. He seems younger than his seventeen years because he has no affectations. His hair is boy-hair, windblown and brown. His dark eyes have a way of lighting up as if a hundred candlepower lamp had been suddenly turned on. It had never crossed his mind that he could be an actor, until the night his mother took him to his first Hollywood party. He was spending the summer with her and her husband in Beverly Hills.

"Mother always says: 'Just think, it was his very first Hollywood party!'" laughed Jerome, "The Pereiras, old friends of hers. took over the (Continued on page 53)

LLOYD NOLAN
In Person

The die is cast for an actor, if he's cast to die and doesn't make the most of it. Nolan was, and did—which makes him an actor

By DOROTHY DEERE

DID it ever strike you that dying in pictures is quite complicated business? Practically anybody can die in real life—the doing thereof requires no particular talent because, well done or not, the result is just as definite. However, to die convincingly on the screen one needs to have had a bit of practice, plus a whole-hearted enthusiasm for the scheduled demise.

Lloyd Nolan gets a lot of practice at this sort of thing, because he is a very accomplished and conscientious die-er.

Consider the circumstances of Lloyd's death in "Bataan." Many times an actor looks forward to his film decease as a nice way to finish up his job, collect his check, and get out on the golf course while the longer-lived members of the cast are still sweating under the hot Kleigs. "Bataan" was not the ordinary screen melodrama, however. This time the greasepainters were representing fellow Americans who had met very real deaths on that desolate and blood-soaked isle, and it was up to them to make the audience feel the impact and loss of each man.

It wasn't going to be an easy job, as Lloyd, Robert Taylor and other veteran actors knew the minute they glanced through the script. Mostly because there was a kid's part played by an open-faced newcomer named Robert Walker, who was going to do things to the spectators. To them, Bob would be not one kid, but all the skinny, unshaven, piteously eager youths of America. And every time his bony young hand closed around a gun-stock instead of a baseball bat, every man and woman in the audience was going to feel a personal pinch of pity and guilt.

Lloyd talked it over with Bob Taylor. "Look," he said, "no matter what you and I do, the kid is going to grab their hearts and run with it. We'll just have to keep pitching the best we can for our fellows."

Nolan's particular "fellow" was a tough Brooklyn sergeant—the kind of fighting man who laughed and sneered when other men were reading their Bibles. A typical "Nolan role" with a violent finish—only this time Lloyd had to be the last of thirteen actors to stage his big scene. In real life, every man's death is a separate and personal tragedy—on the screen he can easily wind up as a poor repetition of the fellow who's died a reel earlier. With this in mind, he stood by and watched the other twelve thespians use up every dying-trick in the business. Bravely—in terror — violently — gently — and reverently they expired. Finally Lloyd made up his mind.

The script had the sergeant, face to face with the Toughest Guy of all, suddenly getting religion. His conscientious portrayer decided differently:

I don't think this guy—as I feel him—would do that," he told the director. "He was a no-good, a fellow who joined up to escape a rap back home. He hasn't done much with his life, but he hadn't counted on giving it up for his country. When it comes, it's going to strike him as ironical. Besides, give us a break, will you? There's only one thing left for the sarge and me—we've got to die laughing!"

That's why those who saw "Bataan" haven't forgotten the iconoclastic fighter who could look his destiny in the face, and die laughing—wasting his last breath in hysteria. As for the fellow who saved himself from anti-climax, a fate "worse than death" for an actor—well, the fans have grown used to not forgetting him. That's why the sergeant in "Bataan," the equally hard-boiled three-striper of "Guadalcanal Diary," and the brash and breezy sleuth, "Michael Shayne," are all riding along with you when you set out to visit Lloyd Nolan, citizen of Brentwood, California. And why the experience is good for more surprises than a parcel-post auction.

Here in Hollywood we have pigeonholes for actors. We make neatly lettered placards and hang them around the actors' necks. Just forty-four inches tall, and she's every inch a star!

AS you must know—unless you've stopped reading your daily newspaper, and all the columnists who write about Hollywood celebrities; if you've been listening to your radio at all in the last couple of months—Margaret O'Brien went on a real, honest-to-goodness journey.

It was inevitable, you might say, since it was playing the title role in the picture of that same name that started her off to becoming M-G-M's "wonder child."

But just suppose you were eight years old (well, not quite—her birthday wasn't until January 15th), and traveling clear across country for the President's Birthday Ball, and to have a two-weeks holiday in New York, as well. You'd be a little excited, too, we think—and wanting to take your pet cocker spaniel along on the trip, if you had one.

Which was the problem Margaret's mother had to contend with; and which explains this bit of dialogue that was taking place in the O'Brien family household, right up to the last minute before train time.

"No, dear, it's a nuisance to travel with a dog."

"But I'll take care of her. Truly I will!"

"The hotel management wouldn't like it."

"But I'll sneak her in and out, and they'll never know." Her eyes were wide with coaxing; Margaret couldn't be convinced by any of these arguments.

"But darling," her mother said at last. "You can't take Maggie. She'd have to stay in the baggage car, and they'd put a muzzle on her. She'd get lonesome and sick."

HOLLYWOOD'S

IF ALL the objects that successful Hollywood actors treasure most intensely were put end to end—well, it would look like the darndest rummage sale you ever saw in your life. If you really want to see an actor looking sheepish, just ask him what is his most treasured possession, outside his wife and litt-ul childrun, that is. No matter how many swimming pools, mink coats, polo ponies or war bonds an actor acquires in swift succession, there is inevitably one small, and usually intrinsically valueless bit of something-or-other, that he guards with his life, and from which he will never be parted, come fire, earthquake, divorce, or a long-term contract. But he usually feels a little silly if you ask him about it. He feels it necessary to tell you why he treasures this seemingly trivial odd or end. For actors are the most superstitious, the most sentimental people in the world.

TREASURE CHEST

Who in the world but an actor would treasure, with loving solemnity, a lot of barrels? Paul Henreid does. They are, he explains hastily, very special barrels, not to be confused with any ordinary ones. These are the barrels in which he smuggled what few possessions he could smuggle out of Austria . . . to England, to New York, to Hollywood. They have been packed, repacked and packed again with all the sentimental belongings from that old-world home, as Paul sought his fortunes in new and strange places. When he bought the Henry Fonda house, not so long ago, Paul felt that he would never move again, so the barrels wouldn't be needed.

But he couldn't bear to part with them. They had been an important part of his life too long. With perspiring ingenuity, he knocked off the front of each barrel (Continued on page 88)

HERE COMES HARRY

I WAS exactly on time for lunch. But Harry James was already waiting for me in a booth at the Brown Derby. And that, dear people, is the first evidence I will give you that he is a remarkable gent.

He'd just come from the barber shop, he told me. And he looked—well, his dark hair was smooth and shining, his moustache was trimmed just so, and his skin was rosy above the tweed of his jacket.

He looked, in fact, like a guy who has nothing in the world to do but visit barbers and sit waiting for lunch. Nothing at all. But, if you know Harry, you'll get slightly hysterical at the thought. For he is unquestionably the busiest guy in town.

The busy-ness has mostly to do with music, of course. But my first question (as a reasonably old pal) was about his new daughter, Victoria, and his charming wife, yclept B. Grable.

"They're swell," he answered. "The baby's been trying to walk ever since she was nine months old! We're afraid that's too soon, but she keeps insisting on paddling about alone."

He sounded like every father in the world.

"What about Betty? Is she going to quit pictures the way they say she is?" (Continued on page 51)

Given a choice, would you be: an actor, bandleader, radio star, or Betty Grable's husband? Harry James answers as all four!

YOUR PROBLEM AND MINE

By Jane Wyman

Between scenes of her new pic, "Lost Weekend."

Let Jane Wyman help solve that problem for you. Write her at Movieland Magazine, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Dear Miss Wyman:

Is it true that if you do something bad when you are very young, that you never overcome it?

When I was twelve, I was put into a school for delinquent girls, but I have tried to make up for this ever since. However, people won't let me forget this fact, no matter how much I tell them that I have learned my lesson. The girls at my high school seem to dislike me for this reason, and I have no friends.

How can I make friends and get people to forget my past?

Sincerely yours,
Mary Ellen K.

Dear Mary Ellen:

It is true that your path is more difficult than that of your fellow classmates, since you have something to overcome. However, it is up to you to overcome this prejudice in your every act.

Remember that old adage: "Actions speak louder than words?" It will not be easy nor swift, but by practicing this motto every day, you will be able to convince people that the past is never so important as the present.

Good luck to you, Mary Ellen.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

Since I am not engaged to any one man in the service, I have taken up quite a correspondence with eight different boys who used to go to school with me, and who are now serving their country overseas. They seem to appreciate these letters very much, and I enjoy writing them.

However, I do have one problem about these letters, and that is the endings of them. I have been ending them with various different phrases and words, such as "Love," "Always," "Lots of Love to You," etc., but it always bothers me because it doesn't seem proper to use these words when the letters are just to friends.

Please tell me how I should end the letters and still keep everything on the up and up.

Yours truly,
Katherine L.

Dear Katherine:

First of all, may I commend you for the fine work you are doing in writing to the servicemen you know. It is impossible to put too much stress on the importance of letters to these boys, and I am sure they look forward to every one of them.

As to the endings, I am sure that the proper phrase would be "Sincerely Yours." Keep up the good work.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I feel kind of foolish writing you about my problem, but then you have helped so many people that I feel you might be able to straighten me out on something.

You see, I am engaged to a very wonderful girl and we plan to get married after the war. I have not seen her for eight months, and she has written to me as faithfully as possible. Recently, her family moved to another town and since that time her letters have changed.

Although she never used to go out at all, now she writes me that she has made a lot of new friends and that they all go skating, bowling, dancing, etc., and she is having a swell time in this new town.

It isn't that I don't trust her, because I do, but all this social life she is having is beginning to interfere with my sleep, and frankly, I am worried.

What do you think I should do about it?

PFC Donald McK.

Dear Donald:

After reading over your letter carefully, I think your only course of action should be a sense of shame for being worried about your fiancée.

Actually, I should think you would be very happy that this girl has made friends so quickly in a strange town, and that she is able to enjoy herself in a circle of young people her own age. Since she is not actually dating any particular young man and is apparently confining her activities to group social events, I can not see what possible reason you can have for worrying.

You mention the fact that you still trust her. Then why are you apprehensive about her recreational activities?

This all sounds like a lot of needless worry to me, as well as negative thinking. Be glad she can enjoy herself a little. It can't be very much since she misses you enough to continue writing faithfully.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

We have a wonderful U. S. O. in our town, and yesterday one of the ladies in charge asked my girl friend and me to assist on Saturday evenings as hostesses.

We told our mothers, and they refused to let us accept. They say, since we are only seventeen, that we are not old enough to go to the U. S. O.

Please tell us what to do, as we would like to help and yet we do not want to displease our parents.

Yours truly,
Marie N.

Dear Marie:

I can certainly understand your parents' concern since you are only seventeen.

However, the U. S. O. is such a worthy organization, and is held in such high esteem in all communities, that I am sure there would be nothing improper in your working there one day a week.

Why not ask one of the ladies who extended the invitation to you and your friend, to explain this situation to your parents, and perhaps this will throw an entirely different light on the situation, and your mothers will be able to understand and appreciate the high level on which the U. S. O. endeavors to operate.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

WANTED, A WIFE!

By FRANK MARTIN WEBBER

Twenty-four years old, not married; likes girls, loves a home; twinkle in eye. If interested, see Dean Harens

DEAN HARENS was born to be an actor. He is destined to be a star. But hard work, not luck, is his vehicle.

I've known Dean since the day he came to New York, a long-legged kid who knew he could act, and believed the world to be his friend. I saw him take many a high theatrical hurdle and withstand many disappointments in people he trusted. I saw bright hope become grim determination, and a sweet smile become a stubborn grin. I saw him lick radio when he played the part of a half-witted adolescent being poisoned by a half-dotty old mother, played by Allison Skipworth, and reduce a scoffing audience to tears.

Yes, Dean can take it—take it, and make something big and fine out of it.

He's romantic lead in "The Suspect" for Universal.

Dean has new contract now, with R.K.O.

After graduating from Emerson High School in Gary, Indiana, Dean wanted to study at the Goodman Memorial Theatre School, in Chicago. He would accept no financial aid from his father, but got himself a job as a hotel bell-hop to earn the money to pay his own tuition.

That summer he edged into a stock company, playing near Michigan City, Indiana. In this company were some theatrical stars. It was they who encouraged the young beginner to tackle Broadway. Two years later, he had played four shows on The Great White Way, and was aboard a train for Hollywood with a fat contract tucked away in his luggage.

Sounds easy, doesn't it? But for the first five months that he lived in New York, (Continued on page 84)

Words of Music

OUR musical popularity poll is over, and our winners were all happy over being chosen your favorites. Besides Dinah Shore's, (see above), I received the following telegrams: "My sincerest thanks to the readers of MOVIELAND for having selected us as the top swing band of the land. I hope we shall be able to continue pleasing you for many years to come. (signed) Harry James." Frank Sinatra wired: "Just received the gold award and your note telling me that I won first place in your male singer poll for 1944. I am very proud of this honor and want to extend my sincere thanks to MOVIELAND'S readers for voting for me. Best regards." Spike Jones, with his usual sense of humor, wired: "My sincere appreciation to all you quote music lovers unquote for the 1944 MOVIELAND Corn Band title."

We have sent Major Glenn Miller's gold award to his wife, Helen, pending news of his whereabouts. Like everyone else in the music profession, I believe that Glenn will turn up safely, and I'm sure his millions of fans feel the same way.

HOLLYWOOD STUFF:

"The Harvey Girls" is the newest musical on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production schedule. It's to be a super-special technicolor thing, with lots of numbers and specialties, and a score by Johnny Mercer (love that boy) and Harry Warren. The cast will include Judy Garland, John Hodiak, Kenny Baker, Virginia O'Brien and Ray Bolger.

Bing Crosby dissolved his picture producing company after his first production, "The Great John L.," was finished. He's going to stick to acting for a while and his next film will probably be "The Bells of St. Mary's," a sequel to his smash hit, "Going My Way."

The New York musical, "One Touch Of Venus," will be made into a picture as soon as the present road tour is finished. Mary Martin will return to the screen in her original stage role.

In International's new pic, "It's A Pleasure," Sonja swims and dances.

"It's a Pleasure"

To cook the Sonja Henie way. She gives you recipes for a Norwegian meal, and no food points are needed

SOUP'S on the menu, and Sonja Henie has a favorite. She calls it Eggeboller—quick to make and nourishing, too.

- 3 hard-boiled eggs
- 1 tablespoon butter
- Salt
- Pepper

Cream the cold, hard-boiled egg yolks with the cold butter. Add a pinch of salt and pepper. Form into 20 small round balls. Then place the balls in soup plates and pour freshly boiled milk over them. If desired, the egg whites may be cut into coarse shreds and added to the soup.

* * *

Want to pep up the dinner? Just put on a pudding, says Sonja, whether it be a main course dish or a dessert. Here's a simple-to-make fish pudding, and almost entirely unrationed.

- 2 lbs. fresh haddock (or similar fish)
- Salt
- Nutmeg
- 2 yolks of eggs or 1 whole egg
- 1 tablespoon butter
- Cream or unskimmed milk

Bone the fish and grind fine six or seven times. Work with a wooden masher to a smooth paste. Add salt and nutmeg to taste. Add the eggs and butter and then the cream or milk, until the mixture becomes soft like mush, although not too soft. Bake in a well-buttered form dusted with browned flour or crumbs. Serve with drawn butter or a cream gravy of butter and water thickened with flour.

* * *

For dessert, Sonja recommends this Norwegian apple pudding:

- 6 large apples
- Jelly
- 3 eggs
- 20 drops almond extract
- Whipping cream
- 3 tablespoons sugar
- ¼ lb. blanched almonds

Pare and cut up the apples. Add enough water to boil to a thick sauce. Add some good jelly. Pour into a large platter. Mix the yolks and sugar and stir until white. Chop the almonds and add to the eggs. Add also the stiffly beaten whites flavored with the almond extract. Pour this batter over the apple sauce. Sprinkle with sugar and bake until a nice brown. Serve cold with whipped cream.

HERE COMES HARRY

"No. Of course not," he replied. "She's just not going to work as hard as she did, going from one production to another without a break.

"You know," he continued, "there was a time when she was working all day, and I was working with the band at night, and we never saw each other. She'd get up at six and go off to the studio, come home at seven and kiss me goodbye before I left for the bandstand, and I'd work until three or four in the morning while she went to bed. That's a silly way to live, and I hope from here on in we can get our schedules clicking a little better. We're all going to New York in June—Betty, the baby, the nurse, Betty's mother. I'll be playing at the Astor but Betty will get a real vacation. Then we'll all come home and make movies again."

Movies have become almost as big a part of Harry's life as of Betty's. And the Hollywood kids now know from experience how much the words, "With Harry James and his Musicmakers" mean on a marquee. The day I saw Harry, in fact, the news had just come that Fox was paying the group $166,000 for "Kitten on the Keys." And that ain't tin, in any language!

Harry explained one reason why the amount was so much—skipping the fact that he can blow a horn, of course.

"I have a part in 'Kitten,' a big part," he said. "And the band has only three or four numbers. But I'll have to keep the boys on salary while I do my scenes without them, maybe for five or six weeks. And, with an outfit like mine—a 30-piece band, arrangers, copyists, a manager, a publicity man, a secretary, a prop boy, an auditor, and a few other guys—it costs about $7500 a week, just for the pay-roll alone. That mounts up," he added, wryly.

I knew about the expense he had every week, even before he told me. What I was interested in was that he is really going to be given a chance to act, in "Kitten on the Keys." And, for my dough, it's high time. For Harry, as against other band leaders, has always had a certain relaxed charm on the screen. He has never been merely a character who blew a horn at stated intervals; he was a definite personality.

I asked him if he wanted to become an actor.

"I don't think I'd ever be completely happy, divorced from music," he said. "But I'd like to make a nice blend of the two."

From the subsequent conversation, I doubt if Betty would ever be satisfied if Harry gave up his trumpet, either. For, as you know, another of his activities is making records, now that the ban has been lifted on recording. And Betty is really the jive kid. When Harry had his first date here, she went to the studio with him, sat down on a rolled-up rug at eight p.m., and didn't move until he and the band were finished at two-thirty in the morning. And then she asked that they play the last tune back for her once more. That is really taking an interest in your husband's work!

Outside of movies and records and playing at hotels and doing strings of one-nighters across the country, Harry also has the field of radio to complicate matters. He's on the air now with Danny Kaye, in a half-hour opus which delights him. He and Kaye are two of a kind: vastly talented guys who admire each other's work and get enormous kicks laboring together. And they really labor. You don't just toss out thirty minutes of music and comedy like frying an egg, you know. It takes time and worry and endless rehearsals before a show goes on the air.

And, besides all these things, there are the hours which Harry and his men donate to the one group in the world they applaud most, the servicemen.

"We play hospitals whenever we can," he told me. "I think that's our particular job. When we go across the country, for instance, we arrange to give some shows en route. I'd say we do an average of one hospital appearance a week, whether on the road or in Hollywood. And we wouldn't give them up for anything."

The army and navy wouldn't have Harry and his gang give them up, for the services know the value music has where sick men are concerned. They have seen the new sparkle which appears in the eyes of maimed and tired kids when they hear the bright, exciting notes of Harry's trumpet, when they feel the beat of the band behind him. People have called Harry "The Modern Gabriel." Maybe, in this case, they aren't far wrong.

And, besides hospitals, Harry plays benefits. For the China Relief. For Bond Drives. For everything and anything they ask him to work for.

He was reminiscing about a show he did for China in New York.

"The thing was held at the Music Hall," he recalled. "And we got into an elevator to go below stage. It seemed we went miles before the man finally stopped the car. Then they put us on the platform and told us we would rise into position when our turn came. We were in the center of the stage. At one side of us was the entire Don Cossack Choir of about fifty men. We were thirty —which is a big band, you know. Well, we rose into that gigantic hall and felt like pygmies! I have never been so lost. It seemed we would have to blow our lungs out for half of the people to hear us!"

He didn't bother to tell me that the thousands in the theatre nearly tore the place apart when he started playing.

All sorts of things happen on the road, of course. There was the time he and the boys were doing a one-nighter in Norfolk, Virginia.

"Anything can happen in Norfolk," Harry said. "In our case, it did.

"We had just climbed on the stand and started the first number when every light in the building went out. All the electricity was gone, and that meant the public address system was off, too. I had my old band then, and the boys knew the arrangements, so we played for forty-five minutes in the dark. I was lighting matches for Helen Forrest, when she came up to sing, so the people could see her. It was quite a night."

Then there was the time that the special bus the band travels in, ran out of gas twice coming back from San Diego, a performance which was only topped by its breaking down completely. At that point, it was every man for himself, and Harry and the boys hitch-hiked home at five o'clock in the morning. You try doing that in Hollywood sometime!

Working as hard as Harry does, in even one of these fields, would kill the average guy. But Harry seems to thrive on knocking himself out. And, strange and impossible as it may seem, he does have some leisure and knows what to do with it.

There's baseball, for instance. He hasn't gotten around to buying a professional team as yet—though he'd like to—but he is one of the greatest active fans in the business. And by the way, not a bad shortstop. He's so nuts on the subject that he has been known to hire musicians who could play first base, or pitch, besides wielding a sax or drumsticks. And Betty has turned to songwriting. Make movies? She'd rather tour with Harry's band.

Those Glamorous NEWCOMERS

Charm Kurl announces an innovation for busy women. Their Supreme Cold Wave Home Permanent Wave Kit holds complete salon-type equipment for a quick, soft wave that takes only two to three hours to do at home. The kit contains enough solution (2½ ounces) and curlers (50) for the thickest head of hair. 98c.

OVERGLO POWDER by WESTMORE

Companion cosmetic for Westmore's Overglo! This new face powder, they explain, is non-chromatic; cannot change color, streak or flake. $1.

Practically a prescription, since doctors recommend it, is the new Ar-Ex Special Formula Lipstick. It is unscented and non-permanent — made primarily to combat cases of lipstick allergy. The creamy lubricating qualities of this stick help to soothe chapped dryness. $1.

Helena Rubinstein puts two new products on day and night duty—both of them working toward smoother beauty for harried hands. Herbal Hand Cream is a rich lubricant for bedtime wear. It contains, in addition to herbs and oils, a special whitener for hands "pale" as well as soft. For daytime hours, there's Herbal Hand Lotion, a non-sticky finishing and protective cream. $1 each.

Daggett & Ramsdell introduces Mountain Heather Cake Make-Up, made with a moisture retaining ingredient. They suggest wearing it over a cream or liquid powder base: under a sheer film of face powder. The cake comes in a choice of five flattering shades, prettily packaged in pink plastic, priced at $1.50.

A dreamy kind of drama from the House of Louise Philippe. Their new shade of Angelus, Orchid Pink, is a soft and sweet combination of bright orchid and delicate pink—Angelus Lipsticks are 79c and 49c. The Creme or Compact Rouge is 49c.

Pond's latest success shade, Beau Bait, is now available in rouge as well as lipstick. A "lush" crimson they call it, for early spring. 10c.

POND'S CHEEKS

Pinaud presents a new fragrance family, Lilianelle, inspired by and named for the tiny bell flowers found in the forests of Lorraine. The odor is similar to lily of the valley, yet slightly different and more daring. Comes in bath and skin-scenting stuff. Perfume from $2.50.

With sun in our scheme, Wrisley introduces another scent of Bath Superbe Soap. Clover is meadow-fresh, sun-bright yellow. 4 for $1.

Right in the pink and pretty groove is Pink Magic, new La Cross magic-maker for dressed up nails. Fine, they say, for putting flirtation in your fingertips. Just as good for an elegant mood. 60c.

when the band goes on the road, a bit of batting and fielding is a daily occurrence. When they are all home, they play every team that will give them a game—and usually win, I'm happy to say.

It was baseball which recently gave Harry the first real rest he's had in a long time, though he hadn't planned it that way. He was gaily sliding into third one afternoon, when something cracked in his foot.

"I got up and started walking around," he told me, "but every time I put any weight on my foot I fell down."

A doctor informed him the next day that he had the prettiest fracture he'd ever seen, put him into a cast, handed him some crutches, and said he would see him in eight weeks.

"I sat on the stand in a chair and played," Harry recalled. "It was wonderful. Oh, incidentally, I made it into third even if I did break my foot!"

Outside of baseball—and of greater importance, of course—there is Betty and the baby. To hear Harry talk about them and their ultimate plans is to listen to a very happy guy. I said as much to him, and he admitted that there really isn't anything he wants in the world, nothing that he can't get eventually.

They now live in an English-style farmhouse in Coldwater Canyon. Harry bought the place a year ago from Bert Lahr, and it sounds swell. It's a small house, as California houses go, having only nine rooms; but outside there is a pool and lemon and orange and avocado trees and a Victory garden "with the best vegetables in town" and two-and-a-half acres to roam in. The baby scrambles about on the grass and pulls the best radishes when her parents aren't looking and gets brown in the sun. And, inside, there is a big record player and lots of music, and a great deal of laughter.

I couldn't exactly imagine Harry in a Victory garden. He just ain't the type, if you know what I mean.

"Oh, I—I sorta oversee it," he answered.

He went on to speak of what he and Betty want when the war is over. And it's something that sounds even stranger from the pair of them, two show business kids if there ever were them.

"We've decided that we're going to buy a farm," he said. "We don't know just where yet, but we'd like a place where we can close the gates at night and be Mr. and Mrs. James. We want some cows and some chickens—not too many chickens—and some horses to ride. Both of us are fiends for horses, and we'd like to teach Victoria how to handle a nag, too."

He was getting almost lyrical. I didn't blame him. It sounded fine.

Then a phone rang and a voice over the public address system in the Derby said, "Harry James, please!"

Harry signalled a waiter. In a few seconds, he was again a guy with many things to do and many people wanting him to do them. Underneath, however, he was still a man who wanted a farm, a quiet, amusing character who takes his enormous success calmly and modestly, a thin, attractive man with a lovely wife and child, and one of the few truly happy people I have ever known.

Little Club for the evening and everyone was dressed up like a yacht. I saw director Charles Vidor beckon to Mother—they were old friends, too,—and she sort of leaned toward him while they talked. Then she called me to say Mr. Vidor wanted to test me for a part in a picture. I thought they were kidding. After all, it was a Hollywood party. I thought it was just a thing people do to get a laugh. I didn't pay much attention.

"That was Saturday night. Monday, Mr. Vidor's office called to remind me to report at the studio. Mr. Vidor wanted me to meet Miss Van Upp, who had written the story. I went over, they looked at me, talked a little, and a few days later I took a test. Still, I didn't really believe it.

"Mother wasn't especially thrilled; she figured it was a false alarm all the time. Even while I worked on the picture, neither of us took it seriously. It was fun; everyone was awfully nice. There was an ex-boxer on the crew and every day I'd say to him: 'Got any new tricks for me?' and he'd show me something, and it was really swell! But it never seemed like I was an actor."

Mona and Jerome have made smash hits, but neither is taking bows.

"I enjoyed doing my part, but I'm not happy about it," said Mona, with a worried little frown. "I know the reason I got it was because the studio had no time to bicker. I looked at myself on the screen and saw there were spots that were all right, but other spots were horrible. I wasn't consistent in my acting. I know it takes years of experience, but still I don't like my work. I know I'm the cute type, I'll never be an Ingrid Bergman, but I want to be good. I don't expect to win an Academy Award, but I'd like to stay in this business until I am good!"

"I'm never nervous. Nothing bothers me. I suppose that's how I got by," confessed Jerome. "I didn't care if I got the part or not, so I could be relaxed. The part was natural, the boy was just like me, except for getting himself engaged to Irene Dunne—that didn't seem so natural—but she was so swell, she made it easy.

"While I was making the picture, I used to look at the screen and think: 'Pretty soon I'll be seeing you there,' but I didn't really believe it would ever happen. When I finally saw myself, I thought, 'Oh, straighten up, can't you? Throw your shoulders back, why don't you?' and when I heard myself talk I kept wishing I'd snap it up, bring the words closer together. It didn't seem very good to me.

"Honestly, though I know I'm in pictures, I still can't really believe it. Here I sit, talking to you like you were one of Mother's friends, telling you about being in the movies, and all the time I feel like I don't belong in a studio, and it can't be true!"

Jerome's mother was known as Mary Courtland when she sang on the radio some ten years ago. His fourteen-year-old sister, whose home is in Knoxville, Tennessee, with their father, also has a voice.

"We always thought my sister might have a career some day, and look, here I am! I don't care a thing about acting and I'm in—at least for now. . . . Oh say, I learned to twirl a rope on the set! I can spin it overhead and switch hands and everything!

"I sort of thought I'd like to be an architect, but I don't know. I like to draw, but I like doing cartoons best. The Knoxville News-Sentinel published one of my cartoons, and I won a dollar for another in the National Comic Book contest. My cousin was editor of the University of Tennessee Annual, three years ago, when I was in Knoxville High School. He asked me to do the cartoons for the book, and I did. Once I thought up a strip of my own; I called my hero the Hooded Cobra and my sister was so keen about it she formed the Hooded Cobra Club."

That hooded cobra is a clue to Jerome's true ambition. He loves reptiles, particularly snakes, and would like to be another Martin Johnson, wandering through strange wild places with a camera, taking pictures and studying them in their native haunts. When he was small, Jerome had a passion for lizards, but he outgrew them, and now cherishes black snakes. Once he owned a coach whip black snake 7½ feet long, which he tamed so that he could pick it up by the middle, have the "wonderful feel" of him as he oozed out on both sides, and not be bitten.

"Snakes often bite me," he ad-

To People who want to write but can't get started

Do you have that constant urge to write, but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty said on this subject:

"There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Mother of 4 Earns $1,000 on Her Writing

"Without jeopardizing our home life a bit, I have been able to earn $1,000 since graduating from N.I.A. If I had not the responsibility of four small children, home duties, haphazard health and war work, I am sure I could have made much more. After only two lessons, I sold a garden series to Baltimore American. The N.I.A. way makes writing child's play." — Gladys Carr, Annapolis, Md.

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

NEWSPAPER Institute of America offers a free Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others. You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers. It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

mitted. "They will, if you don't catch them by the back of the neck. But it's all right unless it's a water snake or a rattler."

A water snake, it seems, may eat tin cans, pick up tetanus germs on its jagged teeth, and give you lockjaw. A rattler isn't dangerous unless he's coiled. "One day a friend of mine was with me in Bel Air when we saw a rattler stretched out on the road," remembered Jerome. "We had a beebee gun and four beebees, so we each had two shots, alternating, and got him with the second shot. He was a black diamond rattler. . . . You've got to kill them!" he said regretfully.

Mona was a mischievous handful when she was small. She spent her summers at an aunt's home near Baltimore, where a hefty colored cook named Georgie managed the whole family. Georgie served tremendous breakfasts of kidney stew, steak, potatoes and hot rolls. How Mona remained delicately slim is one of those mysteries.

With a cousin two years older, Mona, aged seven, made a witches' brew in the bathtub. They had read Wizard of Oz and anything seemed possible. Soap powder, bath salts, sal hepatica, toothpaste, the contents of the bath cabinet plus the aunt's Chanel perfume were stirred with the plunger before Georgie arrived. The excitement of it all is still Mona's most potent memory.

The attic was filled with romantic clothes and old props for the little girls' chief ambition, painting. They transformed the barn into a studio, set up easels, laid out palettes and made portraits of their friends and each other, duly costumed and posed.

There was a time when "being a star like Shirley Temple" was uppermost in Mona's mind. She supposed, then, that movies really happened and the camera caught the action as it went by. Her first dramatic experience came when the high school dramatic club put on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and chose Mona from the eighth grade to do Little Eva, because she was small and had long fair hair. The rehearsals were fun but acting didn't attract her. Jerking around on wires in the heaven scene took all the joy away. She decided to stick to painting.

By the time Mona was fourteen, lack of money had become a Freeman problem. Her uncle, who knew someone in John Powers' office, took Mona in; before she left, Mr. Powers had given her a job after school and over week-ends.

"The first time I posed was for a Sears' catalog," she remembered. "They took me to Grant's Tomb and dressed me in a raincoat. The coat was not full enough, so they took off my dress; it still wouldn't flare in front as the photographer wanted it to do, so they tore it up the back and pulled it around to give the desired effect. There I stood, before crowds of snickering people, equipped for weather in front but only a thin slip between me and the gale behind. 'If this is modeling,' I thought, 'I've had enough of it!' "

However, she changed her mind on her next job, the face of "Miss Subway" the schoolgirl. Shots of subway riders were exhibited in subways and Mona's proved to be excellent advertising, since artists saw her face daily and knew where to call her when they needed her type.

Modeling clothes was a good way to begin, for the garment was the important thing and Mona had time to learn a model's tricks. She sometimes skipped classes, which brought the truant officer to the door. Almost every week he dropped in for a cup of tea; a reasonable person, he seemed to understand the necessity of Mona's earning and felt that if she kept up with her classes, who was he to interfere?

"I was bored in school," confessed Mona, "but now that I've graduated I miss the regular routine. I'm going back to school on the Paramount lot between pictures. Movies aren't for lazy people, and I can't afford to lose the habit of working."

The advance from modeling to movie acting was simple. A talent scout for Howard Hughes saw portraits of Mona at her uncle's home, asked her to pose for him and sent the results to Mr. Hughes, who took an option on her services. But for two years she did nothing but draw her salary check. Impatient at last, she called at Paramount, where she knew a talent scout and engineered a contract sale.

The Walter Pidgeons, Commander Jack Bolton and his wife, Jerome's mother and Jerome's girl friend all attended the preview of "Together Again." So far as he could see, none of them were overwhelmed with Jerome's acting. He dismissed the subject swiftly.

"My girl is 5 feet 9 inches tall; when she wears high heels she's six feet and that's nice for me," he confided. "I like her a lot. She's crazy about all the things I am—hiking, hunting, riding, archery, bicycling. We hike every week in the Hollywood Hills."

A member of the Riverside Military Academy's Varsity Track and Cross County Track Teams, Jerome is good at getting over the ground. Between scenes on the picture, he often disappeared for a six-mile trek into the hills.

"At home in Tennessee, we hike with knapsacks and blankets," he observed, his eyes lighting up with the recollection, "but it usually manages to rain on hikes so we have to shelter at night. We take our shorts along and the minute it drizzles, we put our clothes in our ponchos and wear our shorts through the storm.

"The real sport is canoeing. We used to go up on the Greenbrier River in West Virginia where the rapids are swell. It's not dangerous to shoot rapids; of course, you could hit your head on a rock if the canoe tipped over." He shrugged off that contingency. "We wear sneakers so we won't cut our feet on the rocks; when we tip over, we just float along. I tell you, we have us a time! The river's full of rapids and we shoot them over and over—different days, because it's a long trip back—and sometimes we turn the canoe over for fun. . . . Gee, I'd like to be doing it right now!"

He won't be going back to Tennessee or to Georgia this year, because he's in pictures. He misses the fellows in school—he even misses school. But he likes his present teacher better than any he ever had before.

"She's wonderful! She teaches me solid geometry, sociology, physics, history, trigonometry, and she can teach French and Spanish and all the things little children have to learn, too. She has a doctor's degree. I can't explain about her, but look—days when I have to leave my lesson to go to somebody's office, or for an interview, ordinarily I wouldn't go back. I'd just slip off like a shot and disappear. But studying with her is different. I want to go back to see what else she has for me. . . . See what I mean?

Jerome wants it understood that he makes pictures for fun. If they begin to bore him, he'll stop right there and then. His eyes are fixed on a future that contains a wild adventure up the Amazon River to photograph head hunters and find bigger and better snakes.

Mona confides that Jerome is "just naturally marvelous on the screen." Jerome insists that "Mona knows what it's all about." They go so well together, perhaps it's not too much to hope they'll be "together again!"

DYED-IN-THE-WRONG-WOOL TUFTS

the sixty-four dollar question, because you won't win. Before the paint on your sign is dry, Sonny will have flown the coop, and you'll find the category didn't fit at all.

People have been struggling with Sonny and this problem for years. They've listened to that dyed-in-the-wool Back Bay accent; they've hauled out the figurative placard and inscribed the legend "Boston Blue Blood," and they've hung it around his neck. "Hiya!" says Sonny, giving 'em that low slung wave of the hand and grinning in that somewhat absent minded, definitely vague fashion, and before there's time to do a double-take, what is he? A band leader! Okay, okay, these hypothetical people have muttered, for they're apparently patient souls. Out they've come with another clean, white card; they've prepared the brushes and the paint, and they've started to lay out fine, big upper case letters. But when they've finished, where is Sonny? Another low-slung "Hiya," another swoon-inspiring grin, and up pops Tufts studying for grand opera, no less. So it has gone before, and so it will continue to go again. A dyed-in-the-wool guy? Sure.

"But," allows Mr. Tufts, "I keep getting into the wrong dye or the wrong wool or something. It's confusing."

Confusing, is right! Take chickens, for instance.

You know Sonny—a big, rugged character, a super athlete, the kind of guy who gives the impression that nothing would faze him? But has he got the nerve to kill a chicken? Listen!

Sonny and Barbara bought a house not long ago, a house with four acres of land and a lot of chickens thrown in.

"We didn't have any passion for chickens," Sonny explains, "never had given them much thought one way or another. But what the heck! They went with the house . . . and meat rationing . . . you know . . ."

But the fatal day arrived when Barbara said: "Sonny, go out and kill a chicken for dinner."

Sonny turned pale in the face. "You do it," said he.

The dialogue continued with slight variations, but ended with neither one of them going near the chickens with murder in mind. The chickens remained; grew, and flourished; got bigger and fatter; and found life with the Tufts pure velvet. But at last, Barbara reached a decision. They would take one of the chickens to the butcher and let him perform the dreary job. So into Beverly Hills they went with a screeching and flapping of wings. The butcher beamed. Never in his life, he said, had he seen such a fat, handsome bird, and so the chicken met its end. It reached the Tufts' dining room table for dinner. But when Sonny and Barbara thought of that happy chicken, they felt like Barry Fitzgerald in "Going My Way"—full of guilt and reaching for the bread. So it was that a new decision was reached.

Barbara and Sonny decided to raise their chickens just for the eggs. But no sooner had this plan been made than the chickens started moulting or something—Sonny is slightly vague as to the reasons—and the chickens stopped laying.

"No gratitude," says Sonny, "after we saved their lives . . ."

So now they are left with a lot of completely useless chickens who are living off the fat of the land, with Barbara's father occasionally taking one of them off their hands. Sonny explains this bravery with a certain wistfulness. "He's been in two wars. I guess he doesn't mind wringing a chicken's neck."

So this will give you a clear picture of Tufts—skier, crewman, football player, etc., who appears to be bothered by nothing in this world. Besides which, he's afraid to drive a car.

Then there is Tufts—Business Man.

"Business man?" says Sonny, "I'm not." And there seem to be a lot of things to prove it. "Barbara handles all our financial affairs," Sonny explains, "I'm too absent minded."

"What a business man!" groaned Bowen Charleston Tufts the Elder, when Sonny made his first big, honest-to-goodness business blunder, round about the summer of 1932. And Mr Tufts must have felt disgrace had surely settled firmly upon the Back Bay Tufts of Boston. The Tufts were

Every time you go to the store and carry your purchase home unwrapped, you help bring Victory just so much nearer — help get our boys back home just so much sooner.

So — when you go to the store, take along a basket or a shopping bag or some permanent container, roomy enough to carry your purchases home unwrapped.

Under no circumstances ask for, or accept, unnecessary paper wrappings from the storekeeper.

Don't burn or ruin, waste or destroy a single scrap of paper around your home, store or office. Collect it, save it, and call your local salvage group. They will call for it if you ask them to.

Remember — every scrap of paper you don't use, and every scrap you do save means just so much more ammunition for Victory.

HERE ARE A FEW THINGS THAT PAPER IS VITALLY NEEDED FOR:

Paper that wraps and protects more than 700,000 different war items. Paper that goes into containers for blood plasma collected by the Red Cross. Paper to make vests for airmen who fight in sub-zero temperatures. Paper for V-Mail envelopes for our fighting men. These are a few of the vital roles that paper plays in the war program.

bankers. The Tufts operated a huge public utilities company. Big Business had been their bread and butter for generations, and considerable cake it had brought in, too. So what did Bowen Charleson Tufts the Third, commonly known as Sonny, manage to do? He managed to think he had an engagement for his band during their summer vacation from Yale. He had, after all, a tentative arrangement with the owner of a summer resort up in Maine.

"Write and let me know when you can set a definite date," the resort owner had said. But Sonny never bothered to write. He just took it for granted that everything was set. Sure, there were a couple of letters from the resort owner asking for verification of the engagement. But, as far as Sonny was concerned there was nothing to verify. He intended going to Maine, so he never answered the letters.

A couple of days before the band was to leave, Sonny sent a wire announcing their imminent arrival. Back came an answer. "Don't bother. Thought you weren't coming. Hired another band."

And that was when Bowen Charleston Tufts the Elder groaned.

"Though why he was surprised, I wouldn't know," says Sonny, to this day surprised himself that his father expected anything different, "I was always telling him that it was silly to expect me to be a banker. I can't add."

So that's the way it was, and today it is Barbara who keeps books on the family Tufts.

However, let's look at the record.

When Sonny made this supreme blunder in 1932, Father Tufts set about to teach him a lesson, but good.

"He sent me down to Plymouth to sell refrigerators from door to door," says Sonny, "Father was thoroughly disgusted and picked out the hardest thing he could think of for me to do. And it was hard! Figure this, trying to sell $185 refrigerators in 1932! From that experience I came to understand the hardships of the Pilgrim Fathers trying to eke out a living on Plymouth Rock."

So what happened? Sonny won a silver cup for selling more refrigerators than any other salesman during that summer campaign!

"It was a terrible mistake," says Sonny, "I should never have done that. It made my father very hopeful about me for a while."

Then there were Sonny's bands. This guy, who's supposed to have no talent for business, had two bands in Prep school and by the time he'd been at New Haven for a year, he had five bands, no less! He'd send them around playing for everything under the sun, and sort of rotate himself making personal appearances, singing and playing drums. After that first dismal Plymouth Rock summer, he went to Europe every summer with his band the ship's band.

At this point Barbara gets a funny expression on her face. "There is," she murmurs, "that deal he made with a Beverly Hills restaurant to sell them all the produce from our farm. . . ."

A bad business man? What do you think?

Then there is Tufts—Easy Going Guy. You know, just like "Kansas" in "So Proudly We Hail," wandering through life with a low slung "Hiya."

"Sonny was playing himself," they'll tell you at the studio, "he's just like that. A happy, good-natured fellow, who takes things as they come." The casual way he got into pictures would sort of bear out that theory, for no one ever did it in quite such an offhand manner.

Whoever heard of walking into a casting office with a friend, standing there while the friend says, "This is my pal, Sonny Tufts. He'd like to be in pictures," listening while the casting director says, "Okay, we'll give him a test," taking the test, and one, two, three he's in. It's ridiculous. It isn't done that way. But that's the way Sonny Tufts did it, and there are people who might feel envious and say, "Aw, it was too easy."

But again, let's study the record. How easy has it been? Is it easy to work in a smoky, stuffy night club, week after week, month in and month out until 4 a.m.? Believe it or not, it isn't. But doing that is learning one's craft. And that's what Sonny was doing from the time he got out of school in 1935—until Hollywood.

"He won't last," the wiseacres said in the beginning. "It's just a fluke. A guy who'd never acted before in his life? Don't make me laugh!"

Never acted before? You learn a lot being in two or three Broadway shows, even if you are there as a musician and singer, and not as an actor. You learn about audiences, you learn about timing, and all the other things that make up a performer's bag of tricks. Sonny has already disproven the "won't last" theories. He has lasted. He knows his business.

And has he just sort of taken things as they come? Throwing over a lucrative job as a night club singer and band leader to bury oneself behind a New York brownstone front, and there to study for grand opera, isn't exactly taking things as they come. People who know will tell you that this sort of training is just about the hardest work that anyone can do, and the most monotonous besides. But that's what Sonny did for over a year, and nobody made him do it.

He has sort of drifted into things? He could have drifted into the newspaper business. He had plenty of connections. There were those who thought he had writing talent. But he didn't drift into that, because it wasn't what he wanted to do.

"I wrote a couple of columns when I was in school," Sonny will tell you," and they came off pretty well. My family thought it was pretty hot stuff. But I knew better. I knew I was no writer, because I never had any original ideas. I used to get out books of humorous essays, books by Corey Ford and people like that. I'd read them, then close the book up quick and write my own version. I guess I thought if the book was closed it was all legitimate. But I was no writer."

An easy going, slightly lazy guy? When Sonny was six he was given his first musical instrument, a mandolin on Christmas morning. By nightfall, he could play it. By the time he had his bands in college he could play about fifteen musical instruments, most of them self-taught. Do you teach yourself to play fifteen musical instruments by being lazy?

"And," they say at the studio, as a sort of startled afterthought, "he's made more pictures than anyone else in Hollywood this past year. He hasn't had one day off. Right now he's making three all at once, "Duffy's Tavern," "The Virginian" and "Too Good to be True." He loves to work, he says.

What do you think?

Then there is Tufts, New York Cafe Society, gay, cosmopolitan, smart Tufts.

"We've got the most wonderful duck at our new house!" says Sonny. "Wanders around the house. Funniest bird you ever saw. Barbara and I die laughing at it." Then there's Barbara with her sixty-five yards of edging for upholstering the living room. "Sixty-five yards," groans Sonny. "Sixty-five yards of green stuff that looks like grass. Our living room is going to look like a New England meadow in the spring."

The Cafe Society, apartment-house-living Tufts.

"Our house is wonderful," glows Sonny, "stone foundations, whitewashed rambling New England farm house. . . . Red roses growing over it. It's in a place called Hidden Valley, and you feel as if you were miles away from civilization, but you're not."

But most of all there is the impression you get of Tufts, Renegade from his Class.

"Anyone who was born into a family like his and ends up singing in night clubs and being a movie actor," people will tell you, "well, he's got to be a renegade. His family must have been furious. He must have just kicked over the traces and washed his hands of all that background stuff."

Has he?

"My parents were slightly startled," Sonny says, with none of the intense rebellion that goes hand in glove with the renegade, "but they figured a fellow should do what he wanted and what he was suited to do. The only condition they made was, do it well!"

Defiance towards background and family? It just isn't. What there is is pride and assurance in family and home, with a little old school tie thrown in.

"Even though," says Sonny, "I went to Yale instead of Harvard where all the men in my family are supposed to go."

So, by now, maybe you will understand why Sonny Tufts is confusing. Why he just won't fit into any of those pigeonholes. Why you can't hang a placard around his neck. So, this is my advice. Considering there is a paper shortage, and considering the nation's housing is congested—even in pigeonholes, I understand—let's just give up the whole idea and take the big guy for what he is, a study in contrasts. Let's not even try to pigeonhole him; because, by tomorrow, he may suddenly decide to be a midget in a circus and don't say I didn't warn you, for he's a very remarkable fellow.

NURSES NEEDED

The Navy urgently needs 2500 more nurses by June 30, 1945. (The Army's needs are even greater, numerically.) Who is eligible? Any available nurse who's a high school graduate, a citizen of the U. S. for at least 10 years, graduate of an accredited school of nursing, registered, between 21 and 40 years of age, single or widowed or legally separated. Quick—apply now!

MARGARET O'BRIEN

That did it. An appeal to the little one's heart, and Margaret was instantly won over. Better to leave Maggie at home, with a friend to look after her, than to have her locked up in a dirty baggage car—and with a muzzle, yet!

There was a compromise, however. Mother agreed that Francesca could come—Francesca being a cheerfully chirping canary. Margaret had fallen in love with the little feathered one, when she saw it in the window of a pet shop. It's all the more dear to her, because she bought it with her own money. (Well, almost—Margaret had been able to save up $1.50 from her weekly allowance, and her pretty young Aunt Marissa pitched in with the other dollar.)

She felt no qualms about leaving behind her large collection of dolls. Margaret is fond of dolls, like every eight-year-old, but they take second place to pets who can respond when you whistle, perch on your shoulder and sing, or snuzzle a damp affectionate nose to yours.

Not long ago, when Margaret was going through her "Indian" stage (she converted bed quilts into a tepee erected in one corner of her room, wore feathers in her hair and drew nothing but red-faced, scowling warriors), Mrs. O'Brien was shocked and dismayed one day to discover that the curls had been snipped off the heads of all the dolls, leaving only wisps of yellow floss sprouting from gleaming china scalps.

"Margaret, why did you do it?"

"Well, Mummy, it was a massacre. They were scalped," explained Margaret, reasonably enough.

"But I hope you won't do that to Maggie!"

Margaret looked horrified. "Of course not, Mummy. Why, Maggie and Francesca are human beings!"

There was a large compartment on the train for Margaret, her dark-eyed mother, and Aunt Marissa — her mother's sister, whom Margaret worships and adores. And fifth member of the travel party (counting Francesca) was Guadalupe, a Mexican nurse with merry eyes who returned with the O'Briens from Mexico City, when they visited there last Fall. Margaret took to Guadalupe, right from the start. She likes the way she laughs at everything, she likes her name. "It sounds like a song," she explains. Besides it's the name of her patron saint. To Margaret, a deeply religious little girl, that makes it more than just a name.

But even traveling with three grown-ups whom she loves above everyone else, you'd expect that three days on a train would be awfully tiresome for a little girl. With meals being sent in, because Mother wisely knew that if Margaret were to appear in the dining car, necks would crane and the usual business of excited whispering and autograph requests would begin. With no chance to hop off the train for a few minutes, at station stops, for the same reason. Having Francesca along, though, the three cooped-up days sped almost as fast as the wheels of the streamliner.

Margaret let the bird out of the cage and taught her to respond to her calls. (She really does!) She sat for hours at a time, busy with her drawings, and the canary perched on one shoulder.

First night out, Margaret insisted, as she always does, that she sleep in the upper berth. Mrs. O'Brien knew it would be no use trying to talk her out of it. To Margaret, that's half the fun of traveling.

"Remember now, once you're up you stay up," her mother said.

A few minutes later . . . "Mummy, I left Francesca's seed box open. I'm coming down to cover it."

"No dear, now never mind . . . nothing will happen to the bird's seed."

But already there were tiny legs scrambling down the ladder.

Back up again, Margaret thought of something else. "I forgot to brush my teeth."

"But you did. I saw you myself."

"But not hard enough. It will only take a minute."

And Margaret had scampered down again. Ask her about it and she'll answer, her eyes twinkling, "Well, I guess I did make a lot of unnecessary trips."

Ask her to name her favorite movie stars, and without any hesitation at all she'll tell you, "Greer Garson, Gene Tierney and Judy Garland." (James Craig, as you know, heads her list of male favorites.) Just before she left for New York, the studio arranged a special showing of "The Wizard of Oz;" it was by her special request, and Margaret was enchanted —particularly by the magic golden slippers Judy wore in the picture.

Riding on the train, it occurred to her to make her own magic slippers. And like the little red hen in the fairy tale—she did. She painstakingly ripped the sequins off a gold sequin evening belt of her mother's, and began sewing them, one by one, on her red corduroy bathroom slippers. That chore occupied her through Texas and the Midwest. But she hadn't calculated just right, and when she had finished she discovered to her dismay that one slipper was heavily overlaid with the shiny gold stuff, but there was none left over for the other slipper.

"Oh, well," she reasoned with inspiration. "Cinderella had only one slipper, too!"

But make no mistake—Margaret is no little angel. She can be "difficult" at times, just like any other little girl. Getting her to drink her milk, for instance, is something that requires the fortitude and patience of both Mrs. O'Brien and Aunt Marissa. Margaret doesn't say she won't drink it, you understand. She stalls.

"Just a minute, Mummy, while I draw a moustache on the Mexican."

"But can't you do that later? Have your milk now."

"I can't leave this moustache lopsided. I'll have my milk after I'm through."

"Now, dear."

And finally, after she's taken a few half-hearted sips, "Must I drink the whole glass? Can't I save some for later?"

It was therefore with great amusement that Mrs. O'Brien, strolling into the dining car on the one occasion when she didn't eat in the compartment, noticed another mother trying to persuade her small pride 'n joy to down a glass of milk.

"Come now," she heard the mother urge. "Drink the whole glass. Why, Margaret O'Brien always drinks milk."

Margaret was 8 yrs. old, January 15th; Elsa Maxwell gave her a party in N. Y.

Margaret's mother found it hard to suppress a broad smile. But it gave her an idea.

"Greer Garson always drinks milk," she told Margaret next morning. "That's why she's so tall and lovely."

But that was underrating her small daughter's intimate contact with the film greats.

"But Mummy," Margaret answered, "Miss Garson likes tea! She told me so herself."

Spaghetti, dripping with rich meat sauce, is something Margaret could eat for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Mrs. O'Brien suspects it's not the spaghetti so much—it's the fun Margaret has twisting the long strands around her fork.

The first thing she asked for when they arrived in New York was to see a tall building and eat spaghetti. Both requests were duly arranged for—but Margaret was too young to appreciate the thrill which almost had her mother and aunt in tears.

When Margaret was a baby, Marissa received an offer to dance at the Waldorf. Gladys O'Brien, widowed before Margaret was born, had wrapped her whole life in her baby, and in her pretty young sister's career. The three made the trip to New York together, then.

Did you see "Music for Millions?" Remember how June Allyson and her roommates sneaked Margaret in and out of the Boarding house because they were afraid their landlady would toss them out, if a child were discovered living with them? That's what happened when the O'Briens moved into the room the Waldorf had furnished Marissa for the duration of her engagement there. Gladys would sneak the baby out, carry her in her arms for lack of a carriage and trudge in the cold to Central Park, there to spend the day. Then she'd slip back to the hotel again, walking up the half-dozen floors so that even the elevator boys wouldn't know about the little stow-away. Miraculously enough, as if she understood their predicament, Baby Margaret (her name was Maxine, then) never cried—even when she had colic.

Eventually, several of the hotel employees learned about the baby hidden in the dancer's room; but one look at the urgency in the mother's face, and they kept the secret.

This time, the O'Brien's were returning to the same hotel. But what a difference!

"Remember me?" asked a handsome Irish woman named Mrs. Murphy, greeting them as they arrived. "I used to help you sneak the little darling in and out. Remember?" Mrs. Murphy had been the floor clerk, then; now, she was in the hotel's executive office. Gladys and Marissa looked at each other, and their smiles trembled. Did they remember!

The manager, Mr. Gilchrist, presented himself at their apartment door, a box of flowers under his arm. He'd also known them in the old days. Marissa, combing Margaret's hair, felt her hands shaking.

"No need for you to be nervous," Mr. Gilchrist said, smiling. "Everything's different now." (And while we didn't ask, and Marissa didn't say, something tells us that Manager Gilchrist is one of 'the smuggled baby's proudest fans!)

The only thing which marred the enchantment of the New York visit for Margaret was—being recognized. Her mother took her to a Fifth Avenue department store one afternoon to buy some blue frocks. Margaret loves blue; she loves to go shopping, too, and look at racks of dresses. Her eyes were starry as she clung to her mother's hand. Then, quick as anything, the news skimmed 'round the floor. "Margaret O'Brien's here!" A big crowd collected around her, and two policemen had to take charge—and, Margaret never did have a chance to buy her blue dresses.

There are two sides to her, you know—the little girl who's just like all other little girls; who likes to play games of make-believe, who loves ghost stories and begs you to "Tell me a story, scare me!" And there is the actress; the child who knows about "takes" and cues, who lovingly fingers the gold ring made into a brooch, which Lionel Barrymore gave her at Christmas time—a ring that belonged to his grandmother, Ellen Drew, and has generations of theatrical tradition behind it.

It was that part of Margaret which was evident during her visit, when writers filed into the Waldorf apartment all day long for interviews. Although she was longing with all her little-girl heart and soul to be outside, playing in the snow, she stayed in the room to meet all who had come to see her.

She spent most of her time at the secretary, drawing pictures, instead of talking about herself. She showed one particular drawing around. It was a lovely lady with yellow crayoned curls, blue eyes with long black lashes, and jewels of all colors around her throat.

"Oh how pretty!" someone remarked. "That must be a movie star."

"Oh no," Margaret said quickly. "She's a princess!"

And it was the little girl talking then—the little girl like your own daughter, or your sister, or the kid next door—who lives in a magic world of goblins and dragons and princesses. That's a world Hollywood and success and movie sets will never take away from Margaret O'Brien. And that, probably, is why she's not "just like any other movie actress."

5 BIG FEATURES YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO MISS IN APRIL

Pageant

"ARTISTS AT WORK"—

An 8-page picture story in full colors showing famous artists and models at work in their studios. A short biographical sketch accompanying the color photographs gives you an added insight into the background and aspirations of these noted illustrators.

"CHINA TO ME"—

Excerpts from the sensational best-seller by Emily Hahn that critics are acclaiming as "an extraordinary confession" . . . of a woman who has lived a wholly uninhibited existence. People everywhere are talking about this amazingly frank, personal history of the love life of a woman, with an enormous zest for life.

"BLOOD, SWEAT and ASPIRIN"

How the fast-moving laugh programs that came so glibly from your loud-speaker are made. Ben Gross takes you behind the scenes of a Bob Hope broadcast—revealing the time, headaches and tough work that go into making a script and rehearsing it so that the radio millions will get a smooth, finished, split-second timed performance. No wonder gag writers are the druggists' best customers.

"LOVE IS NOT ENOUGH"—

Is sex appeal all that matters in marriage? No! shouts Marjorie Miller in this revealing document that castigates the average American's naivete regarding marital ties—and what binds them together.

"CURSE OF THE DUTCHMAN'S GOLD"—

How death has trailed those who have sought the gold in a remote Arizona mine at the fork of the Old Apache trail. The gold, according to legend, is still there but its secret lies surrounded by the sun-whitened skeletons of those who have sought it—and failed.

Robert Benchley) set out on a tour of the Latin-American countries to pick the prettiest girls from each nation for an elaborate musical revue. What happens in the development of that not very important story theme is strictly incidental, however, to its being an excuse for any number of good comedy situations, a fastly paced succession of song and dance features appropriate to Mexico, Cuba and Brazil—appropriate, not only because Hollywood set out to select "something typical" in each case, but because the performers are Latin America's best: Isabelita, Rosario and Antonio, Miguelito Valdes, Harold and Lola, Chuy Reyes and his orchestra, Nestor Amaral and his Samba Band. With songs by Ary Barroso, Margarita Lecuona, Pepe Guizar, and others.

I'LL REMEMBER APRIL (Universal) It's music! It's murder! And it's Gloria Jean and Kirby Grant on the singing and sleuthing side. And mighty purty singing, too, of the title song, "I'll Remember April." This is the tune that was put on the shelf several years ago and just recently came into its own on the Hit Parade, proving you can't keep a good song down, if it's good!

THIS MAN'S NAVY (M-G-M) Wally Beery's back again as one of those hard-bitten, old-liners with a soft spot in his heart for an imaginary son. When this affection is transferred out of the imaginary into the real, in the form of Tom Drake, Wally goes overboard trying to make his son a hero. Inevitable then that difficulties and conflicts should arise when Tom Drake behaves in an unhero-like manner during the heat of battle, and finally transfers to another branch of service. But the picture ends on a happy note, with father and son reunited.

SHE GETS HER MAN (Universal) doesn't apply to a happy-romance conclusion for heroine Joan "Pilkie" Davis. It means that, with the questionable "help" of able comedian Leon Errol, she upholds the crime-squelching reputation of her mother, the late Ma Pilkington, and in 74 minutes flat runs down the dastardly needle murderer who is plaguing the fair city of Clayton. William Gargan is the newspaperman who purloins her affections, but remains aloof from them. The rest of the cast who aid, abet, and sometimes foil, both the crime and heart pursuits include Vivian Austin, Milburn Stone, Ian Keith, Russell Hicks and singer Bob Allen.

MR. EMMANUEL (United Artists) is the long awaited English film, based on Louis Golding's best-seller, which heralds the arrival of a new star in the firmament—Greta Gynt—popular Norwegian actress. The song "I Don't Know You," sung so effectively by Miss Gynt, will undoubtedly join the ranks of the many "slow and sultry" current favorites.

The story revolves around a kind old English Jew, Mr. Emmanuel (Felix Aylmer) and his efforts to carry out a pledge made to a German refugee boy (Peter Mullins) to find out the whereabouts of the boy's mother, who is "somewhere in Germany." The innocent and unknowing Mr. Emmanuel "asks too many questions," in the pitiful belief that he's protected by his English passport; The Gestapo "gets" him, and only by a miracle does he get back to the safety and security that is England. (P.S.—you won't soon forget the faces of those who didn't!)

THE UNSEEN (Paramount) is a superb picture with a superlative cast. The mystery "enshrouds" the house next door to David Fielding's (Joel McCrea). Murders abound in Salem Alley. Elizabeth Howard (Gail Russel) is hired by David Fielding as a governess for his two children. In trying to unravel the tangled plot, she is aided by one of her charges, Ellen Fielding, (Nona Griffith) and hindered by the craftiness of her other charge, Barnaby Fielding (Richard Lyon). Watch these two children —they're good. Dr. Charles Evans (Herbert Marshall) is the friend of the family. These are excellent characterizations by Isobel Elsom, Mikhail Rasumny and Phyllis Brooks. The mood of the picture is somber —and the suspense will "get you" if you don't watch out.

THE TOWN WENT WILD (PRC) trying to figure out what happened one night 25 years ago when David Conway (Freddie Bartholomew) and Bob Harrison (James Lydon) were born. What they wanted to know was whether David Conway was really David Conway, or was he Bob Harrison—and was Bob Harrison really Bob Harrison or was he—well, you know.

Carol Harrison (Jill Browning) had a very personal reason for wanting the correct answer to this conundrum, for she was engaged to marry David Conway—or was he her brother? Well, you can see how confusing the situation was, and Edward Everett Horton and Tom Tully, the feuding fathers, do nothing to relieve it.

G.I. HONEYMOON (Monogram) Like a good many girls today, Ann (Gale Storm) does her darndest to stay Deborah Kerr, Red Cross war nurse in the "Colonel Blimp" movie. Mar. 15th to 21st is Red Cross War Fund Week in all theaters.

CITY........................STATE...............

Roy Rogers, Dale Evans and Trigger—the hoss what talks—share the honors in "Utah."

with her brand new spouse (Peter Cookson)—but the Army has first call on his services. The groom gets transferred to a new post. His bride goes after him. The Army cancels all leaves. And so it goes, with the Army getting its man, and the bride minus groom.

THUNDERHEAD — SON OF FLICKA (20th Century-Fox) All those who saw and loved "Flicka" will not want to miss the tender and moving story of Flicka's son, Thunderhead. Roddy MacDowall again plays the part of Ken McLaughlin; Preston Foster, his father, and Rita Johnson, his mother.

Thunderhead, to everyone's surprise, is white—evidently a throwback to Flicka's wild albino sire. Ken tries to make a race horse of the colt and persuades the family to bank their meager funds on his success—only to lose everything, when Thunderhead's wild blood causes him to bolt the race. But the picture does not end here. The final scenes are both exciting and touching.

Recommended entertainment for all lovers of horses and the wide open spaces of Utah, beautifully filmed in technicolor.

DOUBLE EXPOSURE (Paramount) A fake picture lands Nancy Kelly a job on Flick Magazine, edited by Chester Morris, a guy with a gleam in his eye. To keep that gleam under control, Phillip Terry, Nancy's boyfriend, comes along, too, posing as her brother. Everything goes all right until Chester finds out he's been duped and jumps to the wrong conclusion. Here, that ever-popular screen device—murder—comes into the picture, and Nancy is accused of doing the foul deed. But another double exposure brings her out of jail and into the arms of the guy who loves her the mostest and the bestest.

NOTHING BUT TROUBLE (M-G-M) And what would you expect when Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy get together again? This time Stan and Oliver, descendants of a long line of chefs and butlers, are unwittingly involved in a plot to assassinate the child king of an exiled government. Stan and Oliver go through their usual routines, befuddle everything and everybody, but in the doing completely foil the killer. Good fun, if you like Laurel and Hardy.

JOHN DILLINGER (Monogram release), a King Bros. production, with Lawrence Tierney (screen newcomer signed recently by RKO, after little theater experience, and borrowed for this picture), Edmund Lowe, and Anne Jeffreys. Tierney plays the title role, with Lowe as Specs, leader of the gang Dillinger took over, and Miss Jeffreys as the "woman in red" who tipped off the FBI to make the raid that finally "got" the notorious Mr. Badman.

SEE MY LAWYER (Universal), an Olsen and Johnson tops-all for wackiness, having to do with a trio of legal eagles looking for law business (Alan Curtis, Noah Beery Jr., and Joe Wilson), and a pretty night club dancer named Betty Wilson (Grace McDonald). The plot—not that we mean to go into it—would sound tried and truly old-formula, but this line-up, sohelpyou, is enough to make "Romeo and Juliet" strange people to Willy Shakespeare. It's guaranteed — any resemblance between this and anything you've ever seen before is strictly coincidental with "Hellzapoppin'," and that's all!

EARL CARROLL VANITIES (Republic) is the musical mix-up of "royalty" in the USA. Her Highness (Constance Moore) arrives with Mama Queen (Mary Forbes), and retinue, to raise a loan for their "sinking" country, Turania. While visiting her friend's (Eve Arden) night club, our heroine stands in for one of the performers who "broke an ankle" for plot purposes, and is discovered by Earl Carroll (Otto Kruger), who signs her up for his new show. Dennis O'Keefe makes the music for the show, and is the guy who gets the girl. The show goes over, and so does the loan. Among the lesser lights are Pinky Lee, Edward Gargan and the inimitable "Parkyakarkus." Woody Herman's band gives out with the music.

THE CRIME DOCTOR'S TRAP (Columbia) with Warner Baxter, Stephen Crane, Dennis Moore, Hillary Brooke, Jerome Cowan, Lloyd Corrigan, Robert Scott, Emory Parnell, and Anthony Carouso and Lupita Tovar. It's murder with a money motive, and all the usual number of misleading clues—including vampirism, used to throw suspicion where it doesn't belong. But isn't that what makes mysteries mysterious?

UTAH (Republic) is a musical Westerner with Roy Rogers, the singin' cowboy, and his hoss Trigger. All the rustlin' and fightin' take place on the Bar-X Ranch, owned by the beauteous Dale Evans, and operated by her manager, Roy Rogers. Ben Bowman (Grant Withers) is the cheatin', lyin' crook who gets his come-uppance, and George "Gabby" Hayes is the faithful friend who's always there when you need him. Bob Nolan and the Sons of the Pioneers do double duty as ranch hands and vocalizers.

LEAVE IT TO BLONDIE (Columbia), another in the so-popular series with Dagwood (Arthur Lake) and his wife (Penny Singleton) and their son, Alexander (Larry Simms). The trouble this time is with balancing the family budget. One complication leads to a dozen, and the unraveling is one part happy miracle, two parts because all those things that happened really shouldn't have happened in the first place.

GENTLE ANNIE (M-G-M) classifies as a Western, Oklahoma rancher style, and James Craig, the U. S. Marshal who comes into the picture disguised as a hobo, types as the hero sent from who-cares-where to fall in love with the pretty gal (Donna Reed) and try to straighten out a bullet-riddled plot. With Marjorie Main in the title role; Paul Langton and Henry Morgan, her two errant sons; and Barton MacLane as the crooked sheriff.

ROUGH, TOUGH AND READY (Columbia Pictures) That's Chester Morris and Victor McLaglen. They're rough, tough, and always ready to make love to a beautiful girl, preferably the other fellow's. Their friendship holds fast, though, until that inevitable day when Chester wins one girl too many away from Vic. Then the fireworks start. But there's a happy ending, chillun, with everybody "joining up," including pretty Jean Rogers, who joins the WACs.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (United Artist Release) Ordinarily a million dollars is a nice thing to have lying around, but Monty Brewster found that money has a way of complicating one's life—that is, if you've a million dollars that must be spent within two months and no one's to know the reason why. His friends think he's taken leave of his senses, and his fiancée almost walks out on him. It's a zany plot (produced by Edward Small), but with laughs aplenty contributed by Dennis O'Keefe, Helen Walker, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, June Havoc, Gail Patrick, and Mischa Auer.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD (Universal) And so he does! It's Lee Tracy, the gift-o'-gab boy, in a typical fast-talking Tracy plot. "Gabby"—that's Tracy—is a radio announcer, and Lorn Gray—that's Brenda Joyce—a psychology student. She offers him advice for his lovelorn program, and he offers her some fancy romancing, Lee Tracy style. It's a staccato beat in presto time.

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

AT MGM:

WEEKEND AT THE WALDORF is now in its second month of production with Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner, Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson (you should see his new black and white tweed suit that he wears with a white shirt and a black cashmere sweater—really something), Keenan Wynn, Robert Benchley, and Leon Ames. This is one of Metro's super colossal pictures, of course, which brings to mind the comment of a serviceman overheard talking at the Hollywood Canteen. "You can always tell a Metro picture," he said, "because at the last there is a bigger production number than you've ever seen, or a bigger accident, or a fancier party, or a head of redder hair."

HER HIGHNESS AND THE BELLBOY is nearly finished. Hedy Lamarr, Bob Walker, June Allyson, and Warner Anderson (watch for his performances because he's good) are in this one. Hedy was telling June Allyson that she has decided on the names for her forthcoming Loder production. If a boy, he will be called John, of course. If a girl, she will be called Victoria because Hedy thinks 1945 is the Victory year. In time to come, little Vic isn't going to like that much —how is she going to flub a year or five, thus pinned down in history?

YOLANDA AND THE THIEF in Technicolor is brand new on the Metro lot. Fred Astaire has perfected some of the best routines of his life for this one, assisted by Lucille Bremer (who was the older girl in "Meet Me In St. Louis") Frank Morgan and Leon Ames are also added for comedy interest, and Mildred Natwick is a fugitive from "Blithe Spirit" of Broadway.

THE HARVEY GIRLS is the story of a loaf of bread and a glass of milk beside the railroad track, starring Judy Garland, Angela Lansbury, John Hodiak, Edward Arnold, Preston Foster and Shirley Patterson (beaued occasionally by Bob Walker). On the set, Judy was showing Angela a charming locket in which was concealed a picture of Director Vincent Minnelli, whom Judy will marry in the fall. Mr. Minnelli is now remodeling his home for the reception of a bride.

AT PARAMOUNT:

TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE is the musical starring Betty Hutton, Sonny Tufts, Bobby Watson (he usually plays Hitler), and Ruth Donnelly.

MASQUERADE IN MEXICO is the first picture Dottie Lamour has made in a long time and fans have been yelling bloody murder in protest over her idleness. Calm down, chickadees—here's a newie. She is surrounded by Arturo de Cordova (who has received more mail than Santa Claus in December since the release of "Frenchman's Creek"), Patric Knowles, Ann Dvorak, and dancer Billy Daniels.

AT RKO:

THE INVISIBLE ARMY has John Wayne, Richard Loo, Philip Ahn, Beulah Bondi and Tony Quinn playing cops and robbers in China. Looks good, though.

THE SPANISH MAIN—don't miss this one! Paul Henreid, Maureen O'Hara, Walter Slezak, John Emery, Binnie Barnes, and Barton MacLane are having the time of their lives strolling around in pirate's clothes, fencing, brandishing giant steins, and being Technicolorful.

JOHNNY ANGEL is now in its second month of production with George Raft, Signe Hasso as a brownette (she wore a blonde wig in "The Story Of Dr. Wassell"), Claire Trevor (showing off pictures of her plump son), and Hoagy Carmichael.

THOSE ENDEARING YOUNG CHARMS is the vehicle for Laraine Day, Robert Young, Ann Harding, and Dewey Robinson. The title of this picture has provided punsters with a field day. Those who are gratified by Bob Young's long career in pictures want to call the story "Those ENDURING Young Charms," and those who beam at Bob as the nicest actor of all time simply want the marquee arrayed this way: "Those Endearing YOUNG Charms."

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS OF 1945 is keeping Joan Davis, Jack Haley, Philip Terry (who received a gold cigarette case set with diamonds and rubies from his wife, Joan Crawford, for Christmas), and Gene Krupa.

AT WARNER BROTHERS:

THIS LOVE OF OURS is the picture in which John Garfield, Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark, John Ridgely, and Rosemary DeCamp are working.

MILDRED PIERCE, the dynamic picturization of the James M. Cain novel, is now in its second terrific month with Joan Crawford, Jack Carson (his hair gray in the latter scenes), Zachary Scott, Ann Blyth, and Eve Arden. A goodie—watch for it.

THREE STRANGERS has just started shooting with Geraldine Fitzgerald, Sydney Greenstreet, Peter Lorre, and Robert Shayne scaring the daylights out of the audience.

Why risk cutting cuticle?
— when it's so easy to keep cuticle trim with Trimal!

The safe, gentle way to remove cuticle is the same method used by professional manicurists. Simply wrap cotton around manicure stick and apply Trimal. Then watch dead, loose cuticle soften. Wipe it away with a towel. You'll be amazed and delighted with results! Ask for the 10c or 25c size now – at drug, department or 10c stores.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX

A BELL FOR ADANO is the story of a Major's problems in a recaptured Italian town, and it is being superbly enacted by Gene Tierney (in a blonde wig), John Hodiak, Bill Bendix, Richard Conte, Allyn Joslyn, and Fortunio Bonanova.

CAPTAIN EDDIE is the Rickenbacker story with Fred MacMurray as Captain Eddie, Lynn Bari (looking sweeter than rationed sugar), James Gleason, Richard Conte, and Richard Crane as Captain Cherry, the chief pilot.

COLONEL EFFINGHAM'S RAID is a morsel you mustn't miss—all about a crusty gentleman enacted by Charles Coburn. Joan Bennett, Bill Eythe, and brilliant Elizabeth Patterson are also in the cast.

STATE FAIR is a remake of that splendid Phil Stong novel with Dana Andrews (who may shortly be in uniform despite his three dependents), Jeanne Crain, Dick Haymes, Vivian Blaine (who recently married her agent), and Percy Kilbride.

TWO-FACED QUILLIGAN is keeping Bill Bendix on a bicycle between this set and the "Adano" company. Joan Blondell (wait until you see her "Cissy" in "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn"), Anne Revere, Mary Treen, and John Russell.

CARIBBEAN MYSTERY is a whodunit with James Dunne, Sheila Ryan, and Richard Shaw.

THE DOLLY SISTERS is keeping Betty Grable (who stoutly denies stork rumors), John Payne, June Haver, Trudy Marshall, and Sig Ruman busy. This is also being shot in Technicolor.

AT REPUBLIC:

RETURN AT DAWN is the current picture of William Terry, Lynne Roberts, Grant Withers, and Jerome Cowan. Cowan is the sterling character actor who is one of the best-known, best-liked men around town. He combines a ready wit with great intelligence—and monumental absent-mindedness. The other day he arrived, brisk and eager, on the set at 7:30. He wasn't on call until 11:30—and if you think that isn't a tragedy, imagine your arriving at your office on Sunday morning, unintentionally.

AT UNIVERSAL:

THAT'S THE SPIRIT is now in its second month of shooting, with Jack Oakie, Peggy Ryan, Johnny Coy (the brilliant dancer who will one day rank with Astaire), Gene Lockhart, Andy Devine, and Arthur Treacher.

A NIGHT IN PARADISE is being shot in Technicolor with Merle Oberon, Turhan Bey, Gale Sondergaard, and Ernest Truex.

INVITATION TO DEATH is another Sherlock Holmes adventure with Basil Rathbone, Nigel Bruce, Hillary Brooke, Henry Daniell, and Eve Amber.

THE NAUGHTY NINETIES could also be called THE NITWIT NIGHTIES as it stars that mad pair, Abbott & Costello. Alan Curtis, Louis Collier, Rita Johnson, and Henry Travers will also be fugitives from a straight jacket.

LADY ON A TRAIN is a thing you mustn't miss because of Deanna Durbin, Ralph Bellamy (did you see him in "Guest In The House"?), David Bruce, Edward Everett Horton, and Dan Duryea.

LOSES 45 POUNDS

-and an Inferiority Complex

"My husband's birthday gift to me—the DuBarry Success Course—has brought new happiness to us both," says Mrs. Rita Unger of Hagerstown, Md.

"Just to stand before the mirror and see a figure you're proud of! Just to have the satisfaction of slipping into a size 14 dress after wearing a 38 for years! Just to hear the compliments of your family and friends on how wonderful you look! Those are rewards any woman would be willing to work for. But they came to me when I finished the DuBarry Course, and the weeks I had spent on it hadn't been work at all—they had been more of an exciting adventure.

"I had put on weight after my babies came, until I weighed 178. Then, for my birthday my husband gave me the DuBarry Success Course. (Don't tell me husbands aren't observing and thoughtful!) The very first week I lost 8 pounds, and began to feel buoyant and gay. Today I weigh 133, and my figure is as slim as the day I was married. My skin is lovelier and softer, my hair lustrous and alive, and for the first time I know how to use make-up effectively. With all that weight gone, I have a surprising amount of energy. Thanks to DuBarry, I am getting more out of life than ever before. I can really enjoy my family and my home. Of course, my husband takes the credit, but that's all right with me!"

WORDS OF MUSIC

work, she'll team up with Gene Krupa for a Brazilian jam session number, "Cho Cho," in which Gene will play the drums with his hands.

When Andy Russell left New York to return to Hollywood for his movie debut, he had his fingers crossed, but tight. His first role will be opposite Betty Hutton in "Stork Club," which Buddy De Sylva is producing for Paramount. "I don't know if I'll be much of an actor," he told me, "but Mr. De Sylva said he would make extensive tests before we started shooting, so maybe it will turn out all right."

Martha Stewart has been signed by Twentieth Century-Fox and will get a big buildup by the studio. She was under contract to Metro a year ago, but they did nothing with her and dropped her option. So she came back to New York, landed a Victor recording contract, and went into the Copacabana Club, where Twentieth's scouts saw her.

David Street, the good-looking singer on the Joan Davis radio show, has been contracted by Republic Studios for one of the leads in their musical extravaganza, "New Faces of 1945." David's first records for Victor will be released soon.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

Decca:

If you're a Crosby fan, here are three new ones by the Bing. The first disc couples "Let's Take The Long Way Home" and "I Promise You," with John Scott Trotter's orchestra. Then there's "Sleigh Ride in July" and "Like Someone in Love," with John Scott again. On the third, Bing shares the spotlight with the Andrews Sisters and Vic Schoen's orchestra. It's the big hit, "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive," and "There's A Fellow Waiting in Poughkeepsie."

"This Heart of Mine," the beautiful tune from Metro's "Ziegfeld Follies," is done by Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Band, with Eugenie Baird on the vocal. On the reverse side you'll find "Robin Hood," the novelty sensation of the juke boxes, with "Fats" Daniels on the lyrics.

Dick Haymes is heard on "I Don't Want To Love You" and "Let The Rest Of The World Go By," with Victor Young's orchestra. On the latter, Dick has a mixed chorus behind him.

Helen Forrest does one of her best solo jobs to date on "Don't Ever Change," and "Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry." Victor Young's orchestra again.

"I Didn't Know About You" and "Saturday Night" (Is The Loneliest Night In The Week) are both given excellent treatment by Woody Herman's great band. Woody does the vocal for the first side and Frances Wayne does the ditto on the reverse.

That "Is You Ain't" man, Louis Jordan, gathers his Tympany Five around him for a record that is strictly jive, "You Can't Get That No More," and "Mop! Mop!"

For a switch in pace, there's Guy Lombardo's "A Little On The Lonely Side," sung by Jimmy Brown, and "My Heart Sings," with a Stuart Foster vocal.

Duke Ellington's newest hit, "Don't You Know I Care," serves as an excellent vehicle for Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra and Patti Palmer's vocalizing. On the flipover, it's "More and More" with Teddy Walters handling the lyrics.

Before Roy Eldridge broke up his band to join Artie Shaw's trumpet section, he recorded two fine instrumentals, "Twilight Time" and "Fish Market."

Here's Music in the Morgan Manner, with Russ singing "Wonderful Winter" and the band and Marjorie Lee doing "Midsummer's Eve," one of the beautiful numbers from "Song of Norway."

Gertrude Niesen has waxed the two biggest hits from her wallop Broadway show, "Follow The Girls," "I Wanna Get Married," and "Twelve O'Clock And All Is Well." Don't listen for the "Married" side on the radio. The lyrics are, shall we say, tres risque.

Victor:

Freddy Martin has two platters, his first since the recording ban was lifted. Number one is "Magic Is The Moonlight" and "Strange Music," and the second is "Evalina" and "When The Boys Come Home." Artie Wayne does all four vocals.

Dinah Shore lends her velvet voice to "Let's Take The Long Way Home" and "Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry," with Albert Sack's orchestra.

Two of Cole Porter's tunes from "Seven Lively Arts" have been waxed by Charlie Spivak. "Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye" is sung by Irene Daye, and Jimmy Saunders tells the vocal story of "Only Another Boy and Girl."

The Phil Moore Four jumps in with a solid duo, "And Her Tears Flowed Like Wine" and "Yip Yip De Hootie, My Baby Said Yes."

Perry Como will probably cause plenty of Como-motion with "More and More" and "I Wish We Didn't Have To Say Goodnight." Lou Martin's Victor orchestra provides the background.

Here's "Saturday Night" again, this time by Hal McIntyre's orchestra, backed up by "My Funny Valentine." Ruth Gaylor sings both tunes. "Valentine" is a lovely Rogers and Hart composition from the musical comedy hit of a few years ago, "Babes In Arms."

If you like Duke Ellington as much as I do, don't miss his newest release, "I Didn't Know About You" with vocal refrain by Joya Sherrill, and "I Ain't Got Nothin' But The Blues," with Albert Hibbler handling the singing chores. Both numbers are compositions by the Duke.

The King Sisters bounce forth with "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive" and "Kind Treatment." They have excellent musical support from Buddy Cole and his orchestra.

When you hear the song, "Cocktails for Two," you usually think of soft lights and romance, but I'm afraid you'll have a different reaction to Spike Jones' version. It's strictly for laughs, as is the turn-over, "Leave Those Dishes In The Sink, Ma."

ADVICE FOR ABUSED SKIN

DON'T BE AFRAID AND STOP WORRYING NOW ABOUT EXTERNAL SKIN TROUBLES. FOLLOW THESE EASY DIRECTIONS. YOU CAN NOW ENJOY A PORCELAIN-LIKE SOFTER SKIN

HAVE you ever stopped to realize that the leading screen stars that you admire, as well as the beautiful models who have lovely soft white skin, were all born just like you with a lovely smooth skin?

Almost everyone can have a natural, healthy, normal complexion which is in itself, beauty, and which gains admiration and is pleasing to look at. All you must do, is to follow the simple rules of nature. Models and screen stars must give their skin special attention. So should you because everyone looks at your face. Your social success may depend upon your being good looking and pleasant to look at. A lovely skin may be a short cut to success in love and business. Your pleasure is worth it, and you owe it to yourself to give yourself a chance to enjoy a healthy, beautiful complexion. Medical science gives us the truth about a lovely skin. There are small specks of dust all around us most of the time. When these little specks, which are in the air, get into an open pore in your skin they can in time, cause the pore to become larger and more susceptible to dust and infection. These open pores, begin to form blackheads which become infected and bring you all of the misery of pimples, irritations, or blemishes. When you neglect your skin and abuse it by not giving it the necessary external care it requires, you leave yourself wide open for external skin miseries which cause embarrassment, self consciousness, inferiority, and make you feel like a prisoner within yourself. When you know that your skin is smooth, white, and fine, you have more confidence and it helps improve your personality and your entire well being. A flawless skin is priceless, yet it only costs you a few pennies daily to keep it normal, natural, more healthy and lovely. Many never realize or even suspect that the difference between having a glamorous complexion and being ordinary is just the difference between having blackheads and pimples, and not having them. A little care and the proper attention with the double Viderm treatment can mean the difference between enjoying fine skin or missing out on many pleasures because of an ugly, abused skin. The double Viderm treatment is made under the supervision of a doctor and costs you only a few cents for a treatment which you can give yourself.

Just write or mail the coupon below, and you will receive two jars of the double Viderm treatment with full directions which are written by a doctor. One jar contains a jelly-like formula which is a highly concentrated soap which penetrates and acts as an antiseptic upon the pores. This is used after you wash your face in the usual way. After you use the special Viderm skin cleanser, you apply the Viderm fortified, medicated skin cream. You rub this in, leaving an almost invisible protective covering for the surface of your skin. This double treatment has worked wonders for so many cases of abused skin and it must amaze you, too, or it won't cost you a penny. You must be absolutely pleased and delighted within ten days, or your money will be cheerfully refunded. It is a guaranteed treatment. Enjoy it. Send for it now.

Use your double Viderm treatment every day, until your skin is as smooth and clear as you may want it. Then, use it only once a week to remove stale make-up and dust specks that infect your pores and to aid in healing external irritations. When you prevent blackheads, you prevent externally caused skin miseries and pimples.

Columbia:

The old professor, Kay Kyser, Dolly Mitchell, and the trio, do "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate" and "Like Someone In Love."

Tommy Tucker is back on wax with "My Heart Sings," sung by Don Brown and The Two Timers, with Don doing double duty on "Don't Ever Change."

The great Benny Goodman Quintet, appearing in "Seven Lively Arts," do two of the numbers from the show, "Ev'Ry Time We Say Goodbye" and "Only Another Boy and Girl." Peggy Mann is featured on the first side and Jane Harvey is on the reverse.

Drumaestro Gene Krupa and his orchestra have a pleasing duo in "I Walked In," lyricized by Buddy Stewart, and the G-Noters swing out on "I'll Remember Suzanne."

If you liked the music from "Oklahoma," and who didn't, be sure to get the "Oklahoma Medley," which includes all the songs from the show, done in the masterful style of Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra.

Les Brown has a good twosome in "Twilight Time," done as an instrumental, and "Sentimental Journey," with Doris Day taking the musical trip.

Ginny Simms' new one is "This Heart of Mine" and "I'm In A Jam" (with Baby). Ginny's radio conductor, Edgar Fairchild, is the baton man.

The old favorite, "When Your Lover Has Gone," has been recorded by Harry James, with plenty of trumpet in evidence. "The Horn" and his quintet get together for "I'm Confessin' " on the other side.

Ray Noble and his orchestra give us "Sweet Dreams, Sweetheart" and "How Bright The Stars," with Larry Stewart's vocals. The latter tune was adapted from Ray's "Indian Suite."

Count Basie and his solid aggregation, are in for "I Didn't Know About You," sung by Thelma Carpenter, and a typical Basie number, "Red Bank Boogie."

Capitol:

Liltin' Martha Tilton has recorded two fine ballads, "I Should Care" and "Stranger In Town," with Paul Weston's orchestra. "Stranger" was written by Mel Torme, the talented singer-drummer-arranger, who is heard on the Fitch Bandwagon show.

Johnnie Johnston fans will like his platter of "What A Sweet Surprise" and "My Heart Sings." Paul Baron's orchestra and arrangements. Incidentally, Johnnie was recently signed for a return engagement to New York's Capitol Theatre, where he made such a hit on his first appearance.

The Pied Pipers and Paul Weston do a swell job on "Dream" and "Tabby The Cat." You'll remember "Dream" as the beautiful theme song on Johnny Mercer's Chesterfield show.

Stan Kenton's band does "Ev'Ry Time We Say Goodbye" with a Gene Howard vocal, and on the flipover, Anita O'Day warbles a jivey thing, "Are You Livin', Old Man?" which should prove to be as big a seller as Kenton's "And Her Tears Flowed Like Wine."

Jam Notes:

Eileen Barton is going off the Sinatra show, and will probably be set on a new radio commercial shortly. . . . "The Voice" has been taking it a bit slow since he dropped "The Hit Parade," and has been spending a lot of time in Palm Springs, resting before he starts his new picture for R.K.O. . . . Speaking of "The Hit Parade," I don't particularly relish Lawrence Tibbett as a replacement for Sinatra. I've always liked Tibbett, but I just don't think he belongs on that program. . . . Tommy Dix, who clicked in his first film, "Best Foot Forward," and then went into the army, has been playing night clubs in the east since his medical discharge. He was a big hit at Manhattan's veddy chic Persian Room at the Plaza Hotel. . . . Sgt. David Rose, the composer-conductor, who has been very ill, is reported much improved. . . . Jane Froman has made a sensational comeback after her tragic clipper crash a couple of years ago, and is planning a nation wide concert tour this summer. . . . Charlie Spivak is the latest band leader to form his own music publishing company. . . . Spike Jones has been killing the people in theatres, especially with his rendition of "Holiday For Strings," which is one of the funniest things I've ever heard. Spike hopes to record it for Victor soon. . . . Jo Stafford is going to solo it from now on. and made her debut in the night club field at La Martinique in New York. . . . Buddy Rich will probably form his own band when his contract with Tommy Dorsey is up in May. . . . Eddie Condon's Carnegie Hall Jazz Concert orchestra has been signed by Decca. . . . Tommy Dorsey is changing male vocalists again. Freddy Stewart is out, and his successor will probably be an unknown. . . . Ginnie Powell cut out from the Gene Krupa band and may take one of the many studio contracts which have been offered her.

TAKING A GANDER AT DRAKE

"This Man's Navy" stars Wallace Beery, with Tom Drake playing the role of his imaginary son and sinking a submarine.

he is rapidly beginning to be taken seriously as an artist. Besides, he thinks he is mentally ready for more mature roles than his face seems to warrant. This upsets him.

When he was about sixteen he had the opportunity to try out as a singer. That was when he decided that it was better to be excited after the event than before. He had been so wrought up ahead of time that he hadn't done himself justice and consequently, was a flop. He admits now that he doesn't think he was equipped to be a singer. But the fiasco taught him something important about showmanship, and he went on from there to where he is now—which is in Hollywood, with a pleasant contract and several good parts already under his belt. That's not bad!

He lives in a modest house in Beverly Hills, which he rents "furnished." He says it's furnished exactly like a house which is rented furnished and nothing much can be done about it at the moment. His sister, Mrs. Claire Kennedy, and her two youngsters live with him. Mrs. Kennedy runs the house, so Tom has no domestic worries. This is just as well, since his only domestic accomplishment is his ability to make a "salad di Cicco," an ornate and highly seasoned dish which he concocts happily for guests. He expects applause for it, too, especially for the dressing which involves a coddled egg.

The quartet is looked after by a motherly soul whom Tom engaged simply because her name is Effie May. When she came for her interview, she announced that she had no references but that she was a pretty good housekeeper and her name was Effie May. Tom thought he couldn't go wrong with anyone with a name like that. She turned out to be a jewel who possesses, moreover, a niece, named Willie Dean, who adds a deal of luster to the little parties Tom and his sister like to give.

There are never more than eight guests at these affairs because, Tom shudders, "If you had any more, it would have been an 'arranged' affair and those are deadly. If people can't be relaxed and feel at home at a party, then it's no fun." So the food is served buffet style, and there is music and a lot of talk and no one has to play a game unless he wants to. If it chances, however, that Tom must attend a party given by someone else, he always hopes that it will be "good and big. If it's a really huge crowd, you can lose yourself in it and be sort of anonymous."

The answer to all this is, of course, that Tom is still fundamentally shy. He hasn't quite adjusted himself to the conditions which have changed so fast and so frequently since he was a lad. Life hasn't been very kind to him—and it shows, somehow, in his face. Women have an instant desire to mother him, to give him a little pat and reassure him about whatever vague thing it is that is troubling him. But they don't. Some unconscious dignity and reserve in him prevents them.

Tom was born in New York City. His real name is Alfred Alderdice. His parents were Alfred and Gertrude Alderdice, and his father was an importer. The family moved to Westchester while Alfred, junior, was a very little boy. When he was six, his little sister died. He had known, vaguely, that she had been ill for a very long time and that his father had taken her to a place called "Europe" to try to make her well. But she died. When he was eleven his father died, and Tom was old enough by then to understand something about death. When he was sixteen, his beloved mother followed his sister and his father in death and young Tom realized that he was an orphan and "on his own," although an uncle-guardian supervised the remainder of his education. Mrs. Kennedy is his one remaining close relative.

"Three deaths in your immediate family in fifteen years do something to you, especially when you are very young," he observes. "There's nothing much to prop you up during that trying time when you're trying to find out what life is all about."

He attended Iona School in New Rochelle and later Mercersburg Academy in Pennsylvania. But his ten-year-old dream of "show business" persisted. So he launched into an acting career, beginning with a job in summer stock in Poughkeepsie. The rest of the story is routine—although it seemed anything but that to Tom in those days, as he agonized his way from disappointment to disappointment. He was always just missing a good part in a successful play—or getting one in a play which promptly folded—until his role in the Broadway play, "Janie." That had a long run and established him as a young actor to be reckoned with, and now he knows that all the things he did—and a good many of the things he almost did—before that, became assets in the career which was to follow. The agony wasn't wasted. Metro signed him on the strength of "Janie" and he played, in swift succession, in "The White Cliffs of Dover," "Two Girls and a Sailor," "Mrs. Parkington," and recently, "Meet Me in St. Louis" with Judy Garland.

Just now he wishes that he could fall in love, providing, of course, that "she" would fall in love with him simultaneously so that his love story would have a happy ending, as well as beginning. He hasn't any clear picture of the ideal girl, but he is definite about what constitutes the

"Make-Up" Your Hair
for shining lustre...
a glorious new color effect

TODAY, glamour is up to you. Through the modern miracle of hair "make-up," you can capture loveliness and brighten your whole appearance . . . with sparkling, colorful hair!

No matter what color hair you have, with Marchand's Make-Up Hair Rinse you can give it new lights and add an "overtone" of glowing color — without coloring it permanently!

So safe, so easy to use at home, this exciting new hair "make-up" helps you achieve the very color effect you want! With it, you can heighten the natural color of your hair . . . give it a "warmer" or "cooler" tone . . . even blend little gray streaks in with the original shade! A color chart on the Rinse package shows which of the 12 Marchand shades to use.

After your shampoo, dissolve a package of Marchand's Rinse in warm water and brush or pour it through your hair. Almost instantly, all soap-film vanishes! Your hair is gleaming with new color, softer and easier to manage!

Marchand's Rinse is absolutely harmless. Not a bleach—not a permanent dye—it rinses on and washes off as easily as your facial make-up.

ideal marriage—and he considers marriage the most important thing in anyone's life, regardless of the most glittering dreams of fame and fortune.

For a successful marriage, he thinks it is important that the two people know how to have fun together. It's nice if you like the same things—amusements, books, the same kinds of people. But he doesn't think it's absolutely necessary. "Any woman who is really, completely in love with a man will make him a good wife," he concludes, sagely. "But he must be deeply in love with her, too, or it will all be wasted."

He wants a home of his own, "with roots underneath it," something he has helped to choose, plan and furnish, something which will belong to him.

He owns three enormous dogs, two Great Danes and a police dog, and feeding them in war-time poses some interesting problems.

He is happiest with people in his own age bracket, feels more relaxed than he does if too many years intervene in either direction. But he likes and is interested in people from all walks of life, the more varied the better, people doing every kind of work, if he can meet and talk with them one or two at a time. He thinks he has not met one person—not one—in Hollywood from whom he has not learned something.

He usually trusts his first impressions of people he meets, but he admits that sometimes he doesn't get an impression. They just don't register. Weeks after meeting someone, he may wake up suddenly to the realization that here is someone really nice—and he must have known it when he first saw him. Or maybe it's the other way. But once he turns his attention to a new personality, he makes up his mind about him, and he isn't likely to change.

He likes a girl who enjoys a picnic on the beach as much as an expensive evening in a swank night club. He likes it if she knows just enough about sports so that she can enjoy them intelligently but not enough so that she fancies herself an expert and lays down the law about it. It embarrasses him if a girl dresses too conspicuously, and he thinks one of the worst sins a woman can commit is to dress too lavishly when she knows ahead of time that a man is taking her to a modest place. Someone suggested to him, with a smile, that sometimes a girl overdresses in the hope that her escort will change his mind and take her to a more lavish spot than he had planned. It's an old Hollywood dodge. Tom looked a bit nonplussed at this suggestion . . . and then he made it clear that that wouldn't work with him. Anyhow, he loathes to wear evening clothes.

He's not very fond of night clubs. They make him feel self-conscious, somehow. Too many people and too much confusion. He likes casual occasions and casual clothes and inconspicuous diversions. He enjoys prizefights and baseball games.

If he had some time to himself, to do as he pleased, he thinks he would like to do a little hunting for small game—not so much for the sake of the game as for the sake of being outdoors. He likes Palm Springs but he thinks that he'd like his permanent home to be either in the heart of Manhattan or far off in the country. He doesn't like compromises.

He thinks he works better in California than in any other place he has ever been. He is astonished when he hears people say the climate here makes them lethargic. It stimulates him to a degree he would have thought impossible a few years ago. He grins and says that one of the reasons he wanted to be an actor was because he thought they always slept until noon. But in California he finds himself rising cheerfully at six-thirty—even on Sunday—and loving it. He has even found that watching the dawn is one of life's greatest experiences.

He loves to eat and enjoys almost anything which is highly seasoned. He doesn't care much for desserts. but he confesses to a fondness for burnt toast.

He is crazy about horses, although his life hasn't given him much time or opportunity for cultivating their acquaintance. When he was a little boy someone took him to the races, and he acquired some picture postcards of thoroughbreds. That started him on his only hobby. He still collects all kinds of pictures—photographs, fine prints, old lithographs—of horses. He doesn't frame them or get them out to show to other people. He keeps them and pores over them when he is alone.

Amelia Earhart captured his imagination while he was still pretty young, and she remains his favorite heroine of fact or fiction today.

He's a pushover for sentimental love stories, reads reams of them. On stage and screen he goes for good, solid drama and no nonsense about it. At the moment "Song of Bernadette" and "Double Indemnity" top his list of favorite pictures. He doesn't know yet what type of role he will aspire to when he begins to feel really mature. He says he feels "too un-tutored, too inexperienced, to judge." His favorite role, up to now, was the one in "Night Must Fall."

He dislikes a person who cannot take a joke, especially on himself and he feels something akin to hatred for individuals who prattle aloud or crunch things or rattle papers during a concert, or a performance in a theater, or at a movie.

He doesn't think he has any pet economies. If he has money and sees something he wants, he buys it—and doesn't stop to think about his future security. His very worst extravagance, he thinks, comes from his irresistible urge always to "grab the check" at a restaurant, no matter what the circumstances. He wants to pay the check—and people usually let him! Second thought makes him feel that perhaps this isn't such an extravagance, after all. Anything which gives a man that much pleasure, and doesn't cost any more than it usually does, is just a small luxury!

He hasn't any special plans for the future and is somewhat awed by people who claim they have worked out "a pattern of living." Life, up to now, hasn't granted him much opportunity for planning or making a pattern. He thinks merely that it is important to keep mentally, as well as physically, fit, to be alert, to be flexible, to be ready to take what comes in stride. He likes to seek, and he listens eagerly to advice from experts. Sometimes he even takes it. But not until he has turned it over and over in his own mind, assimilated it and made it his own.

He's a very canny young man, and you'll be seeing more of him.

THE END.

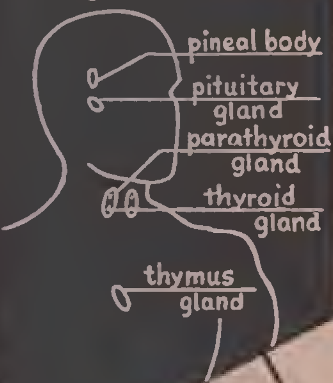
WHICH OF THESE MYSTERIOUS GLANDS CONTROL HAIR GROWTH AND BEAUTY?

See Page 213 in YOUR HAIR



FROM CLEOPATRA to Pin-Up Beauty, woman's crowning glory is hair!

FROM SAMSON to Movie Hero, the mark of masculinity is hair!

No woman can be beautiful with ordinary hair. No man can be handsome without hair. If you care anything at all about your personal appearance, you must read "YOUR HAIR" — the latest scientific treatise on this most personal problem. You not only learn how to take care of your scalp, arrange your hair, and do everything else you need to do about your hair to improve your looks — but you get at the basis of all hair problems. There is no other book like it!

MEN LOOK SMARTER

Appearance is a factor in social and financial success. No matter how smart you are, your advancement can be delayed by a pugilistic hair-cut or patent-leather slickness — by dandruff or odors — by failure to take care of your hair. Decide now to make an asset of your hair — if you have any; or know what to do about it; if you have none. With this new book in your hand, you'll be surprised what you can do, if something needs to be done!

WOMEN LOOK MORE ATTRACTIVE

There is one hair-do that does wonders for you. If you don't know what the style is, read YOUR HAIR to find out. Stringy dull hair may be the only thing that keeps you from being a beauty. Here's your opportunity to overcome such hair problems. Hair styling can make you appear younger, bring out your best points, and hide defects — if you know what you're doing, and why you're doing it.

To a woman seeking beauty, there are chapters in this book on curling and waving alone which are worth the full price of this amazing volume, to say nothing of color restoration, and other hair changes to make you exclaim with joy when you look in your mirror.

Written by the eminent scalp and skin specialist, Dr. Herman Goodman, scalp ills are, of course, treated exhaustively. You expect that in a doctor's book. But what you don't expect, and do get, are those private little secrets of beauty specialists — those little touches that mark the professional from the amateur, which do so much for your appearance.

SAVE DOLLARS

Men and women are spending small fortunes for hair improvement, when probably everything they want to get or know is right in this handy volume.

Every day you go without this authoritative book, you make it just that much harder to overcome your hair troubles. The time to stop thinning hair is before you're bald. The time to change your hair dress is before people call you old-fashioned. The time to make your hair an asset is before it becomes a liability. That means today — right now!

To save money, and your hair, mail the coupon below, today. Just by mailing this coupon, you get 286 pages of hair knowledge, as readable and interesting as a novel. Not a dry text-book, but a thrilling course in hair culture. Mail the coupon NOW. (CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

I HAVE A SECRET PASSION FOR—chocolate-coated ice cream on a stick.

I REMEMBER—
my father's coming home to Sweden after a tour of America with a Swedish choir. He brought me an orange he had bought in California. It was wizened and old, with a skin like leather, but it was my first touch with America and I thought it wonderful.

I DON'T REMEMBER—
my first appearance in films. I was one year old. My father, a portrait artist in Stockholm, rented a motion picture camera and photographed my first birthday party. Although he had no projector and we could not view the films, he continued to make birthday records of me until his death. Sometimes these records took the form of little plays, which I enjoyed very much.

THE NICEST THING ANYONE EVER DID FOR ME—was done by my husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, who had these films reduced to 16 mm. size and sent them to me when I first arrived in Hollywood, alone and lonely. For the first time, I watched my happy past unfold on the screen and saw my mother, who died when I was two.

MY FAVORITE HOBBY—is adding to these life-records with my own camera, taking the highlights in the life of my daughter, Pia.

I DON'T CARE FOR—fishing, card games, breakfast in bed, budgets or a loudly ticking click.

WHEN I WAS A CHILD—
my favorite amusement was reading aloud to myself from plays that contained dramatic scenes. But my father died when I was twelve and I went to live with an uncle who objected to my interest in the theater and thought I should engage in the same occupations that absorbed my cousins. He did not approve of my reading. Presently, I managed to acquire a phonograph which I played in my room; against the music, I proceeded with my dramatic readings, until I was caught by my uncle and forbidden.

I LOVE—
orchestra music, stirring poetry, garden flowers in season, an early morning ride in the country, not having to chatter.

I LIKE—
Perfume bottles, though I do not care particularly for perfume.

MY FAVORITE—picture role was the cockney in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"; clothes are loose-fitting ones, peasant-style skirts and blouses, flat-heeled shoes;
holiday is New Year's Eve. We always spend it at home and it is important to me, personally, much more so than Christmas.

I'M GUILTY OF—
not taking glamour seriously;
turning out lights in hotel rooms;
chewing gum instead of smoking;
not being able to enjoy idleness.

I HAVE NO IDEA—what to do when mechanical gadgets go wrong;
how to compute my income tax.

MY FIRST—visit to a theater convinced me that I had found the thing I wanted to do. Gosta Ekman was the star in the play. I thought him marvelous. I still do. I was only a child; if I had known at the time that when I was seventeen I would actually be playing opposite Mr. Ekman on the screen, the thrill would have been insupportable.
Escort was Peter Lindstrom, then a medical student. He used to take me to the theater. In 1937, he led me to the altar. I can never be grateful enough for his advice, which has helped me at every step of my career.

I ENJOY—
folk songs—cowboy songs, Negro spirituals, old-fashioned lullabies—semi-classical music.
Charcoal sketches, black-and-white character drawings.
Swedish pancakes, very thin, spread with lingonberry jam and powdered sugar.
Long walks in any weather.

I HATE—
Destructive criticism, bad taste, unkindness, people who cheat.

I'M CRAZY ABOUT—little drawings made by my daughter;
home-made bread;
an old Swedish love song;
that floppy leopard doll my husband gave me the first Christmas after we met;
old people; the old have always been kind to me.

SOME DAY—
I want to take Pia to visit Sweden, but I want to make this country my home always;
I want to travel over the United States, visiting all 48 of them;
I'd love to play Joan of Arc—also Mary Magdalene in "Scarlet Lily."

I DISLIKE—
highly colored fingernail polish, except for picture roles; dieting. I diet if necessary because of weight. I love eating but can curb my appetite for my career.

I WISH—
We could have a dog, but our property isn't yet fenced in and we must wait.

I'M FOND OF—the color red; long-sleeved evening gowns; smelts stuffed with anchovies, baked in butter and bread crumbs; steam baths, playing tennis, regular exercises, anything that keeps me active and alert.

I'D LIKE TO—live to see the end of all war, to help build a real and lasting peace, to have some part in a new and better world.

and wandered onto the set on which Mr. Dane Clark was working. The scene had just been finished and a light change was going up, so Dane was meal-sacked into his canvas chair, studying his script. "Anything doing on this set?" asked Gig, strolling up.

Dane flicked his eyes in Gig's direction, saw only a slim, young coast guard character and answered shortly, "Yeah—picture shooting."

"Doesn't seem to be much doing. It's a funny way to make pictures," observed Gig.

"Making a light change," Dane tossed at him shortly.

"Do you work here? I mean, what do you do?" pursued Gig.

"I'm an actor," said Dane, returning to his script.

"You don't look like one," said Gig innocently.

Dane slowly lowered his script, straightened in his chair, and made ready to deliver an El Scorcho to this presumptuous visitor. As he looked squarely into Gig's eyes, Dane recognized his fellow player for the first time.

NOT AS ADVERTISED

During the holidays, Errol Flynn was entertaining two Navy fliers in a well-known Hollywood spot. As the hour was early afternoon, there were few other guests present, but eventually two Waves wandered in, obviously lonely, homesick, and wistful. After having seated herself at the bar, one of the girls—peering into the mirror—recognized Mr. Flynn. She arose with a "Damn The Torpedoes" expression, marched over to the table and said, "It wouldn't be Christmas unless I kissed Errol Flynn." And she did so.

The redoubtable Errol, perennially astonished at the quaint things that befall him, must have been too off-balance to reciprocate in the manner expected of him, because the Wave straightened, regarded the star searchingly and said with brutal honesty, "I don't know what I expected, but I'm disappointed." And slowly she walked away.

WHEN THE B.B.BLUE OF THE NIGHT MEETS THE G.G.GOLD OF THE DAY

Have you ever heard of the Auroratone? High time you did, if your answer is negative. This writer can't explain it in detail (being puzzled by a monkey wrench) but it is an intricate scientific gadget that takes sound and translates it into color. During the research period, thousands of different voices were rendered in Auroratone; experiment finally indicated that, of those tested, Bing Crosby's voice was most capable of awakening gradations of color, harmonious blends, and exciting rainbows of sound.

A visiting Chinese general, after having seen Auroratone and how it worked, asked that Bing sing the Chinese National Anthem in Chinese so that it could be recorded in Auroratone and shown throughout China.

So Universal! Maria (the lady has plans) Montez, Dean (Wife Wanted) Harens; Mocambo.

So Bing, with the assistance of a priest on leave in this country after having spent years in China at a mission, is learning the Chinese anthem phonetically.

WALKING THE PLANK

Walter Slezak was working with Paul Henreid and Maureen O'Hara in "Spanish Main" when his anticipated call came. He pulled off his pirate's wig, but left on his studio make-up and resplendent raider's robes, and scorched home. There he collected his wife and rushed her to the hospital.

Other fathers in the waiting room were so upset at the sight of this 19th Century gentleman—reminding them by his archaic costume that theirs was a vigil as old as mankind itself—that Walter finally returned to the studio, swapped sash and satin for tie and tweed, and returned to the hospital.

Miss Ingrid Elizabeth arrived just after midnight, looking very much like her handsome mother, nee Johanna Van Rijn. A jubilant father telephoned the press as follows, "The most beautiful child ever to arrive at Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital has just weighed in. You may say she is my first child, and that I am resting comfortably."

EMOTIONAL TIES

Bob Walker's stag friends received news of the theft of Bob's entire wardrobe with intense sympathy. They got together in solemn high conclave and mulled over plans for a Bundles For Bob campaign; the meeting adjourned, each gentleman rushed to his home and scrutinized his collection of Christmas ties. The loudest, giddiest, most frightening in each wardrobe was lovingly wrapped and presented to Mr. Walker.

Local citizens no longer carry torches. They carry Walker—same effect.

HALF A PINT OF STAR DUST

department. Around her head she wore a beaded band. "I'm an Indian," she said, "for a routine in 'Where Do We Go From Here?' A blonde Indian in cahoots with Joan Leslie. Some stuff."

She was also wearing a pair of black sneakers, black slacks, a black jersey blouse and a lamb's wool coat, about size nine.

"There goes," said Jimmy McHugh, who will write most of June's songs in the future, "about half a pint of star dust."

Mebby so. But June Haver is also half a pint of dynamite. If anyone ever makes a picture called "Everywoman" in which Virtue and Modesty and Fear are impersonated, June Haver will be cast as Enterprise.

She is a self-made woman, and the manufacture started in First Grade. A piano teacher came around to the different rooms, asking whether any of the pupils wanted to take lessons. June waved her hand aloft and got busy that very afternoon on scales and simple compositions. At the end of the month, when the bill for services rendered was opened by June's somewhat astounded mother, June demonstrated her accomplishment: she could play several light melodies with the verve of a junior Freddy Martin. Score one for Miss Ingenuity at the age of five.

At age 7 she won the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music's Post Music Contest—the prize being the opportunity of making a piano solo appearance with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra conducted by Eugene Goossens.

Don't think that piano was the only interest of our dynamic heroine. No indeed. She sang. She orated. She danced. Quadruple threat.

At the age of nine she won an oratorical contest, and at ten she sang a solo at the ceremonies officially opening the new Frances Willard School in Rock Island, Illinois—her birthplace. This canary appearance won her a singing spot on a Rock Island radio station.

In the depths of the Haver mind, ever active, a few commercial thoughts began to germinate. She had won dozens of amateur honors; when she had to ransack her dresser drawers in search of some misplaced object, the jingling of disturbed medals could be heard for blocks. But it seemed to June that a more financial jingle would be welcome. Why, she thought, didn't she get together a group of her friends who were talented, and present a Saturday morning juvenile radio show? She talked this idea over with the station officials, and they—suppressing grins at this demonstration of native resourcefulness—said, "Go right ahead. See if you can cook up your own program."

In short order some very pleasant sounds were emanating from the nearest broadcasting booth. On the program that June prepared, she emceed, played piano for vocalists, sang a song or two herself, handled the sound effects and, in general, covered more ground than a grasshopper with a hot foot.

Of course, all the parents of the appearing children listened, and June encouraged them to ask friends to tune in and comment by letter upon the show. Then, armed like any advertising agency salesman, she marched into one of the local ice cream companies. "I want to see the manager," she told the office receptionist. "On business," she added firmly when the receptionist gave her the indulgent smile of an adult about to administer a brush-off.

The receptionist announced Miss Haver, who strode into the inner office and ranged herself at one side of a mahogany desk almost as tall as she was. She had prepared her sales talk in advance. She said that all the kids in school listened to that program every Saturday. Most of them also received their allowances on Saturday. If, on that program, someone plugged this particular company's brand of ice cream, it stood to reason that plenty of the local juvenile nickels would fall into the company's till. Moreover, whenever a family decided to have ice cream for dessert, the youngsters would clamor for the brand they knew.

The company official was an astute man. He also had a great heart and an honest admiration for business acumen—even though it be encased in a blonde and incredibly diminutive body. He made a deal: cash payment of $2.00 each Saturday for every member of the cast, plus all the ice cream they could eat at any time.

So stimulated, June really went to work. She named the program the ice cream company's "mainliner," and took her entire cast out to the airport to be photographed with one of American Airways gleaming cross-continental birds. The pilot, co-pilot, and stewardess allowed the junior birdmen and women to wear their caps —a great moment.

When school started, June was so busy with school orations, operettas, and dramatics that she had to relinquish the program.

Skip to summer of 1939. Dick Jurgens was scheduled to play a one-night dance engagement in Rock Island, a fact that aroused in June her most acute business instincts. As soon as Mr. Jurgens and his band checked into the hotel, June presented herself. She told Mr. Jurgens that he would undoubtedly do well in Rock Island, where he was well and favorably known. But, she added, he could grab a lot of free front page publicity and double his take, if he would follow a small suggestion that she would be glad to make.

All he had to do was to let her sing a few numbers with his band. Headlines would then appear to the effect that local girl was going to make good music, and she would personally see to it that all the former members of her radio program, everyone in school, and everyone known to her family even unto the third generation, would be paying Jurgens admission.

Mr. Jurgens was polite but dubious. He said he'd like to hear Miss Haver warble a few stanzas. She obliged. Mr. Jurgens not only capitulated, he made like a man winded on a football field. He predicted for Miss Haver a future that would be dazzling to the degree of the aurora borealis.

band came to town, June descended upon the stick-wielder and gave her sales talk. As word of her enterprise had already spread among musicians, she was welcomed with warmth and special arrangements. That's how she happened to go on tour, chaperoned by her mother, with Ted Fio Rito. That's how she happened to land in Hollywood to make two film shorts: one with Ted, and the other with Tommy Dorsey.

As the Haver family (in addition to her parents, June has two sisters) had long been looking westward from Rock Island with Hollywood reflected in the iris of their eyes, Mrs. Haver decided that since she and June were already here, the rest of the Havers might as well join them.

The family established in Beverly Hills, June enrolled in Beverly Hills High in September, 1941. In line with her usual energetic behavior, she promptly won the lead in the school's production of "Ever Since Eve." She also won first prize in the L.A. Inter-Scholastic Debating League Meet, with a powerful oration entitled, "Don't Weep, America." She had written it immediately after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, and those who have heard June deliver this speech say that it produces goose bumps larger than golf balls, and that if you aren't in tears at the end, you "ain't necessarily hoomin."

20th Century-Fox, impressed by this accumulation of ability, put June under contract. That was one of the high moments of her life. She passed theaters, walking gracefully a foot above the ground and thinking, "Some day soon MY name will be in lights up there."

She began to read plays with the same headlong intensity that had characterized her every endeavor to date. Each time the telephone rang, she expected the caller to be Mr. Zanuck in person, asking her to hurry to the studio to inspect her first motion picture script. She continued her vocal and dancing lessons just to be ready for any emergency.

And then, after eleven months of waiting, a telephone call finally buzzed itself into the Haver family circle. Mrs. Haver answered. It was June's agent calling, and he suggested that June ready herself within the next day or so for a series of trips to other studios. He had caught a rumor to the effect that June's next option was going to be dropped.

June threw herself on the bed and sobbed wildly. "But I've never even been given a chance," she wailed. "It isn't fair. How can they toss me out without even letting me hand Betty Grable a bottle of bubble bath in Technicolor—even if I didn't even say, 'Another towel?' "

The next morning the small, but structural-steel reinforced Haver chin was out to here. "We'll see about this," she announced. From her older sister she borrowed a trim, tailored black suit that added about five years to the visual Haver age. From her mother she borrowed a trim black hat. A tailored white blouse and white glacé gloves completed the ensemble. But for luck, June also borrowed her mother's engagement ring.

Then she went to talk to the head of 20th's Talent Department. She talked and she talked. Every ounce of forensic zeal in her nature was dropped on the scales of a new chance by an eloquent June. "I'll prove to you that I can play romantic leads," she promised, "if you'll just give me a chance. Let me write the script for my own test. Leave everything to me."

The official mopped his brow. "All right," he capitulated, "but make it good."

For two weeks June worked on that script. It was a sophisticated sketch, daring, knowing. The lines were such that they must be handled by an expert. The June-type of expert.

June held a conference with the prop department. She wanted the piano against which she was to sing to be mahogany, so that it would photograph as a dark mass. She wanted a series of palm boughs to droop shadows over one corner of the screen. She wanted the boy, who was to test with her, to wear dinner clothes. Those arrangements made, June borrowed one of her sister's white formals—a lovely thing with a lowcut, shining satin bodice, very revealing, very provocative, and a swirling white net skirt. And, for luck again, June borrowed her mother's engagement ring.

P. S.—Miss Haver's option was dropped. But she was instantly signed to a better contract and cast with equal speed in "Home In Indiana."

As you undoubtedly know, "Home" was shot partially in Kentucky, and partly in southern Illinois. (Making pictures according to this rule of confused geographic location is called Dogpatch Style. It accounts for "Sahara" being made in Southern California, and "The Spanish Main" being shot at Toluca Lake.)

Going on location gave June an opportunity to return to her old home town, which arose magnificently to the occasion. She sang, she danced, she chattered. She addressed her former grade school classmates, now in High School. It was all wonderful.

Then, the minute she returned to Hollywood, she was cast in "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," opposite Dick Haymes—which is a fate just slightly worse than having an unknown uncle die and leave 37,479,298 trillion dollars to you. Is that bad?

In closing, we should explain the cloud of perfume that permeates this page—it comes from June Haver. You see, about two years ago an admirer gave June a huge bottle of Tabu. Mrs. Haver, a wise and careful mother, ruled that the fragrance was too heavy for sixteen-year-old June. Not until she was eighteen was June to be allowed to open the bottle.

Early the morning of June 10, 1944, June arose, rushed to the dresser, broke the seal and doused herself liberally with the exotic liquid. And from that day until this, Miss Haver has walked in an invisible cloud of glorious perfume.

Sweet kid.

THE END

Female "Napoleon"

Joan Fontaine, who has many, many nurses' aid hours to her credit, was working in a psychopathic ward recently. A sweet old lady, on the "Arsenic And Old Lace" type, asked one of the graduate nurses, "Who is that pretty girl over there? She's been so pleasant to me."

"That's Joan Fontaine," said the graduate.

The little lady shook her head commiseratingly. "Poor child. How long has she thought so?"

a smooth stretch of green in front and no swimming pool in back. One of those thoroughly lived-in houses, with flowers crowding the front door in the assurance they are well loved, and the white driveway well used by the kind of people who like to go out, because it's so much fun to get home again. It's a residence so much akin to every other in the well-mannered neighborhood, you'd pass right by without special notice, unless you happened to have the address scribbled in your notebook.

The gentleman who answers your ring, however, is too good-looking to be opening just any door. As a matter of record, he is too good-looking to be opening Lloyd Nolan's door. The shades of Michael Shayne, the sergeants, and all those other "guys" retire in a hurry, for Lloyd is one of the very few screen actors who neither looks nor sounds like his screen self. He has startling silver hair above a youthful tan face, rich brown eyes, and a knowing taste in sports clothes.

Surprisingly, since many of the screen's leading "glamour boys" are fellows who otherwise would pass unnoticed in a crowd, you realize that Nolan-in-person is one of Hollywood's most stunning gents, and the average feminine fan wouldn't pass him without looking back, whether she recognized him or not. For the rest of the afternoon you keep looking at him—and wondering. While most of Hollywood's healthily-hued males cry for the Techni-cameras even more than its females, you keep wondering what Lloyd, in his own natural personality-changing color scheme, would do on the screen. You speculate whether with the right role and a director who could get Nolan as-is on the screen, he might not start a new cycle for himself, as well as a new style in smart-looking and smoothly ingratiating leading men.

The Nolan home, inside, is one of those where you take a chair without waiting for an invitation, and nibble on nuts, fresh-salted by the lady of the house. At the moment, she happens to be upstairs checking the linen to be sure the laundry hasn't blitzed another sheet. You can see a small girl, nose pressed flat against a terraced window pane. She's developed the darndest habit of wanting to wave goodbye to visitors, which makes it embarrassing when they've just come in. And the back-yard is just about the bouncingest baby boy you've ever watched try to scale the walls of his play-pen. He'll make it any day now, says Dad. They've already had the fish pond filled with dirt, in anticipation.

From all this, you can see that the Nolans at home are gracious and unaffected—as human as your Aunt and Uncle Dudley. Right about here, however, we can drop this "just like any other household" routine. The refreshing quality about this dwelling is that it is admittedly the home of a man who makes a good living as a movie actor.

To savor the enjoyment of this second surprise—which seeps in, rather than springs at you—it is necessary to remember that while a coal-miner or a real estate salesman can be fully relaxed at home about being a coalminer or a real estate salesman, it is thought to be bad taste for an actor to live like an actor. For this reason, most Hollywood households give off a strained air of trying to prove something. You run into elaborate "simplicity" and abnormal "normalcy" and other things dedicated to proving that movie stars are "people." The Nolans, Mr. and his ex-actress Mrs., are both professional performers and people, and since they make no studied effort to proclaim or disclaim either fact, you instinctively know they are a success at both.

The Nolan youngsters, Melinda and Jay, are first of all, prime products of California, State of beautiful children. In addition, there's the interesting fact that each morning, when other fathers are off to the business of making mergers, airplanes, or grocery sales, their dad is off to his business of making corpses, even if only cinematically speaking. It's a many-faceted situation, and no mere spectator could enjoy all its little niceties and novelties as do the Nolans, themselves.

There was the time, for example, when Mel and Lloyd engaged in a playful scramble to tune in a favorite radio program. Mel, weighing in at 109, gave her Tuff Guy mate a slight poke in the eye and, as they afterward learned, ruptured a tiny blood vessel. Outgrowing the proverbial mushroom, the eye was a large lump in a minute, and turning purplish around the edges. In the ordinary household, a call to the cook to bring hot and cold applications for the master's eye, could hardly precipitate a crisis. The Nolan cook, who is also a movie fan, wouldn't believe the shiner when she saw it—and by the time she collected her shattered illusions enough to go into action, the eye had decided on a definite black.

And where the ordinary gent could go nonchalantly to the office and toss off something prideful about "The little woman has certainly improved her left hook now she's eating Wheaties," a Movie Mug is supposed to swagger onto the set and make a side-of-the-mouth brag about "You oughta see the door that bumped into me—!" At any rate, none of Lloyd's studio associates would believe the true tale anymore than would the cook. He was doing a "Michael Shayne" at the time and when make-up and various other devices failed to hide that the invincible sleuth was sporting a black eye, the picture had to shut down.

Gale Storm was invited to the White House as a result of her work in "They Shall Have Faith," Monogram's infantile paralysis pic.

Also, there was the time Lloyd, who doesn't go on hunting trips because he can't bear to kill gentle animals like rabbits and deer, came home and confessed he was about to be legally accused of "deliberately maiming" a fellow actor. It was early in his picture career, and the prospect was disturbing.

"About the only glimpses the fans had had of me up until then were in some pretty nasty characterizations of gang-leaders and such."

"The kind of roles that always moves some drunk to stagger up in public and say, 'I've always wanted to meet you, Nolan—jus' so's I could knock your block off!'" explains his wife.

"It happened when I was working in a knock-down, drag-out scene with a character actor who is several years older than I," continues Lloyd. "Screen fighting calls for some pretty tricky timing. You throw a fake wallop at a fellow, and pull your punch at the exact point of contact, making it look like it was stopped by his chin. He pulls his head back, as if it had been rocked by the punch. In other words, it takes two to make a fake fight, just as it takes two to make a real one.

"In this case, the other fellow and I were struggling on the floor. It was one of those situations where I wasn't supposed to know who I was grappling, but the audience was to see his face and recognize him. I usually fight very relaxed, figuring if there's a slip, a relaxed punch won't hurt anybody. This time, however, our heads and bodies had to be held just so, in order to match up the carpet patterns with some previous shots.

"We worked out all these details, rehearsed, and then the cameras moved in for the close-up. I let go with a right hook—and to my surprise, the fellow's head was still there when it landed. I clipped him on the ear, but good, splitting it wide open. He got sore and claimed I did it to knock him out of the picture. Well, you know how those things are—you can apologize just so far. When I left the studio, the fellow was headed for his attorney."

The Nolans were spared their day in court though, by one of those things that could happen only in the movie business. The other actor, wanting to strike while he was hot, rushed over to the lawyer's house that evening:

"Seems the lawyer hadn't come in yet, and while he was waiting the fellow re-enacted the crime for the benefit of the lawyer's daughter. He not only split the girl's ear, just like his own, but she was completely out for twenty minutes. The next morning he was waiting for me all smiles, hoping we could be friends. He confessed he might need me to go to the attorney and explain what happened to the daughter!"

In 20th Century's dramatization of "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn," Lloyd makes a notable departure from his usual role. As McShayne, the likeable cop in the story, he neither kills nor gets killed. For the first time on celluloid, he gets the girl.

EMPIRE DIAMOND CO.
Dept. 1-DH, Jefferson, Iowa.

You'd hardly think this plum role, peaceable as it is, would have any repercussions at home, but it did. During the shooting, he was wont to devote much of his conversation at home to admiring anecdotes of Peggy Ann Garner, sprig off Twentieth's own family tree, and heroine of the Brooklyn saga. After a while, it became apparent that mention of Peggy was becoming exceedingly distasteful to Melinda Junior. The day she made the flat statement, "I don't like her," her mother recognized it as jealousy.

Next day Lloyd took his three-year-old to the set and allowed her to watch him do a scene with Dorothy McGuire and Peggy Ann, who is eleven. On the way home his daughter was a very chipper young lady, the cloud completely removed from her life.

"So you do like Peggy Ann, after all," Lloyd remarked. "You should, because you know I told you you didn't have to worry about Daddy liking her better than you."

"That's right," said Melinda happily," I was only worried because I thought she was a little girl like me. But now I see she's too old for you, Daddy!"

A native son of San Francisco, Lloyd was "discovered" for movies, but only after he'd achieved success on Broadway. His father was a shoe manufacturer, which didn't keep the scion of the family from deciding on an acting career early in life. He departed from this ambition just once, when he flunked out on his first year at Stanford University, and went to sea. His work aboard a tramp steamer was highlighted by two events: one, when he ran the boat on the rocks at Marseilles; and two, when after docking it at New York, the boat burned to the water-line. He went back to finish his studies at Stanford, and the next summer tried a vaudeville skit with a fellow student.

After graduation, and a session in the Pasadena Community Theater, he set out for New York, and found the place too busy to be properly receptive. He had several minor acting ventures on Broadway and on the road, all of which started promisingly and ended suddenly, but mostly he was in-again out-again of stock. He had the standard embryo-thespian's experiences, like playing in the theater where Bette Davis was an usherette, working with beginners Helen Hayes and Pat O'Brien, and meeting big-timer's Alice Brady and Sir Guy Standing. All of them dim like a winter's sun, however, alongside the still-glowing fact that it was while in stock he met a young lady whose name was permanently removed from theater programs soon afterwards.

The play was "Sweet Stranger," in which he played an office boy, slightly bossed by one Mel Elfrid, acting the part of a stenographer. At first rehearsal, he decided that by any other play-name, the stranger couldn't be sweeter.

"Mel was a fine actress," he says, and you know he isn't kidding. She was also smart enough to recognize that two careers don't usually make for one happy marriage, and was willing to bet on Lloyd. It was a year later they made their first Broadway hit, in "One Sunday Night," with Lloyd on the stage, and Mel "pulling for him" in the wings.

"You'll never know what we went through that opening night," he grins wryly." Opening is hard, even on a well-established actor. You feel like you're carrying the whole play on your shoulders, because if everybody else doesn't click the play won't be a success—and you can't be a success in it. Mel and I were sweating it out for even more important reasons—if I clicked, we could get married."

"One Sunday Night" lasted forty-three weeks—the marriage has been a click for ten years. Hearing it told this way, you think about the two scared youngsters who waited up for the morning reviews, with their futures depending on them, and admire a couple of good gamblers. You meet them today, when Lloyd can go to sleep after any performance and know there'll be a choice of several new film jobs waiting for him in the morning. You find them still simple and extremely human, and you know what it is that you like about the Nolans. Good gamblers aren't uncommon, among actors or "people," but the Nolans are also good winners!

Like most Hollywoodians, Lloyd does a lot of camp-touring these days. A favorite nephew was killed in the air recently, and he feels pretty deeply about all the youngsters who are preparing themselves for the same hazardous business:

"I'm always meeting him over again. There was a kid from Texas, on the last trip—tall and quiet, just like he was. They're so willing, those kids—and so appreciative even if you just sit around and talk to them. On one trip I lost my wallet, and practically every kid in camp wanted to lend me money!"

Some day Lloyd hopes to direct. Meantime, he's happy bringing in his assorted characters, dead or alive. A minor mental upset now and then is the question of why screen policeman's uniforms always have to be so new and nicely pressed, as if they had donned them specially to answer the riot call? He settled this, to his own satisfaction at least, by wearing his cop's blues for "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn" for several days before the camera saw them.

His next picture will be "Circumstantial Evidence," in which he has a repeat performance as a nice guy with romantic inclinations. He'll be a small-town postman, with his hair dyed, or wigged, brown. Of course, we're still betting that with his own silver hair he'd be terrific. But then, you can't have everything, and legions of fans are perfectly satisfied with Nolan as they already know him!

BRUSH AWAY
GRAY HAIR
... and look
10 YEARS YOUNGER

● Now, at home, you can quickly and easily tint telltale streaks of gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Used for 30 years by thousands of women (men, too)—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless. No skin test needed, active coloring agent is purely vegetable. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch as new gray appears. Easy to prove by tinting a test lock of your hair. 60c and $1.65 (5 times as much) at druggists on money-back guarantee. Get BROWNATONE now, or send for free test bottle. Mention natural color of your hair. Write today–BROWNATONE, Dept. 926, COVINGTON, KY.

KIDNEYS MUST REMOVE EXCESS ACIDS

Help 15 Miles of Kidney Tubes Flush Out Poisonous Waste

If you have an excess of acids in your blood, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may be over-worked. These tiny filters and tubes are working day and night to help Nature rid your system of excess acids and poisonous waste.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Kidneys may need help the same as bowels, so ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

DEAN HARENS

Dean managed on next to nothing. With his meals "catch as catch can," he set his heart and head on a luxury, an extravagant luxury—a dog. He was going to have a dog, even if they went hungry together.

So he looked, and I looked. We found dogs, plenty of them—cocker spaniels, too, which was what he wanted. But cockers ran into money—big money—and bit parts in radio do not pay big money.

Finally, he found one—a cute blonde pup, priced in the lower brackets. Dean named her Maggie. And Maggie did air-warden duty with him all that winter, night after night, in the Sixth Avenue section on the West Side.

But even with Maggie, Dean was often lonesome. He missed his home and wanted his family. I never saw a boy care so much about his family. He is proud of his father, who's a hotel executive and plays the pipe-organ in church on Sundays. Many times I've heard Dean say, "Dad would have been a great musician, if he hadn't had a family to take care of."

He adores his mother, too—a vivacious, lovely lady who can cook the best candied sweet potatoes this side of Georgia. Clara Haerens came to New York to see her younger son make his debut on Broadway. The show was "The Talley Method," with Ina Claire and Philip Merrivale. Dean had the juvenile lead, and had provided seats down front for his mother and me on opening night. He sent orchids to his mother, camellias to me. I think no two women were ever more thrilled, more nervous and excited.

When the show was over, Dean gave his first success party. He took his mother and me (and not one of the dozens of girls who'd have given an arm to go along with us) to Spivy's Roof to celebrate the biggest event in his career—thus far.

But "The Talley Method" was only a toe-hold on Broadway. Next came "Papa Is All." Dean did a fine job of Jake, the son who rebelled at "Papa's" brutish piety.

After "Papa" had run its course, he played the wounded flyer in "Men in Shadow." Dean wanted that part. The producers wanted him to play it. But he had a handicap. He was too heavy. In the play Roy Hargrave had to lift the wounded flyer, whose legs were in splints, through a trap door set high in the ceiling. Could Roy, who weighed a hundred and fifty, lift Dean, who weighed a hundred and seventy-five?

Dean waited in my apartment that night for the call from Roy giving his decision. The call came. Roy had a sprained wrist. One hundred and sixty-five pounds was his outside lifting limit.

"When do rehearsals begin, Roy," Dean asked. And then, "Okay, in five days I'll weigh less than one-sixty-five. You can count on it."

Everyday for the next five days, he phoned me. He was weak. He was dizzy. He couldn't sleep for the gnawing in his stomach. But—when rehearsals began, he weighed one-sixty, and if he looked pale and unsteady to the audience on opening night they thought it was an authentic portrayal of a wounded flyer.

When something offers itself to be done, Dean doesn't waste time wondering whether or not he can do it. He takes it, and then does it. Except in one case that I remember. George Abbot wanted Dean for the juvenile lead in a musical production. Dean could neither sing nor dance, but he was ready to learn to do both. Only just then something better came along — "These Endearing Young Charms"—and he took that role, instead.

It was in "These Endearing Young Charms" that Producer Felix Jackson spotted him, and immediately signed him for the important role of Charles in "Christmas Holiday."

When Universal selected him for the swashbuckling lead in "Salome, Where She Danced," the part called for riding a horse hell-bent-for-leather. Dean had never been on a horse, but again—he would learn. He took fencing lessons for the role, too, and wrote me that his muscles were "so crisp they crackled."

After which the studio decided he'd be better in the romantic lead opposite Ella Raines, with Charles Laughton, in "The Suspect." Which ironically enough, required no horseback riding, no fencing.

Just before Dean left New York for Hollywood, he said to me, "Of course it's swell to be going, but I don't feel I have proved myself yet on Broadway." Modesty, you see, is not the least of his virtues.

The day he was leaving, a telegram brought him a great break—from his viewpoint. Between New York and Hollywood, he made pictures for the government—a training film for the Navy at Great Lakes Training Station, in Illinois.

Finding a home, once he'd arrived in Hollywood, was of course a problem. After several weeks of searching, Dean finally found a house in Laurel Canyon. But he likes things shipshape, the house wasn't. Nor could he find workmen to do anything about it.

So, he bought paint, brushes, a ladder and overalls, and set to work. His house is shipshape now—outside, from his own labor, and inside, because of Betty.

Betty is Dean's sister-in-law, wife of his brother Walter. Dean is crazy about Betty—and more so, about Carol Deane, his little niece.

Dean is happy to have them with him—his brother, and Betty, and their little girl—because he values a family. But he wants a family that's really his own. And with that in mind, he's looking for his "dream girl." But she must have everything — goodness, sweetness, and charm, plain common sense and a ready laugh. Does that sound like a big order? Not too big, I say, because Dean is deserving of just such a wife.

He has come a long way, in the twenty-four years since he was born in South Bend, Indiana, and he's going a whole lot farther. He has everything required to make a great star—ability, industry, grit, and a quick and lasting friendliness. He's good-looking, he's loyal, and he has a divine sense of humor. And he has a twinkling blue eye peeled for the right honey-pie, girls. He's a marrying kind of guy, as well as a swell actor.

THE END

LAMARR—LODER

"'Do you suppose that announcer looked into a crystal ball?' cracked Hedy.

"We had a good laugh. I turned the dial to the symphony broadcast we both love. Hollywood news announcers, and the world below, were forgotten.

"The end of the week came all too soon. We'd so enjoyed our tramps through the woods, and walking to the village every day to buy meat and groceries. Together, we'd cooked our meals and washed the dishes. keeping house up there by ourselves was great fun.

"But I couldn't help eyeing Hedy suspiciously, our last morning there, when she heated a big plate of navy bean soup and cut fried sausages into it, for breakfast. Although my wife likes a good breakfast, never before had I seen her eat anything quite so hearty, the first thing in the morning.

"However, her casual, 'This mountain air makes me ravenous. I can't seem to get enough to eat,' allayed my suspicions.

"We both noticed that she was no longer nervous. Her backache, that always bothered her more or less, had completely disappeared. Her energy seemed boundless.

"Besides pitching into the housework, she was tireless in exploring the woods on a hunt for logs for the fireplace. She dragged in several larger than she was.

"Driving home, when a tire blew out, she insisted on helping me put on the spare. Climbing back into the car she said, 'I'm positively starving. Let's stop at the first restaurant we come to.'

"Although Hedy prefers a steak cooked rare, again I eyed her with wonder, when she ordered a cannibal sandwich. In case you don't know, a cannibal sandwich is uncooked, finely ground round steak, with onions. Something I had never known Hedy to touch before.

"'Don't be silly,' she smiled, when I remarked that maybe there was something to the radio announcer's prediction. 'Changing a tire would give anyone an appetite.'

"But as you know, it wasn't long before our doctor confirmed my growing suspicion that the broadcaster had been right. We were told that we could expect a visit from the stork early in June.

"Like the idea? We were delighted beyond words! Both of us want children. But we had planned to wait until Hedy had finished her contract with Metro. She felt the need of a vacation. She wanted time to look for a new house. And most of all, when the time arrived we had hoped to keep such a secret out of the news columns. We didn't relish the fact that it had been sent out over the air waves, before we ourselves knew it.

"I couldn't resist phoning the radio announcer. 'You seem to know so much about our future, perhaps you will be good enough to look into your crystal ball and tell my wife and me whether our baby will be a boy or a girl.'"

I, last year, this nineteen-year-old lad left Eton, to join the armed forces.

John's six-year-old daughter, Danielle, by a second marriage, lives in Beverly Hills. Hedy's five-and-a-half-year-old adopted son, James, attends military school. Any Saturday when John is not working, you can see him with Danielle and James going from the circle swing to the airplanes and the merry-go-round at the Kiddie Korner, a year 'round children's fair in Beverly Hills.

"Hedy feels cheated because she can't go there with us," said John. "She tried it a couple of times. Autograph fans nearly mobbed her. Neither she nor the children had any fun."

As it is, the good-looking John Loder, with blonde Danielle and dark, curly haired James on either side of him, often has to push through crowds of admirers who surround them.

John says he is the happiest he has ever been in his life, having found a mate who wants the same things out of life that he does—children and work; good, simple living in a comfortable home; happiness and contentment for all.

"Hedy has no idea of giving up her screen work after the baby comes," he says. "But both of us think that two pictures a year is enough. 'Her Highness and the Bellboy,' which she has just finished for Metro, was the last one to be made under her contract with them. In future she expects to free lance.

"Now that we know a baby is coming, we are making plans to give up her home in Benedict Canyon. Far away from a shopping center and with only two bedrooms, it's not practical. We prefer to have our new home in Beverly Hills—a place with a deep lawn and space for lots of flowers. There must be large rooms and plenty of windows. We will keep the house simple, homey and cheerful. Gay chintz and sturdy provincial furniture that will withstand the onslaught of youngsters.

"I wish we could find a replica of my childhood home in rural England. The place where my father, mother, sister and I spent our summers. It has always been my idea of what a home should be. As a child, I used to dream of owning a place just like it, when I grew up and married. Just the kind of home Hedy would love.

"In spite of all the glamour that is attached to Hedy, my wife and I are simple folks. We never give large dinner or cocktail parties. Our idea of a pleasant evening is to have one or two people in for dinner. On rare occasions we go to a smart night club to dine and dance. We enjoy the opera and good theatre. However, most of our evenings are spent quietly at home, reading or listening to the radio or playing our symphony records.

"We have had no servant trouble, as so many have had during these times. That is because our one maid, Mary, who is Scotch, does everything. With the little entertaining we do, and our way of simple living and the fact that both Hedy and I like to cook, Mary's work is not heavy.

"Tonight, for instance, I am stuffing and roasting the goose for dinner. Hedy will cook the red cabbage and season it with vinegar, the way we like it, and prepare the rest of the food.

"Our evenings, of late, have been spent working on a design for a piece of jewelry I am giving Hedy when the baby arrives. Until Christmas, the only jewelry I had given her was her engagement and wedding ring, and a bracelet.

"The bracelet is a very personal thing between us. It tells the story of the highlights of our life since we met. It was my first gift to Hedy. We hope it never will be finished.

"When I first fastened it on her wrist, a big gold heart clasped the gold chain. The initials H.L. were engraved on one side, J.L. on the other side. One oblong charm engraved with the date Dec. 25, 1942, hung beside the heart. That was the date when Hedy and I first met, on Christmas day, at the Hollywood Canteen.

"The second charm bears the date of our marriage. The third is a little gold stork carrying a bundle. There is a fourth dated Dec. 25, 1944. Another will be added when the baby arrives."

Hedy has put her nine-karat diamond ring away in the safety deposit box until after the war. John says the heavy gold claw setting gives a yellow cast to the perfect blue-white stone. Later, it will be reset in platinum, to match the ear rings John gave Hedy for Christmas. Two blue-white diamond drops for each ear.

"Neither Hedy nor I would think of surprising the other with a gift. It's silly to run the risk of making a loved one pretend they like a present, when secretly they prefer something quite different.

"The fact that Hedy is still working on the design for a pin I will give her, when our baby is born, proves how much it means to her. And she has had a lot of fun making sketches for the feathery chrysanthemum she admires. The jeweler, who will carry out her design, is a friend of ours. Often he drops in in the evening to look over her sketches.

"Hedy and I both agree that nothing is smarter for evening, for a woman, than a plain black or white gown, with good lines, set off with a piece of jewelry.

"For daytime my wife likes tailored and tweed suits. She loves to wear slacks around the house."

In spite of all their happy hours together, John and Hedy are ever conscious of the war, and like all good citizens, are deep in war work.

Having seen active service in World War I, been wounded and held prisoner by the Germans, John is keenly apprehensive about his son Robin, who's a lieutenant in the Guard's Armored Division, under General Montgomery. He has already been wounded once.

Hedy, who was born in Vienna and as a child knew the horrors of war, also has relatives and friends in battle.

But like all of us, Hedy and John, in spite of the overcast present, must go on working, hoping and planning for a brighter future for themselves and their loved ones.

TREASURE CHEST

(leaving the top intact), fastened a shelf inside and placed them all side by side in his playroom to form a bar. The two "baby barrels" he painstakingly upholstered in gay red leather, making them into bar stools. Hollywood's critical tribe of interior decorators view this arrangement with extreme pain. But Paul and his wife, Lisl Henreid, think the whole thing is "magnificent." It means something!

Irene Dunne will never, never part with a faded blue lace picture hat, which she wore when Flo Ziegfeld selected her to sing the leading role in the immortal "Showboat." "I wouldn't exactly say that the hat got me the part," she says. "There must have been something else—but that hat did something for me. Any woman will know what I mean. Flo Ziegfeld probably wasn't fooled by it at all. Still . . . it's a nice hat!"

Lynn Bari treasures two small pieces of paper! One is a "want ad," clipped from a Los Angeles newspaper years ago, and the other is an invitation to the President's Birthday Ball in 1942. The advertisement is probably a shade more important to her than the invitation. It asked for "show girls" to try out for the Joan Crawford picture, "Dancing Lady." Remember? Lynn, aged fourteen but glorying in her five feet, six inch height, answered that ad and got her first job in a picture. The invitation to the President's party seems to justify her belief in herself.

Gene Tierney's treasure is a bit of paper, too—a note that she wrote to herself, for goodness' sake! At the age of ten she was crossing the Atlantic with her mother on the S. S. de Grasse, when it occurred to her that it would be "romantic" to put a note into a bottle and drop it overboard. She addressed it to herself at the private school she attended in Connecticut. Months later it turned up in the mail—it had been picked up by a fisherman off the Bay of Biscay in Southern France.

Gene felt very important and romantic, indeed, until her geography teacher made the note the basis of some stiff lessons in geography, with facts about winds and tides and so on. Gene found herself distinctly unpopular with her schoolmates for a time. Still, she has the note framed and hanging in her bedroom at this very moment. "It was an experience to feel that the tides and the winds and the very continents had conspired to return it to me," she recalls. "It gave me a feeling of the bigness and the rightness of everything!"

Zachary Scott's favorite object is worth exactly four dollars, and he can prove it. When he was a tot in Texas he thought his grandfather the most wonderful man in the world. Grandpop, who was called a 'cattle king,' wore a wonderful pair of cuff links, made of four gold dollars which he had collected for the first pair of steers he ever sold. Zach admired these doodads ecstatically, and when he was six, his grandpop promised to will them to him. He did. Zach had them when he went to New York to make his fortune on the stage. He says now, with some wonderment, "They're the only things I owned that I never hocked in those lean days.

[illegible] garments—like Basil [illegible] disreputable, make-up-stained bathrobe, left from his theater days. Ouida has bought him luxurious lounging robes, has bribed the junk man to take his old one away. But Basil always contrives to rescue it, and what's more he wears it, with a smug sort of satisfaction, when he relaxes by himself or when he entertains a close friend.

Bill Eythe treasures a similar horror. Bill's is plaid, and he says he "lived in it" when he was attending Carnegie Tech. It served him in 300 college plays (Mercy! Could there be that many?) and he even wore it to class on occasions when morning seemed to slip up on him unexpectedly. He used it when he was making his first appearances on Broadway and when he made his first motion picture. It was trampled in Grand Central Station when his suitcase flew open during the rush hour. He lost it on the train coming to California, but it was returned to him with a tender note from a girl in a cleaning establishment, who had traced its owner through a laundry mark. It has appeared, he thinks, on every beach in the United States and has been lent, in a pinch, to such celebrities as Ruth Chatterton and Tallulah Bankhead. He loves it as your Aunt Emily loves the Venetian vase her Great Uncle Henry bequeathed her, and as long as two threads of the robe hang together, Bill will consider it a handsome and appropriate garment to wear on nearly any occasion.

Bill Powell still clings to the battered cigar box which, for years, served him as a make-up kit. Everyone else, Bill explains, seemed to have something really tasty in pigskin or alligator. But Bill didn't use make-up. So, just to keep from seeming completely empty-handed when he went to his dressing room, he carried the cigar box which contained, if you must know, one untidy powder puff, which had never had any powder on it. Just dust. He used to take it out and flourish it when anyone was looking, emitting clouds of unwholesome pflugg.

Kay Francis is solemn about a prayer book which was given to her by a sailor when she was overseas. He asked her to read two pages, either at noon or at midnight, and he would do likewise with an identical book.

paper to look they renewed her fa self. She still treasures them, because, although most of those early dreams have come true, she says, "You never know when you may need your good luck piece."

Jeanette MacDonald treasures four—count 'em!—charm bracelets which Gene Raymond has filled for her with ingenious little figures. Interpreted, they tell the whole story of their courtship and marriage, from the wee dogs, commemorating their meeting when both took their pooches to a vet, through wedding bells and other sentimental landmarks. A tiny Christmas tree symbolizes their first (and very funny) quarrel—over trimming the tree! An hour glass marks an occasion on which Mr. Raymond was very puzzled, indeed, and the little ice cream cone commemorates a day when Jeanette had indulged in a whim which backfired. There is almost the entire record of their lives together in tiny baubles of gold and platinum and jewels, and there isn't an insurance policy big enough to cover its value to Jeanette.

Gregory Peck's is a crew cap (how these men do go in for odds and ends of clothing!) which he wore when he was "stroke" on the University of California crew.

Shirley Temple informs us very seriously that she has two treasures. One—the most valued, we guess—is a toy Pekingese named Ching Two. He replaced Ching One, who was given to her by the late Irvin S. Cobb when she was a very little girl. Her other treasure is the baby-sized "Oscar" which she was awarded by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in 1934.

Nancy Coleman's come in pairs, too—two pairs of baby booties, knitted by her great-grandmother for twin babies born into the family in that generation. "Twins run in our family," says Nancy. "I've always had an idea that I might need them. When my twin babes outgrow them, I'll put them away for possible twins to be born to them. I hope they'll need them, too!"

And Victor McLaglen nurtures a small square of (you'll never guess!) elephant hide, which he declares has brought him wonderful luck.

See what I mean? You can't tell what will seem valuable to an actor!

Did GRAY HAIR Rob Them of $95.00 a Week?

Now Comb Away Gray This Easy Way

Wonderfully Simple!

Users Exclaim, How Quick and Easy to Use . . .

To easily end gray hair handicaps, all you now have to do is comb your hair once a day for several days with a few drops of the new Kolor-Bak sprinkled on your comb, and afterwards regularly only once or twice a week to keep your hair looking nice. That's simple and easy, isn't it? No muss; No fuss; No mixing. Kolor-Bak imparts color and charm and abolishes gray hair worries. Grayness disappears in a week or two and users say the change is so gradual and so perfect that their friends forgot they ever had a gray hair and no one knew they did a thing to it.

No Matter What Your Age...

NO NEED TO LET GRAY HAIR CHEAT YOU

Gray hair is risky. It screams: "You are getting old!" In many occupations a more youthful appearance is a necessity, and a whole lot of people are let out of work every year because gray hair makes them look older than they really are. Now, you don't want that to happen to you, do you? Then, why not use the new KOLOR-BAK, that marvelous solution for artificially coloring gray hair that imparts color and charm to gray hair and makes you look years younger? Just sprinkle a few drops on your comb and comb it through your hair. That's all you have to do. If you would like to easily overcome your gray hair worries and handicaps, get a bottle of the new KOLOR-BAK at your drug or department store and make the wonderful no-risk, money-back KOLOR-BAK test without delay!

FROM THE GIRLS WHO KNOW!

THIS IS FRANCINE COUNIHAN . . . glamorous New York fashion model . . . "Cover Girl" and "Drene Girl". Francine says she has a real hair-do problem, because her face could easily look too broad, if she didn't use tricks to narrow it. This dramatic pompadour slenderizes by adding height. To make sure her hair looks its loveliest, she always uses Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner. No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

WHEN FRANCINE wears her hair down, she avoids flat tops and width at the sides. "It takes long, narrow lines or height," says Francine, "to narrow your face." And, she adds, for shining-smooth, manageable hair, remember that there's no shampoo like Drene with Hair Conditioner!

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

By FREDDA DUDLEY

Nora Eddington Flynn and Errol's good pal Ted Stouffer, at Ciro's, down Mexico way.

FLYNN-FLAM:

If you, like many locals, have wondered why Mr. Flynn kept his marriage to Nora Eddington secret for so long, and even denied it lustily for a few days after the birth of his daughter, perhaps the observation of a close friend of Mr. Flynn's will furnish enlightenment.

There is no doubt at all that Errol Flynn is a man of brilliant mentality, vast physical prowess, Mexican-jumping-bean imagination . . . and a strong mischievous inclination. He likes to make things tough for himself, while confounding others. Whereas most men make horrible the lives of their friends after they have shot a deer in the conventional way, Mr. Flynn disdains such sport unless he can use a javelin. Fish, he likes to conquer with bow and arrow. When, along the coast of Florida, he learned of the ghastly hazards of sponge-fishermen (the persistent occupational disease of such men is the loss of an arm), Mr. Flynn had to try it.

In Hollywood, where there is a dearth of fishing (except for compliments), a scarcity of wild boars to chase or deer to snare (natural delicacy forces me to pass up any pertinent comment here), a sportsman is inclined to find other ways of establishing records.

Probably the most difficult thing to do, in a community as closely-knit, as fraternal, and as curious as Hollywood, is to keep a secret.

Q.E.D. Take a bow, Mr. Flynn.

PEN IS MIGHTIER:

One evening recently, Glenn Ford went to a movie alone because his wife, Eleanor Powell, was keeping watch for the stork, so wasn't going out socially. Glenn parked in a badly-lighted vacant lot, struggled through the weeds with the intention of making an inconspicuous entrance. However, he was espied by autograph-seekers. At last all were satisfied, and Glenn finally saw the picture.

Upon emerging from the theatre, he slipped quietly back to his car and drove away. Some five or six blocks down the boulevard, he glanced into the rear view mirror and mentally wafted his wife a final goodbye. A pair of gleaming eyes were reflected. It was, Glenn decided in split-second diagnosis, some stickup who would deal very shortly with Mr. Ford when he learned that the actor's total wealth on his person was about $2.35.

At that moment a feminine squeak solicited Glenn's autograph. Drawing to the curb, he found that he had been boarded by two 14-year-old girls. They had managed somehow to get into the back seat and had remained there until Glenn arrived. He was still shaken when he reached home.

FREEZEOUT:

Miss Margaret O'Brien, this department's favorite actress, decided that—while she was in New York this winter—she would learn to ice skate. Every day she went over to the pond in Rockefeller Center with an instructor and had the time of her life. Gradually, however, other kids caught on. The word went the rounds: the blade beginner was the honey from Hollywood. The crowds gathered so thick that it would have been impossible for even the veriest novice to fall down—held in by mobs on all sides, the unbalanced would have glided along with the prevailing current.

So Margaret's lessons had to be discontinued, to her intense disappointment. She couldn't understand it. Her eyes brimming with tears, she asked her mother, "But why does anyone want to watch me learn to skate?"

And there are women who actually want to bring their children to Hollywood for a try at pictures!

KIN:

When anyone achieves a spectacular success in Hollywood, it becomes de rigeur for any person who knew the new sensation in earlier days to boast loudly of the association, giving names, addresses, and telephone numbers. At present, hundreds of stories about Lauren Bacall constitute the literature of the moment.

But Richard Haydn produced—with tongue in cheek—the topper. One morning he electrified the players on the set of "Ten Little Indians" by announcing that actually he was related by marriage, to Miss Bacall.

Called upon to particularize, he said, "Her dog is the father of my dog's puppies."

A premiere evening date: Bill Eythe and June Haver. (She's in "The Dolly Sisters.")

Joseph Cotten and his pretty missus. Joe is now under exclusive contract to Selznick. Incidentally, congratulations to that studio are in order; it's their 10th anniversary.

VITAL STATISTICS:

Anne Shirley and Adrian Scott were married in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Mr. and Mrs. Preston Foster separated after 19 years of marriage, and Mrs. Foster filed suit for divorce. Although this was locally described as a great surprise, those who knew the Fosters well have expected their long-time rift to end in divorce over a year ago.

Peter Newton Ford, weighing 8 pounds 14½ ounces, checked in at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital to Eleanor Powell and entranced daddy, Glenn Ford.

NEWCOMERS YOU SHOULD KNOW DEPARTMENT:

Here is a man who inspires people to go around snagging other people by the upper sleeve and hissing, "Have you seen Kurt Kreuger? Sensational! Dynamic!" This florid conversation usually goes on to say that Krueger is 28, six feet tall, blond, blue-eyed, 165 pounds, and Swiss. Seems he was born in St. Moritz, practically on skiis. As soon as he had mastered this narrow gauge art not only for entrance purposes, but for distance, he came to The States and went to work in Sun Valley.

There he met practically everyone in the motion picture industry who can retain normal nose coloring at 28 degrees. Those who turn blue go to Palm Springs for the winter.

He was advised to get some training, then to try Hollywood. So he went to Provincetown, R. I., to join a summer stock company. This apprenticeship prepared him for the role of a German officer opposite Helen Hayes in "Candle In The Wind." He also acted as general understudy, an assignment that allowed him to stand in the wings to study each nuance of characterization perfected by every male member of the cast.

You probably noticed him first as a German pilot in the Humphrey Bogart bang-bang entitled "Sahara." Currently he is working in Constance Bennett's production of Etta Shiber's best seller, "Paris Underground." This is the story of a mature woman (Gracie Fields plays the part) who had no idea of becoming involved in the rescue of Allied refugees. Kurt Kreuger is the German Captain von Weber who—as Gracie gets more deeply concerned—keeps reminding her that she gets herself into the darnedest messes.

Pin-up pictures of this menace may be secured by writing to Constance Bennett Productions, Hollywood 28. You're welcome.

(SIC) !!BUT NEVER ()

An exuberant Hollywood hosiery manufacturer, driven to exotic advertising statements by the lack of nylon yarn no doubt, recently made the statement that his company manufactured special stockings for Greer Garson because she was knock-kneed.

Anyone who saw "Random Harvest" is entitled to collapse in laughter at such a mistaken notion. Miss Garson, a witty lady with a fast answer, sent the manufacturer this verse:

> "Say the dreary, say the sad.
> Say my acting doesn't please.
> Say my films are awfully bad,
> But please don't knock my knees."

COURAGE:

As you probably have read in your daily newspaper, Susan Peters was seriously injured in an accident that occurred late in January. She and her husband, Richard Quine, had been dove hunting near San Diego. One of the rifles had been mislaid, Alice Faye and hubby Phil Harris. You've heard that she's retiring from pictures? Here's the latest: she is holding out for a dramatic role; wants no more musicals.

You will never live a more sinister drama... nor a more exciting one!

and it was Susan who found it. Exclaiming happily, she picked up the gun, the safety latch had not been on—it discharged. The bullet entered her thigh, coursed upward to pierce one lung and to lodge against her spine.

Surgery removed the bullet, but it was discovered immediately that Susan was paralyzed. A wave of commiseration swept Hollywood; rumor whispered that she would never walk again.

Those who said such a thing spoke without knowing anything about Susan's family. Her grandmother, who established Madame Patteneaude's method of facial contouring, was a magnificent woman who worked all the days of her life toward the spreading of loveliness. She believed that every woman could have a beautiful face if her spirit were beautiful; conversely, she believed that beauty of face and body, if properly evaluated, should bring about beauty of soul.

Unretouched pictures of Madame Patteneaude, taken when she was 67, show a woman of such youth that no observer would ascribe more than 35 years to her. Yet, for the final ten years of her life, Susan Peters' grandmother was almost totally blind. Only members of her immediate family knew this. Close friends, seeing her move with assured and stately grace, had no idea that her vision was seriously impaired.

Bearing in mind that Susan is much like her grandmother, has inherited much of that valiant woman's force of character, it is easy to make Susan Peters' friends and fans a promise: Susan will walk again.

LE BEAU GESTE:

Van Johnson recently received a letter from the National Museum at Gettysburg, requesting some personal memento for inclusion in their files. Completely bowled over with modest astonishment, Van eventually decided upon what he considered a really valuable bit of historical data: he sent his copy of the script for "30 Seconds Over Tokyo", the name of the author, Captain (now Major) Ted W. Lawson, and that of the editor, Bob Considine clearly indicated on the cover. "Only men like Lawson deserve to be so honored," said sincere Van Johnson.

DATE DATA:

Open letter to Bill Eythe, Eddie Ryan, Charlie Russell, and other drooling swains at 20th Century-Fox: Gentlemen: Do not hesitate to telephone The Eyelashes (alias Jeanne Crain) for a date whenever you would like to take her previewing, or dancing, or dining, or bowling. Jeanne's dating with Paul Brinkman, or Paul Brook as he is sometimes called, is merely friendly and does not indicate a permanent romance. Jeanne, just past 18, has too brilliant a career beckoning to sacrifice even an iota of it to a hasty and too-early marriage.

UNSTABLE PERSONALITY

Elizabeth Taylor's mother decided that "Velvet" was getting to be a big girl, now, and was entitled to a redecorated room. Thinking in terms of cross-over organdy curtains with deep ruffling, a chintz slipper chair, a few Degas prints, and other such feminine equipment, she called in a decorator. The two advanced upon Elizabeth's room, only to find the young lady in residence. When questioned as to her tastes in decoration, she said cheerfully that they might make any changes they liked, only . . .

The two saddles must not be moved from the window seat. Her collection of 33 horses of every imaginable fabric (ranging from

Movieland's New Picture Guide

A ROYAL SCANDAL (20th Century-Fox)—Could it be that every great actress wonders uneasily about her greatness, till she has played Catherine, Empress of all the Russias? Modern drama seems to have produced more Czarinas than Juliets—and any similarity, one to the other, is indeed strictly lacking.

Somehow or other, though, Tallulah Bankhead always gains by comparisons made; and only the most loyal Elizabeth Bergner fans will deny that . . . yes, the Tallu has done it again!

We'll risk adding, too, that what playing the lead opposite Bergner in "Catherine The Great" did for young Doug Fairbanks, Jr., a parallel role in this new version will as-much-do for Bill Eythe. Vincent Price is the smooth-wooing French Ambassador, and Charles Coburn the Chancellor who knows all the maneuvers much, in the affairs of heart and state.

IT'S A PLEASURE (International), Sonja Henie's eighth picture since her first, "One In a Million"; her first Technicolor film, and the first in which she dances as well as skates.

With Michael O'Shea co-starring as the hot-headed hockey star banished from the game for fighting, later Sonja's partner in a traveling ice-show, and in the happy ending, her husband. Marie McDonald for feminine villainy and complicating of the plot, and Bill Johnson in the second masculine lead.

Production note: The actual distance Miss Henie skated in making her scenes for "It's a Pleasure" cameras exceeded 185 miles!

HERE COME THE CO-EDS (Universal)—Abbott and Costello, in their 13th picture, and whether you like it or not (there must be lots of folks who do), it looks like a safe bet now that they're here to stay!

With laugh lines as usual, but more restraint on the strictly slapstic: and with Peggy Ryan, Martha O'Driscoll, June Vincent—for dance and romance bits—Phil Spitalny and his All-Girl Orchestra; Donald Cook, Charles Dingle, and Lon (herein a refuge from the ghoul school) Chaney.

Classifies as campus life at dear old Bixby (an exclusive girls' school), with breaks-at-intervals in a tired old plot for music and comedy.

LES PRELUDES

THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY (M-G-M)

"I sent my soul through the invisible,
Some letter of that after-life to spell;
And by and by my soul returned to me,
And answered, 'I myself am Heaven and Hell.'"

Dorian Gray, a young man of wealth, beauty, brains and culture, chose to give his soul to the Devil in order that he might stay forever young and handsome. It's the old Faustian theme modernized by Oscar Wilde, whose novel inspired this screen play.

George Sanders, as the decadent Lord Henry Wotton, instills the thought in the young and impressionable Dorian Gray (Hurd Hatfield) that life is good only while you are young and can enjoy the pleasures of youth. His philosophy has a curious fascination for Dorian, who says he would give his soul if he could but stay young and his portrait (just completed) grow old.

His wish is granted. Small sins grow to great crimes, but Dorian himself remains forever young. Only his picture, which has become the mirror of his soul, reflects his deeds.

Angela Lansbury's performance, as a music hall singer and Dorian's first love, lives up to all that was promised by her fine bit of acting as the maid in "Gaslight." Other important members of the cast include Donna Reed, Peter Lawford, and Lowell Gilmore.

CHINA SKY (RKO-Radio)—Not that it won't take a lot to match or beat "The Good Earth," which was the first movie based on a Pearl Buck novel about China ("Dragon Seed" was the second, if we've counted straight); but here's another . . . with the action taking place in an American hospital located in a small Chinese village. Randolph Scott is the doctor in charge, assisted and loved by his co-worker, Dr. Sara Durand (Ruth Warrick), and hindered no end by the cowardice and selfishness of his wife (Ellen Drew).

Anthony Quinn, already many times on the record for playing character roles of assorted nationalities which he really isn't, leads a Chinese guerilla band; and Carol Thurston (little Three Martini of "Dr. Wassell" fame) is Siu Mei, a pretty Chinese nurse.

Trend of the times—a feeling for warmer shades of face powder to set off pretty pinks or spring scarlets.

No closed season for hand lotion! Spring's the time for sentiment and hands, to be held, should be soft.

Beauty-bright view of early summer finds eyes right—in the foreground. Mascara makes for special sparkle.

Signs of Spring

YOU really should look like Frances Gifford. Did I hear a sigh? Then let's qualify that statement! You should, to be at your brightest best, look just the way she does.

Because: things have been happening in the beauty-making business. Pretty-pretty (but oh-so-provocative) pink has come into its prime.

As pastel paints lips and cheeks, basic skin tones mate muted warmth. Pinker powders create complexions of porcelain perfection. Right in the movieland tradition, darker, tan-tinted powders are appearing. The sun-kissed skins they simulate are in striking contrast to paler reds and roses.

Take the total of this totally different type of make-up and what do you get? Well, just like I said. You get Frances Gifford (or a reasonable facsimile). So let's ask her all the what's and why's as she sits and relaxes after finishing M-G-M's "Thrill of a Romance."

"Make-up, Miss Gifford?"—"New and different, Miss Cook. Faces smoother and creamier, rouge a mere hint, lipstick pink or, newer still, clear, light, bright scarlet. Eye cosmetics more of a must than ever."

"News in grooming?"—"Just more of the same. Spick and span for spring! In other words, the crisp look that suits the suit silhouette."

See what this Gifford gal's got? Good grooming—with a glow. And if you want to be right in the swing this spring, that's what you'll strive for.

Portrait of a lady who's a portent of spring! That's because her grooming has such "lady-like" restraint.

"YOU AND I are going to land in Hollywood one of these days"—And Gregory Peck never spoke a truer word to Master Ted Donaldson. Time: Spring of '43. Setting: A Broadway play—it lasted quick, but was a stepping stone to Hollywood. It brought Ted the part of Curly's keeper in "Once Upon a Time" with Cary Grant. And on the strength of this performance, 20th Century-Fox was convinced that here was their Neeley for "A Tree Grows."

Ted Donaldson is a very smart young fellow for his eleven years—thoroughly trained in the mechanics of the Thespian trade. At the age of four, he made his first professional appearance in a television show, and at seven appeared on the New York stage in "Life with Father"—until he outgrew the part, a year later. After that, he was the little boy who tore your heart out, via radio, while you washed the morning dishes.

At present he's spending his leisure delving into the mysteries of astronomy and dabbling in the field of "magic." But his main interest has been, and always will be, acting—"until I hit my grave."

Mr. Dantine Regrets

HELMUT DANTINE has made some mistakes. No one realizes that more vividly or more ruefully than does Helmut. "If anyone ever had reasons for making good New Year's resolutions, it was I!" he will tell you, with a wry grin.

"But," he went on, earnestly, "when you know you've made a mistake . . . whether of judgment or by impulse or even by accident . . . there is no use trying to undo it, or even wailing about it. The intelligent thing to do is to admit it and then go to work to make capital of it by learning from it. Excuses get you nowhere, especially with yourself."

It was love at first sight when Maria met Jean Pierre Aumont. [illegible]

Soon after their marriage Jean joined the Free French forces overseas. He's a lieutenant [illegible] home.

Maria Montez was one actress who never had to be warned against hiding her talent under the proverbial bushel. According to most people who have met her, she's acting all the time, and often gives her finest performances when the camera is far out of range. But Maria is very much aware of what she's doing, for in two years time she accomplished what would take many other players a half dozen years—yes, at least that—to achieve. When this luscious looking lady first stepped into Hollywood, she made a resolute vow. She gave herself exactly three years time in which to establish herself, not as a great actress but as a compelling personality. That (Continued on page 57).

JOHNNY GOT HIS Gal

On their wedding day! They met 3 months before.

THE Word has gone out on the mysterious waves that carry news throughout a studio with a speed that makes the traveling rate of light seem laggard. The Word at 20th Century-Fox is: John Payne is more pleasant, more profound than ever, and even better picture material now than he was two years ago—if that could be possible.

But he has one charming character trait that has never been fully recognized—not by motion picture people, not by the press. John is house-happy. That is, he has always felt incomplete without a home. His own home life in Virginia was supremely happy; he adored his mother and his brothers. "No youngster should be brought up alone," he once said of his daughter Julie. And of himself he said, "A man is only half-a-person; to be a complete entity, he must be married to a girl who fulfills him, and to whom he brings fulfillment."

When John first began to date Gloria De Haven, few took it seriously. But only (Continued on page 60)

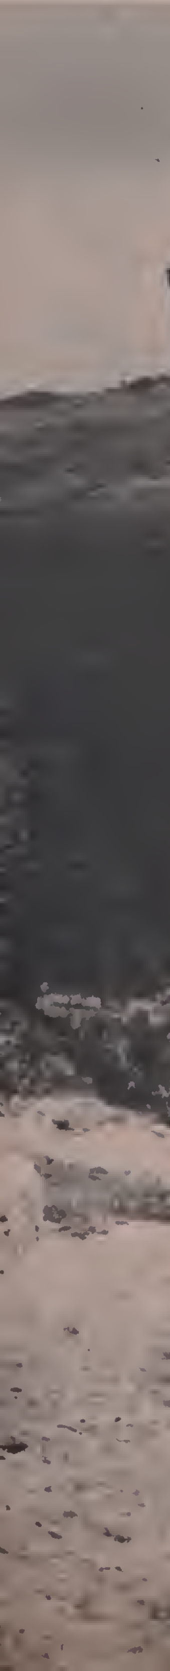
Twin Oaks



Foster's cattle brand, composed of his initials—PSF.

Fruit, cattle, horses, chickens, sheep—460 acres worth.

Preston Foster, a rancher. Gentleman farmer? Not this actor! He tends stock and plows, helps with the milking PRESTON FOSTER, though he has probably forgotten more about pictures than a lot of people will ever know, has never been "typically Hollywood"—which is to say, he wasn't satisfied with the usual Hollywood life. He always knew what he wanted, and at Twin Oaks—he has it. But would you believe it? All because of a saddle!

Pres was making a picture, a few years ago, called "The Round-Up." He had some riding to do in the film, so he decided to buy a saddle. At the same time, he thought he'd get a horse. (Many of his friends, you see, belonged to a riding club.)

After scouting around for a time, trying to find the right horse, he heard of a man named Warren Neeley, who, besides working on the local police force, also had the reputation of being a good horse trader.

Pres paid a visit to this Officer Neeley. First, he bought a pony for his small daughter, Stephanie. And then he saw the horse—just the horse he had been looking for. Neeley, however, seemed reluctant to make a deal.

"It took me from December to May," Pres tells now, "to complete the transaction, and to persuade Neeley to sell me the horse. But, that's how

I got Cherokee." And then he adds, laughing, "Neeley has said since that I was the only person who could ever out-trade him."

So, with a horse, a pony—and a saddle—Pres decided that he should buy a place with more land than came with his Coldwater Canyon home. He began to tell his friends that he wanted to buy a ranch. Which was the cue for his phone to start ringing incessantly. "You want a ranch? I know just the place . . ."

He saw countless farms, but none that suited. Then one day Bill Henry, the actor, told Pres he had found a place.

"I paid little attention at first," Foster explains, "because I'd gone on too many phony shopping tours. But Bill called me again a few days later, so I thought I might as well take a look. I took Neeley with me, because I wanted his opinion of the ranch. And too, I intended to hire him as the foreman—if I bought the farm."

The result of the expedition was—Twin Oaks.

When Pres first saw Twin Oaks, he said to himself, "This is it." To Neeley he said, "Think we can make a go of a place like this?"

"Sure!" Neeley replied enthusiastically.

And they have. It's a ranch covering 460 acres, stocked with twenty head of milking short horn cattle, a breed that's very rare; thirty hogs, about twenty-five sheep, 500 chickens, 400 turkeys, and ten horses. (You'll see three of Pres' horses in his current picture for 20th Century-Fox, "Thunderhead, Son of Flicka.")

The ranch is self-supporting. Pres has made it so in every respect. He does most of his own slaughtering, and stores the cuts of meat after they've been properly processed. He makes his own butter and cheese. He even has his own bacon and salt pork.

"I'm going to concentrate on feed now," he explains, "instead of stock. We're planting over 100 acres of alfalfa, for one thing, plus the oats already sown. We're going to build a dam up in the hills, too, so we'll have a guaranteed water supply."

The water on the Foster place comes from a mountain stream; water for irrigation, and for drinking water in the house. Light and power are generated by a homemade power plant made of two huge motors running on about twelve truck batteries.

This all sounds pretty rugged, doesn't it. Well, the Foster place is rugged. You don't get to Twin Oaks just by taking a fifteen-minute spin down a fine southern California boulevard, like running down for an afternoon at the beach. You drive sixty miles, after you leave Hollywood, and travel over high mountains, past a beautiful lake, and over some roads which haven't all had the benefit of modern paving. But once you arrive, your only reaction is, "Brother, this is terrific!"

One morning last winter, Pres had to go into town to appear on a radio show. There was snow all over the ground—the altitude, you know. Pres tried to start his car, but he couldn't get traction. Finally he had to call Neeley to drag out the tractor and pull him up over the crest of the hill. He coasted the rest of the way.

Then there was the time of the flood. He was on his way back to the ranch from (Continued on page 78)

Very Confidentially Yvonne de Carlo

The winner in Wanger's "Most Beautiful Girl" contest. She snagged the title from a field of more than 21,000. Would she get your vote?

By Michael Sheridan

YOUR passport to Hollywood fame was the pin-up portrait of yourself that you sent to 21 Royal Canadian Air Force bombardiers while you were at Paramount. You will always have them to thank for submitting it back to Hollywood two years later when producer Walter Wanger announced his nation-wide search for "The Most Beautiful Girl." You will always remember that it was this unexpectedly considerate and coincidental gesture that suddenly made your new world take shape.

You are Yvonne DeCarlo.

You sleep in a knotty-pine bedroom, the croaking of the frogs is your good-night music, and you are invariably wakened by the singing of your next-door neighbor Susanna Foster.

Lamour's sarong inheritor, who didn't.

$1·50 UP
$1·50 UP
AUTO COURT
AUTO COURT

Yvonne DeCarlo lives here—in an auto court, near Universal.

Hank Daniels, her fiancé. Husband now?

And some like 'em sweet. Okay, she can fill that bill, too.

The RCAF pin-up girl; "Salome" because they asked it.

You have yet to reach your 21st birthday. You love the smell of a fresh gardenia, the sight of an approaching friend, and the taste of cold water when you're thirsty.

You have an atrocious and apparently quite incurable habit of mislaying small things like glasses, combs and scarves. You were ten years old when you wrote your own plays, built and painted your own scenery, and insisted on your little playmates' paying a penny to see the show. You always had a full house.

You count among your numerous talents the art of writing readable poetry, and at the ripe old age of eleven examples of your work were published in Canadian newspapers. Your mother, with whom you live in a charming rented house in the Valley, has always hoped that one day you would be a great dancer.

You were deeply moved at the kindness of the crew at the end of your first picture when they all stood in line for you to autograph pictures of yourself. You were still going to King Edward's High School in Vancouver when you took dancing to please your mother, and became active in dramatics to please yourself.

You have often said that of all the men in the world whom you would like most to meet, first on your list is the Russian modern composer Stravinsky.

You wear size 7 gloves, 5½ shoes, and large 12 or small 14 dresses. You can't abide the sight or sound of giggly women.

You remember gratefully that following your graduation you were able to study dancing at June Roper's B. C. School of Dancing, the famous school that has taught so many stars of the Ballet Russe. You worked as hard then as you do now—usually dancing six hours a day, and practicing far into the night.

You have a violent dislike for too hot weather, football crowds, sweet potatoes and very social parties. You love the sound of the wind in the trees, the whistle of a departing train, and a symphony orchestra tuning up. You always dream about everyone you meet within forty-eight hours after meeting them. You have very long, pale and soft hands, and used them unsparingly to caress the tiger in Walter Wanger's Universal picture, "Night in Paradise"—to the tense and fearful amazement of everyone on the set.

You found that even doing as well as you were with your dancing, in those early days, still you wanted to be an actress—so you spent all the time you could with the Vancouver Little Theatre and participated in church plays. You'll always remember as one of your most thrilling childhood memories being one of the church choir that sang for the King and Queen of England.

You can't eat too much ice cream.

You have no use whatsoever for jitterbugging, and men who talk too much about too little. Your first professional appearance was as a featured dancer at the Palomar Theatre Restaurant in Vancouver. You were able to add to your experience by appearing at the Orpheum and Beacon Theatres there. You know, though, that your shuttling to and from Hollywood in the next few years gave you the training, the experience, and the will for a career in the United States.

You completed a long siege of arduous training at the Ernest Belcher and other schools of the dance in Hollywood, with long contracts as a featured dancer at both Earl Carroll's and the Florentine Gardens as your just reward. You are very happy that musical director Eddy Ward also considers you an extremely gifted lyric writer. You often betray your nervousness by beating time on table tops with your long finger nails, usually a rhythmic jungle tattoo.

You chew gum incessantly.

You have always created your own dance numbers, and are unusually proficient in the folk and dance lore of the South American, Mexican and Asiatic countries. You invariably eat some candy before going to bed and always after you have brushed your teeth.

You have more men than women friends.

Your big chance came in 1942, when Paramount talent scouts discovered you and put you under contract with a view to letting you take over the sarong roles of Dorothy Lamour, who was tiring of them. You didn't know whether to be disappointed or glad when Miss Lamour changed her mind. You stayed on at Paramount to become the most tested girl on the lot—with nary a good role to relieve the monotony.

You admit that, at the end of a long evening out, another nervous mannerism of yours is to unpin your corsage—usually violets—and to segregate the wilting petals from the fresh. You hope that when complete success finally comes to you, you will never get over the thrill of reading a new script, seeing those first rushes, and giving newspaper interviews.

You have often confessed that you would like to be a successful opera singer. You enjoy the presence, no matter how fleeting, of producer Walter Wanger, actor Turhan Bey, director Robert Siodmak, and musician Victor Young. You are never tired of repeating again and again that you would like nothing better than to have a successful motion picture and theatrical career terminated by a successful marriage.

Your pet diversion is to drive along in your car, waving and yelling at complete strangers.

You studied and worked harder than ever when your Paramount contract was not renewed, and the quick fruits of your determination to succeed was the exciting and exacting role in "Salome, Where She Danced." Your most exciting moment was (Continued on page 77)

The Data on (Yvonne) DeCarlo

The dancing, singing, and acting star of Walter Wanger's Universal Technicolor picture, "Salome, Where She Danced." She is 20 years old, 5 feet 4 inches tall, and tips the scales at a mere 115 pounds. Her eyes are blue-gray and turn to hazel when she wears green. Her birthday is September 1st; she was born at Vancouver, British Columbia. Which makes her a Canadian.

Legally Peggy Yvonne Middleton, she took Yvonne DeCarlo as her professional name, when she first started her dancing career. Her mother's family name is DeCarlo.

Yvonne speaks French. She likes to read. Shakespeare, Greek mythology and books about the theatre are her favorites. Her hobby is collecting records—symphonies and operas. Her most prized possession is a small, white leather bible her mother gave her when she was confirmed. She doesn't drink nor smoke, and seldom goes to parties.

Her perfect olive-skinned complexion Yvonne attributes to drinking a lot of water, exercise, fresh air and sunshine. And she's still as surprised as anyone about being picked as "Solome."

Van Johnson is in uniform again, cinematically speaking—as an Air Corps Major in "Thrill of a Romance." His sailor was so sensational in "Two Girls and a . . ." that M-G-M is planning a sequence, with the very same cast.

EVERYHING'S cleared with Sidney—not the Sidney you think, but the little wistful Sidney who was sorrow's own child on the screen for so long that her name automatically suggested tears and poverty. No up and coming movie fan ever thought of attending one of Sylvia Sidney's pictures without a pocketful of out-sized handkerchiefs to cry into; and she was so darned sweet and appealing, and always getting such a lousy deal. Attractive, too, even with those dowdy clothes and straggly hair-do's. And how that little girl could act! Made you want to get up there and choke the big lugs that were always making life so tough for her.

Then, as time went on, and Sylvia kept suffering and suffering and getting nowhere with it, you kind of gave her up as a hopeless job, and looked for merrier faces.

Well, if you thought Sylvia's suffering was getting monotonous, you should hear what she thought. As the old song goes, it "dragged and dragged and dragged her down" till she picked up and left "moom pitchers" flat—not only once but several times. (Continued on page 66)

Sylvia's been off-screen since '41.

They said she couldn't wear clothes—but her "Blood on the Sun" costumes are rave-sational!

Escape from the prison of same, sad roles was what Sylvia Sidney needed, if she was to try a come-back in Hollywood—and nobody knew that better than the little gal herself

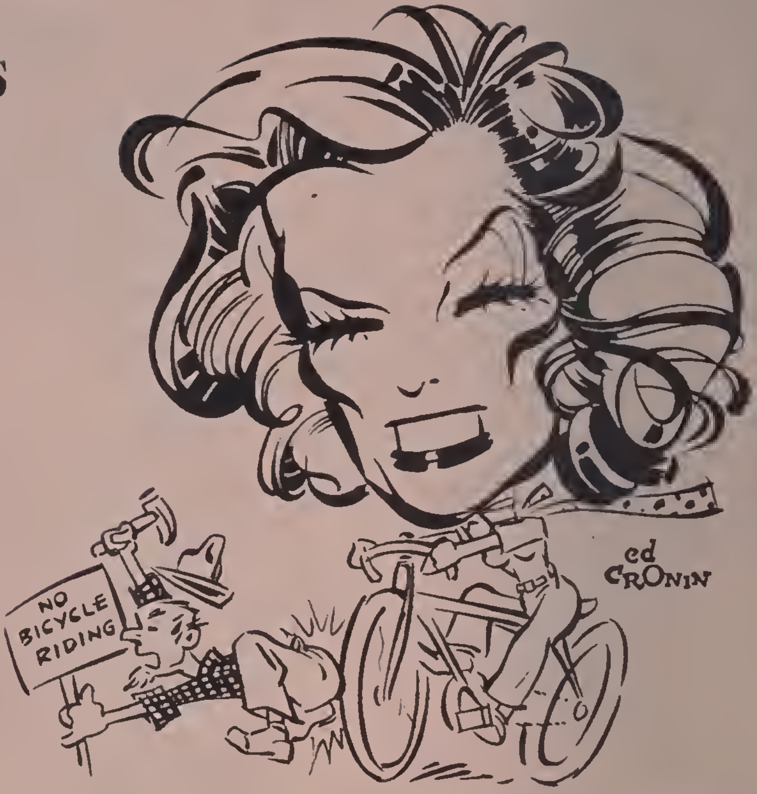
NEW DEAL for sidney

Earl Wilson

EARL FOR THE VAMPS OF HOLLYWOOD



A bicycle built for . . . getting Katharine Hepburn into trouble.

About the hottest thing on a typewriter in New York just now is a mild-mannered, conservative young man named Earl Wilson, whose syndicated "Saloon Editor's" column (night club, to you) about the "Booze Beat" and the "Booze Who" of Gotham night life has put new pep in a sadly worn and hackneyed field of journalism.

In the last eighteen months this Rockford, Ohio, farm lad, who used to call himself "Scoop" Wilson when he was sports' columnist in Piqua, Ohio, has stepped from the ranks of the good, run-of-the-mill feature writers, who are about forty cents a dozen in New York, into the self-tailored shoes of a national celebrity dragging down important money, courted by syndicate chiefs, magazine, book and movie editors.

Earl Wilson hasn't been to Hollywood, but from his spot in New York he has had a chance to meet and interview practically all of the stars.

His approach is uniformly irreverent.

Earl hasn't any unprinted anecdotes about movie stars and himself. "If I had, they'd have been published long ago," he says. "It takes a lot of stories to fill six columns a week." And it takes a lot of leg work too. For example, he struggled out of bed early one day to run up to visit Tallulah Bankhead in her Westchester home. It was in his column on this interview that Earl printed Miss Bankhead's You'll eat your hat if . . . Joan Fontaine doesn't get it first!

Bankhead's quotes started an actors versus authors feud.

Exposure to the Earl Wilson pen means taking a chance on some pretty frank ribbing, but the Hollywood stars seem to love it—usually come back for more blast at Lillian Hellman, the playwright of "The Little Foxes," in which Miss Bankhead starred on the stage. (Bette Davis played the lead on the screen.) This quote has started a brisk counterplay of mots and insults between authors and actors from New York to Hollywood: "I think she (Miss Hellman) is just a dreary bore," Tallulah told Earl. "She writes like an angel, but she's a dreary bore as spinach is a dreary bore. I say she's spinach."

Earl's conversation with Linda Darnell wasn't what it seemed.

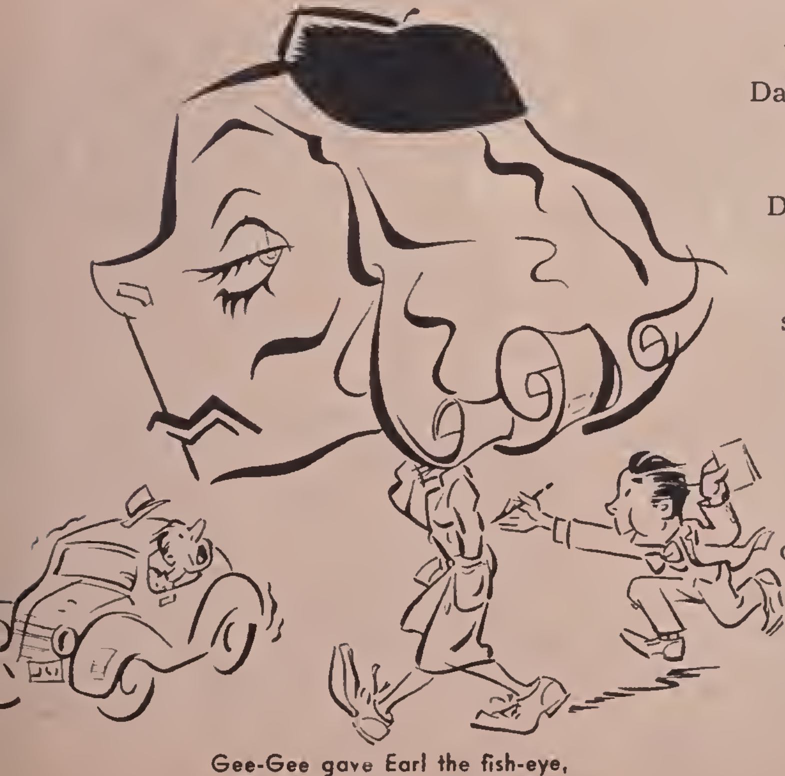
A full column, which appeared to be a risque interview with Linda Darnell as she posed prettily in bed in a revealing negligee, finished off with the revelation that Earl had been in New York and Miss Darnell in Palm Springs, with the interviewing and boudoir descriptions arranged entirely by phone.



Gee-Gee gave Earl the fish-eye, but the interview scintillated.

During a visit to her family home in Hartford, Katharine Hepburn told Earl that the home town folks, spotting her pedalling furiously around on her bicycle clad in brief white shorts, were gossiping that she wasn't wearing anything at all.

Earl said his b.w. (beautiful wife) had insisted he find out whether Katharine actually says "rally." "She rally doesn't," was Earl's report. "It's between rally and rilly."

Hepburn, noted for distaste for the press, was very cordial to Wilson. The only time she showed any indignation was when Earl (Continued on page 74)

YOU KNOW, of course, who Bill Demarest is. He distinguished himself as Papa Kochenlocker in "The Miracle of Morgan's Creek," and he was the Marine Sergeant in "Hail the Conquering Hero." To date, he has appeared in eight Preston Sturges pictures. Right now, he's groaning beneath the burden of a beard—considered essential equipment for his role with Gary Cooper in a Chaparejos Cantata, called "Along Came Jones."

But these are all the screen Demarest. The real Demarest—his personality in private life, we mean—is that of a humorous man who has looked a long time for something he didn't really expect to find, after all: a perfect wife. And unlike Diogenes, Bill's search was rewarded.

One night in 1937, he was having a singleton dinner (he had, by that time, cancelled out as bad lantern work his previous marriage), when it occurred to him that he should see the opening of the Los Angeles run of "Tobacco Road."

SCANNING photo stills from motion pictures made since the old Fox company came into existence—in February, 1915, with headquarters at 130 West 46th Street in New York, and studios at Fort Lee, N. The history of movie-making—of the industry born just before the first World War, and still in its infancy when the newsreel came into existence to report that war to the American public.

Charting—even to hit the highlights of—thirty years of movie history (with congratulations to 20th Century-Fox on their 30th anniversary) becomes, therefore, a presumptuous undertaking, on the part of any writer who's not a qualified historian. Approaching the assignment with all due respect, but without allowing time to grow sage and old while the research notes accumulate, is to acknowledge that the story won't be complete. Which it isn't—giving just the merest mention to all the important technical changes; the introduction of the close-up, of sound and color. The faces on the screen have changed, too (new stars have "been born", and

But see how we lead immediately into fashions? "Fashion is spinach," well-known American designer once declared. But to any historian—and more particularly, to the historian of the picture industry—it's the key. For the style trends are the markers, the chapter heads of what's to be selected as indicative of any given period; the footnotes, appendix and general outline of any such record-in-review.

Theda Bara was one of the first—the first star for Fox and the first screen "Vamp." (The picture was titled "A Fool There Was"; but it was a film based on the old Kipling poem, "The Vampire.")

Other stars of that time—only they were called Vamps (for reasons just explained), and sirens: Gladys Brockwell, who entered movies via the Drama, and June Caprice, a golden-haired blonde; followed in quick succession by stage favorites like Bertha Kalish and Valeska Suratt, then Virginia Pearson and Evelyn Nesbitt.

Fashion in those latter "teens" became a word for anything that glorified over-ornamentation. Paris had made its bid for supremacy for many years before World War I, with names like Paquin, Poiret and Lanvin figuring so importantly as to make it seem that "the source of style" and the Rue de la Paix were synonymous . . . except that there was competition threatening from London, meanwhile, with Lady Duff Gordon (the famous Lucille) (Continued on page 70)

FROM corpse to star in 90 minutes is quite a record—even for a Texan! But Zachary Scott made it in his film debut for Warners' "The Mask of Dimitrios."

Scott, as the evil and sinister Dimitrios, slithered his way in and out of scattered scenes of the mystery thriller, creating a sensational characterization—to the delight of Warner execs hard-pressed for star material, and being quite the handsomest heart-stopper in ages—to the delight of feminine audiences.

Gals remembered that Errol Flynn started his screen career in the role of a corpse, too. Well, it must be, they said, that this guy Scott's corpse was obviously bigger and better! And if they had anything to do with it, Mr. Flynn had better look to his crown over there at Warner Bros.

So in all fairness to such staunch supporters of Mr. Scott—and to those who will shortly be joining their ranks when said terrific young man is seen opposite Joan Crawford in "Mildred Pierce," it might be well to give out with a little inside dope on the guy himself.

Zach Scott is six feet one, and all Texan. So you can bank on plenty broad shoulders and but-narrow hips. What's more, that nifty torso can stay put—and always straight—while at the same (Continued on page 64)

Your Problem and Mine

By Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Dear Jane:

I have wanted to be a nurse ever since I can remember, but last year I had to quit school because of my health, and the doctor says it will be another year or longer before I will be entirely well.

I have a brother in the army, and my sister is going to join, which makes me want to be a nurse even more. What do you think I should do?

Georgia

Dear Georgia:

Wanting to be a nurse at this time is a wonderful thing. With the Government calling for volunteers and student nurses, I know of no better way for a girl to fulfill her patriotic duty. She is not only helping in the war effort, but is also building up a well paying career for herself in the post war period.

I feel so strongly on this that I would urge all girls who can do so to volunteer now, but in your case, I suggest that you devote your energies to building up your health, for good health is one of the necessary requirements. Follow your doctor's orders now, and when he says you are well enough, take up your nursing course.

Best of luck.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

Most of your requests for advice seem to come from girls, but they aren't the only ones who have troubles!

I'm seventeen years of age, and am going into the Navy in a few months, but my parents still consider me . . . well, a baby. They won't let me out of the house after dark, they open my mail, and just want to keep me to themselves all the time. I realize this is probably because I am an only child, but I don't think it is right. They've always been very good to me, and I love them, but this is beginning to bother me quite a lot. I don't want to go into the Navy feeling mad at them.

Please help me if you can, as I sure need someone to tell me what to do.

Bud

Dear Bud:

Yours is a problem which occurs frequently where an only child is involved. In fact, there has been a play written around just such at situation, called "The Silver Cord." It is difficult for parents to realize that their children are growing up; and where they have showered their entire love on one child, they are inclined to become possessive. It is a very bad thing, for both parents and child, when this happens. In your case, however, since you are going into the Navy in such a short time, I believe, in order to prevent hurt, I would just possess my soul in patience and try to bear it.

The only other alternative that I have to offer is to talk quite frankly with your parents, telling them just how you feel, and that you are asking only the personal freedom and courtesy that anyone your age should have—such as the privilege of opening your own mail, etc.

I am sure that, if you handle this situation tactfully, you can win them over to your way of thinking. What you are asking is no more than a boy of your age is entitled to have, and since it is not unreasonable, you should have no trouble in convincing them.

Good luck.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am engaged to a marine named Ted, a neighbor whom I have known all my life. When he was home on furlough, he introduced me to a friend of his, Dale, with whom I fell in love. I know that Dale is the only one I will ever care for, and I know that he loves me. We wanted to tell Ted what had happened, but before we had a chance, he was sent overseas. I put off telling him because I felt it would be better to wait until he came back.

Now he is back, but under different circumstances. He was wounded in action and had to have his left arm amputated. I feel that it is my duty to stick by him now, but am afraid that if I marry Ted, I will never be happy with him because I'm in love with Dale.

Should I sacrifice my happiness, and the happiness of the man I love, for Ted's happiness?

Denise

Dear Denise:

I have given much thought to your problem, for it is one that is going to come up many times in these unsettled days when emotions are colored by war hysteria.

Poor Ted, he is in for a hurt regardless of what course you take. If you tell him that you cannot marry him because of your love for someone else, it will be a quick, deep hurt; whereas, if you marry him under the circumstances, without telling him, he will be hurt time and time again when you will be unable to hide your feelings.

I cannot advise you what to do, but this suggestion has occurred to me. Why not talk to him, telling him frankly what has happened. Be sure you let him know that it occurred before he was wounded, so he won't believe the loss of his arm influenced your decision. You can tell him that you are still willing to keep your promise. But I think he will feel he cannot let you make such a sacrifice, and will be the magnanimous one in releasing you. Thus it will be he who breaks the bond, and the knowledge that he has acted in a noble and generous fashion will do much to salve his hurt.

Best of luck to you.

THE SENTIMENTAL SERGEANT

He went to the ticket office as casually as a man wandering into a dime store, and said, "One please," slapping down the necessary spinach for a second row seat. The box office magnate gave him a Look, saying down his nose that the house had been sold out for weeks.

"I'd like to turn in this extra ticket," said a voice over Bill's shoulder. The speaker was, doubtless, an average citizen, but afterward Bill wished he had studied the gentleman more closely, because there is a chance that he was Fate—on a bender.

Bill settled himself in his aisle seat. (In case you have seen "Tobacco Road", you will recall that it is closely akin to roast beef, thirty minutes after having been placed in the oven, to wit: rare and torrid.) During that lurid first act, Bill became aware of the presence, in the seat to his right, of a pretty girl, who kept looking down and coloring furiously.

On the girl's right was a second so akin to the first that they were obviously sisters—and quite as obviously astonished at what had been bought with their box office dollars.

It would be quite impossible to shock Bill Demarest; after his years in vaudeville, he had heard everything, and seen everything excepting possibly the birth of quintuplets at matinee. Yet, such is the man's perception, that he understood and sympathized with his neighbors' perturbation.

During intermission he casually followed the two girls to the lobby and was quick to light their cigarettes. "A little embarrassed?" he asked the girl who had been sitting next him.

"Oh, no," she said levelly. "I was just looking at my program."

During the second and third acts she spent more time staring at her program than she did taking note of activities and dialogue on the stage.

After final curtain, Bill asked the girls if they were driving. No, they said, they were going to take the street car; whereupon Mr. Sir Walter Demarest said, "Could I spread my tired old car over the puddles for you?" He could—what's more, he did.

And as they were saying goodnight, he asked his seatmate, "How would you like to have dinner with me tomorrow night at the Derby?" She said she would enjoy it, thank you.

Not until Bill awakened in the morning did he realize that he hadn't learned the girl's name, nor had he told her how he was billed. He decided grimly that he would probably get stood up; when he drove to the address which he remembered, he would probably find no one at home. He had learned, during the drive to the girls' apartment, that they had just arrived from Utah, that they knew little about Hollywood, and that neither of them was working. It would be practically impossible to find the girl again if she didn't keep their date.

She was waiting in front of the apartment building when he arrived, so Bill took care of the identity question in a hurry. She turned out to be Lucille Thayer. "Pretty name," said Bill.

"I think Demarest is a nice name," she replied. A proper attitude for a prospective wife—not that Bill was thinking so far in advance at the time.

They enjoyed dinner at the Derby. Several celebrities came in, and Lucille was impressed by Bill's yarns about them. After dinner Bill said, "It's still light outside. I'd like to have you meet my five wire-haired dachshunds. I have a Filipino boy out at my house—he'll be there, too."

The dachshunds took a running leap at Miss Thayer and expressed their unqualified approval with juicy pink tongues. She liked them, too. "Tell you what," suggested Bill, warming up to his campaign, "Why don't you come out here Sunday for dinner? I'll have the boy cook up something special. Bring your family," he said as an after-thought, having remembered Lucille's sister. She had been a nice girl to all appearances. It wouldn't be fair to leave her alone on Sunday; besides, it would be pleasant to have her along.

So, on Sunday, Lucille arrived for dinner with her family, consisting of not one, but FOUR sisters. For twenty seconds Bill strongly resembled Charlie McCarthy with his lower-jaw string broken. The boy in the kitchen went into a mathematical tizzy in an attempt to stretch 3 salads and 3 squabs to serve 7 persons.

After having unbugged his eyes, Bill began to see great advantages in marriage to a girl with such a large and beautiful family: there would never be a dull moment in a household in which one could expect a series of sisters as revolving guests. Promptly, Bill started romantic proceedings, which consisted partly in having the quintet spend their Sundays with him, and partly in taking Lucille everyplace worthwhile in Hollywood. Sundays were a little rugged as the dachshunds sometimes got more attention than he did. The other nights were delightful, though, because Lucille gave him her undivided interest.

And so, on August 30, 1938, Lucille Thayer became Mrs. William Demarest in Prescott, Arizona. After remaining in Bill's bachelor quarters for two years, the Demarests found a larger house in the hills above Hollywood, and Bill got what he had wanted ever since he could remember: a real home. Furnished early American style, too.

Marriage, a mighty institution, is composed of an aggregate of trifles. Like, for instance, Bill's current inclination to pass a hospital at a sedate rate of ten miles an hour. If some Rube Goldbergian person should invent a method to make a car tiptoe, Bill would have the device installed at once, the better to observe the word "Quiet" posted in hospital zones.

This attitude is the result of Lucille's appendectomy two years ago. She had been feeling miserable, so Bill took her to the hospital one afternoon late in November. The doctor diagnosed the misery, but packed her in ice so that she would be able to enjoy the holidays outside the hospital. For the ensuing two months, Lucille didn't once sneeze without being questioned closely by her husband. Bill had once planned to study medicine on a grand scale; now he undertook the profession on a personal basis.

After a trip to Utah, during which time Lucille spent more hours curled up in bed than she did visiting, Bill drove her straight to a Los Angeles hospital. He stood by while she was given a spinal anesthetic, and observed the entire operation. In the midst of the surgery, Lucille said to the doctor, who was wearing glasses, "If you should drop that pair and break it, do you have a substitute?"

The doctor said he did. The operation proceeded. Successfully.

The Demarest financial arrangements are indications of enlightened living. Bill pays all the monthly accounts, insurance, taxes, bonds; what is left as spending money is divided evenly between the partners. "That way, if Lucille wants to buy a Somebody-or-other's hat, she can. It's her money, so I keep my mouth shut. Likewise, if I emerge from a day at the races somewhat less Morganthau than I was the day before, well—that's my hard luck, and I get domestic sympathy instead of heckling."

Bill figures that Lucille earns her half of the family income. She is an ardent Red Cross worker, spending three days a week, at least, in this service. Furthermore she does all her own housework and cooking—without help.

When Bill has a day free from the studio, he and Lucille like to go out on U.S.O. Victory Committee camp tours or hospital visits. Their start in this field is worth noting. Bill volunteered as an entertainer—having spent plenty of time on the country's vaudeville circuits—and was instantly accepted. Getting tour orders one day, he learned that he was billed alone. "Gosh, what those guys want, in addition to being handed a few laughs," he observed solemnly, "is the sight of a pretty girl." Well, there was no one who could be sent at that time, so Bill suggested that his wife was a pretty girl who could assist his act considerably. Fine, said the Victory Committee.

On the way to the camp, Bill taught Lucille the lines and business necessary for a 12 minute skit. To Bill's pop-eyed astonishment, she went through the routine like a seasoned trouper without once fluffing a line.

When Bill had signed her with the Victory Committee, he had given her maiden name, a fact that explains the joyous billing at the camp: "Lucille Thayer," read the billboard, "Paramount's newest starlet." This was announced in handsome type. At the bottom of the poster, in modest letters was this observation, "Also, William Demarest, Paramount comedian."

Lucille was so successful that her appearance with her husband became routine. It was during her fourth show that Lucille turned to her husband, at the end of their joint skit, and said with serene confidence, "Now, I want to tell a joke."

Bill took one step backward. "Okay," he gulped. "Tell it."

It turned out to be a honey—a knick-knack she had picked up at Red Cross meeting. No one laughed harder at the quip than Bill, who now springs it first during their act, if he has a chance. He expects, momentarily, a wifely topper to this trick. We'll let you know.

Not only does Lucille take a vital interest in Bill's status as a comedian, she also devotes herself to the completion of his coin collection. For one thing, Bill collects American pennies. There are several (the 1909 series) that are extremely rare. Bearing this in mind, Lucille wrote to her father, who is a merchant in Utah, asking him to save his pennies so that, when she went north to visit, she could examine them. Upon arrival, many months later, she found a tinkling assembly of 8000 pennies.

At first opportunity she set to work with magnifying glass and deft fingers. Two weeks later, with weary eyes and a pair of hands stiff and shaking from miser's cramp, Mrs. Demarest turned over the final coin. In all that search, she had found not even ONE rare vintage penny.

She came home and told Bill the story, saying that the only exciting copper left on earth was Dick Tracy. A few days later she made a purchase in the Broadway Department store, corner of Vine and Hollywood, and was given three pennies in change. Each one went directly into Bill's collection. All very rare.

The Demarests also collect rare old pewter. On their radio they have a marching line of mugs, picked up in small shops from New York to San Diego. These mugs are graduated in size from the smallest, about an inch high, to a towering beer stein about a foot tall. Whenever Bill is sent out of town on personal appearances, bond tours, or location trips, he may be found at some time during his travels, peering through the wares of some antique shop. This side of Papa Kochenlocker's personality has puzzled a good many of the storekeepers.

In every well-managed household there should be one pet controversy to keep the atmosphere spicy. The Demarests have a difference of opinion: Lucille insists that the best breakfast dish on earth is one of her cream waffles, topped with maple syrup and garnished with a side of ham. The sentimental sergeant disagrees; you've never lived, he avows, until you have come face to face with a double order of his French pancakes.

"I married her," he says, wearing an expression reminiscent of the woebegone features of a scolded St. Bernard, "thinking she didn't know how to cook. And what do I get? A competitor. A waffle-maker with no respect for pancakes. It should teach a man, never, never to attend a theatre alone."

At which point he laughs and Lucille laughs, and the room seems to be filled with that pleasant, indefinable element—happiness.

that this should be classed under the head of an "accident," which might happen to anyone who celebrated the New Year too enthusiastically. The subsequent humiliation was a bitter dose for the intensely sensitive and ambitious Helmut to assimilate.

Well-meaning friends tried to invent an "out" for him. They suggested that someone had played a cruel joke and slipped him a "mickey." Helmut maintains stoutly that this did not happen. "No one was to blame but me," he declares. "And no one but me will be responsible for seeing that it doesn't happen again."

Since Miss Lupino has decided to divorce Louis Hayward, Hollywood gossip has it that she plans to marry Helmut. Ida says merely, "How can I have any plans for marriage . . . when I haven't even filed suit for divorce yet?" Helmut says, "Ida is one of the loveliest girls I know or have ever known. I enjoy being with her. But—how can we have any plans?"

Still, both of them have been greatly hurt in the break-ups of their respective marriages. That, Hollywood thinks, might make for a very special bond between them—a mutual sympathy which might very naturally grow into something bigger and more important.

Charlie Chaplin and wife Oona O'Neill watch a match at the Los Angeles Tennis Club. Is the British-born actor an undesirable alien? That's the question in Washington.

While we are at it, though, we may as well admit that there have been unpleasant murmurs in gossip columns here and there about Helmut before last New Year's Eve. But these were vague rumors and the really knowing people in Hollywood put them down simply to the malicious sniping which is always expected to be aimed at so young and attractive a man who has risen so swiftly to prominence strictly under his own power.

No doubt he has made some errors of judgment. It would be strange if he hadn't, when you consider his circumstances. Remember that in the past very few years he has (1) escaped miraculously from the Nazis (2) learned to speak almost perfect English and has become an American citizen (3) has attended an American

Every time you go to the store and carry your purchase home unwrapped, you help bring Victory just so much nearer — help get our boys back home just so much sooner.

So — when you go to the store, take along a basket or a shopping bag or some permanent container, roomy enough to carry your purchases home unwrapped.

Under no circumstances ask for, or accept, unnecessary paper wrappings from the storekeeper.

Don't burn or ruin, waste or destroy a single scrap of paper around your home, store or office. Collect it, save it, and call your local salvage group. They will call for it if you ask them to.

Remember — every scrap of paper you don't use, and every scrap you do save means just so much more ammunition for Victory.

HERE ARE A FEW THINGS THAT PAPER IS VITALLY NEEDED FOR:

Paper that wraps and protects more than 700,000 different war items. Paper that goes into containers for blood plasma collected by the Red Cross. Paper to make vests for airmen who fight in sub-zero temperatures. Paper for V-Mail envelopes for our fighting men. These are a few of the vital roles that paper plays in the war program.

University (U.C.L.A.) where he met and mingled with hundreds of young people who must, at first, have seemed strange to him (4) has made an ecstatic marriage and has suffered heart break through its crash (5) has achieved a spectacular rise in pictures.

He has faced the necessity of adjusting himself to so many abrupt changes, many of them deeply emotional experiences, that it is surprising that he has retained as clear a perspective as he has.

No one has taken a picture career more seriously or has worked harder at it than has Helmut. It is simply incredible to imagine that he would jeopardize it carelessly or thoughtlessly. He cares about it too intensely.

About that perspective, consider this: When he first started in pictures, he took a one-room, bed-in-the-wall, furnished apartment in Hollywood for which he paid forty-five dollars a month. He still lives there. He cooks his own breakfast on the little gas stove, lunches at the studio and dines on the Boulevard unless he is invited out to dinner.

"It isn't as if it were necessary for me to 'make a show' as people thought they must before the war," he remarks. "I am a few minutes' drive from the studio, I am near restaurants and shops, I have daily maid service and a telephone. I couldn't get all that in a fashionable district for three times the money now."

He admits that sometimes when he is studying a part or trying to write (he nurtures an ambition to become an author) the four narrow walls have a tendency to "close in on him." He yearns occasionally for a hill or a meadow or some wide space where he might gaze at the sky or the sea . . . and breathe. But there is a gas shortage, and the wide open spaces won't come to him. So he endures his narrow walls.

When he first came to Hollywood, excited at his new experience, trying to gain emotional equilibrium after the break-up of his marriage, he went often to night clubs and other gay spots. Now that he is getting some roles which require hard work and concentration, he finds that he cannot do as much of this as before, nor does he feel the same need of it.

"Anyhow," he says, "I never did go to those places as often as the papers said I did. You know, they used to call me a 'wolf' all the time. I know that they must exaggerate their stories to make them interesting, just as I must exaggerate a character on the screen to make him interesting. So it was natural that when I went two or three times to night clubs, the papers said it was five times. Of course, I suppose that if I hadn't gone at all, they might have said it was only twice. But I'd have been having a dull time of it, wouldn't I?

"But I know something now which I hadn't realized before. I used to think my job was just to make nice, convincing faces on the screen, to do a good job of acting. I thought my private life was my own affair. Now I knew that those faces we make aren't enough to do for the money we get. There is something more. It isn't just ability—talent—that gets you a break in pictures. It's a combination of many things, and there's always a large slice of luck, just plain luck, involved.

"The pay is out of proportion for what you do before the camera. The other thing you are paid for is to be a public figure, a sort of symbol. For that nice salary you agree, tacitly, to allow the public the privilege of judging you, of speculating about you, of invading your privacy. In a strange sort of way, the public whom you almost never see owns you. If they love you very much, they'll probably forgive you if you disappoint them once. If you are a very great star, with years of success behind you, they may forgive you even more than that. But . . . they may not. There's no reason, really, why they should!"

It's a rather eerie and unsettling picture that Helmut paints of an actor as the chattel of unseen thousands of affectionate, critical, watching people! He probably has something there, at that. "Look at the sharp watch which is kept on the President and the members of his family, for the slightest flaw in behavior," he pointed out. "And their public life is only incidental to the other things about them that are important. Ours is our whole career!"

If you were to see Helmut when he is amusing himself—and that is how

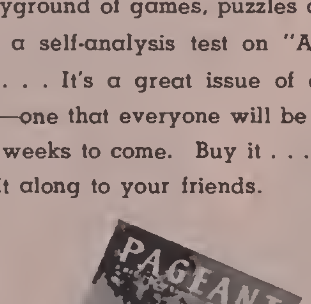
THE GREATEST MAGAZINE SHOW ON EARTH



AT YOUR NEWSSTAND 25c

Hollywood gossips ordinarily see him—you might conclude, as they have, that he is a light-hearted, attractive young man with engaging continental manners and a mind whole-heartedly concerned with the price of imported caviar and the impact of a pretty woman on a room full of people. And you would be wrong.

Actually, he is a hard working man. His swift mastery of English would prove that. I've heard people toss him obscure and unusual English phrases, just for fun, but I haven't heard him muff one yet. He enjoys serious books, serious music and serious discussions, although he admits cheerfully that he is "still learning about most of those things."

His best friends—people he most enjoys—are people who are not connected with pictures, people he met as students at the University, professional people, lawyers, doctors. He once hoped to study medicine, himself, and he has never lost his interest in that profession.

He likes small parties . . . "six or eight people, with stimulating conversation" . . . and he admits that he still enjoys a night club in the company of an attractive woman. But large Hollywood parties appall him. "Everyone is bored and everyone is trying to pretend he isn't. It takes a pretty good actor to get away with it!"

He doesn't like parlor games very much, but he is addicted to chess in a big way. He and Humphrey Bogart discovered each other—and chess—when they were working in "Passage to Marseilles." Afterward, when they were in different pictures, they distressed the communications department of the studio when each set up his little board in his dressing room and insisted upon phoning the other one about the next move . . . in a running game which lasted for weeks.

He is afraid of becoming "one of those Hollywood citizens who reads the gossip columns, looking for mention of himself, before he reads the headlines about the war." He wants to do a play in New York, if Warners will release him long enough, "just to make that perspective secure." He has a play in mind.

But most of all, he wants to work out a pattern of living which will make it certain that he won't make any more deplorable "mistakes."

"If you learn to know yourself and your weaknesses," he thinks, "you can anticipate possible situations. Not all your errors get into the papers, after all! Perhaps you've made a bad investment, taken a job without considering it enough, trusted a 'friend' before you knew him long enough to judge him . . . or perhaps it's a triviality like buying an impractical suit of clothes or a present for someone which you realize, too late, he could not possibility want or need.

"Well! If you have any intelligence, you'll use these mistakes to prevent future ones. You'll try consciously and determinedly to plan your life so that these things won't happen to you twice.

"That goes double for any special weaknesses you discover in your own character!"

Personally, I think that Helmut means all this. Impulse and bad luck seem to have dogged him. I think he's really out to defeat these two jinxes.

MARIA MONTEZ

was exactly two years ago. Now, she's a full twelve months ahead of her schedule and her name is known to every movie fan in this country, while in other parts of the hemisphere she rates with such contemporaries as Greer Garson, Betty Grable and Katharine Hepburn in popularity.

The girl who started in her film career as the movie colony's greatest paradox has now become an amazing legend. As a newcomer, Maria was often scorned and laughed at for using a technique that was not only unorthodox in motion picture circles but entirely unheard of even by veterans of the business. Yet today many of the same producers and directors who refused to take her seriously at the outset of her career point her out as the most noteworthy example of Hollywood success.

Maria's technique and method is simple—so simple that it astounds you. "If I want anything," she explains, "first I ask myself if I want it very badly. If the answer is 'yes,' then I simply make up my mind to get it. But I get it by working hard and keeping my eyes glued to my goal.

"You see, some years ago I read a little line in a book that I have never forgotten. Today, I have those words framed and whenever I feel myself becoming discouraged, I always look at that single sentence. That alone gives me new hope. It's like a shot in the arm."

The sentence Maria is referring to is: "It is far better to make an attempt and fail than fail to make the attempt."

Even in her love life, Maria's motto has held up admirably. "I'll never forget the night I made up my mind that Jean Pierre Aumont had all the qualities of the man I wanted to marry. He was handsome. He was charming. He was intelligent, courageous and interesting. Of course, I was in love with him from the first time I saw him, but I didn't realize it.

"It was at a party that Universal gave for me at the Sherry Netherlands that I felt sure I was in love. Jean Pierre was standing at the other end of the room talking to a magazine writer. There were many pretty women present, but few of them had ever heard of him. He had been in this country only a short while and had only made two pictures, "Cross of Lorraine" and "Assignment in Brittany." I just walked over and joined in the conversation. Knowing that Jean Pierre was a Frenchman and having lived in France myself, I acted like a lady of his native land would act. I spoke French to him. I emphasized my femininity, knowing well that that's what Frenchmen like. It worked beautifully.

"For the next few weeks, Jean Pierre saw no other woman but me. By the time I returned to Hollywood, he was there. Our romance continued, and we were engaged and married in July of last year. Shortly after, he joined the Free French forces and left for overseas. He was the first Frenchman to land during the invasion of Southern France, an honor that he is very proud of having. He is brave, too. Three times he has been decorated. Three times, he has been promoted."

Maria Montez frequently receives photos from Jean Pierre Aumont. This is one taken at the time of the Italian campaign. (See the Bay of Naples?) He's since gone to France.

When Maria's romance with her Jean Pierre first came to the attention of New York columnists, there were those who predicted it would never last. They said Maria was too volatile a person, too much concerned with her own career and too ambitious to allow marriage or love to jeopardize her career. Those self-appointed prognosticators were all wrong!

I knew Maria back in the first flush of her career, when she was not only working hard toward a successful career but fighting for it. Her technique was amazing. Even in the film colony, she made eyebrows lift in surprise every time she walked into the Universal commissary. To those who were sitting there it was far better than any floor show they ever witnessed. Her gowns and hats were inconceivable. Maria knew it. But she wanted attention. She was concentrating upon getting it, and she got far more than she anticipated.

She was sufficiently fearless to say things that left her listeners speechless. Hollywood wasn't accustomed to the straightforward statements that issued from her lips. It couldn't understand an actress who said, "I am going to be successful. I am going to be a great star." Newspaper and magazine writers were never approached by a Hollywood player who even before she appeared in a single film said, "When are you going to write a story about me? I have a great deal to tell the public."

Yes, Maria was that kind of a girl. She still is. There's neither sham nor pretense about her. If she wants anything, she'll get it. Nothing will stop her. At the moment, she is launching forth on her second three year plan. This time, however, those who might have been inclined to pooh-pooh are perking up and paying attention to what she has to say:

"Now, I am through with trying to attract attention. Now I am concentrating exclusively on being an actress. I want to be a good actress—a great actress."

And when Maria makes an utterance of this kind, she is saying what she means. Being one of those amazingly tireless people who gives the impression of being charged with a continual current of energy, she is seldom content doing one thing at a time. "No woman today," she explains vivaciously, "whose husband is away fighting in a war for freedom should sit around and wait. She should keep busy—do many things. She should help in the war effort. She should try to improve herself mentally. She should groom herself to be more attractive, so when her husband returns he won't be disappointed. In this way, she will have no time to be sad, and she will have many things to write to her husband.

"I write to Jean Pierre every day. Sometimes several times a day. But it is something I love to do. Just like I love to write. Now I am writing a book—a love story. A great love story. And I am studying, too. I always study. But now I am studying because Pierre and I have post war plans of our own. We are going to do a play together in France. We will be there for six months working together. Also, I am studying music. Always, always, I study. No person can ever know too much."

When Maria included in her mention of her post-war plans that she was also contemplating raising a family, the reaction was immediate. The news spread like wildfire to the infants' establishments, and next morning she was barraged with samples of layettes, photographs of baby carriages, bassinets and even maternity gowns. Sadly Maria returned them all.

"When the time comes," she explained, "I shall not keep it a secret. Everybody will know. Motherhood is something to be proud of—something every woman wants to experience."

Standing at the tip of the cinematic heap today because of her singleness of purpose and her driving desire to succeed, Maria brings the realization to the fore that she would have been successful at anything she undertook. If she had not elected to be an actress, she would have made an excellent advertising executive. If she wanted to produce pictures, she would easily have excelled in that field.

Even now Maria is more than an actress. She's a mighty smart business woman. She's thoroughly familiar with every phase of the motion picture industry from the story end to the selling field. She will read a script and make suggestions for changes. She will give the director valuable tips on how certain scenes should be played to secure the best results. She will deluge the Publicity Department at Universal with ideas for handling the publicity on a picture. She herself is one of the favorite people of the press because of her complete cooperation and her utter frankness in answering the questions of interviewers. And she makes no bones about the fact that she welcomes publicity.

"Without it," she says frankly, "an actress is lost."

At the completion of a picture, Maria will often indicate a knowledge of the time of the year best to release it as well as the cities that should see the picture first.

Today the lovely actress knows all the branch managers of the Universal offices throughout the country by name. When she sees them after a year's absence, she will inquire about their individual families and will discuss bits of information which they imparted when last they saw her. She knows all the salesmen throughout the country as well as a great many of the theatre owners. And above all, Maria makes it her business to be interested and well informed about all the happenings in the great industry. It means her career. And she knows that by familiarizing herself with all the details and business angles, she is helping herself.

After returning from her trips throughout the country, she will discuss percentages and averages on pictures, grosses and receipts. She will discuss with studio executives how much money her pictures have earned at certain theatres; and if they have fallen short or exceeded the mark, she immediately sets forth a theory. Maria Montez is one actress who is far from being a problem. On the contrary, she is a project —a project her employers are proud of having.

Included in her elaborate three-year plan, she mentions doing a play with Alexander Knox whose recent work in the title role of Twentieth Century-Fox' "Wilson" has catapulted him into the limelight of leading actors. According to Maria, Orson Welles is writing the play and she will have the leading feminine role.

She is already preparing herself for this by studying dramatics with one of the country's outstanding teachers. Even on a recent trip to the East, Maria made sure that her coach accompanied her. She does not lose a single moment for she feels the stage of the flowing draperies is over. Now she wants to do stories about earthy men and women—preferably men and women of today with problems that are real and meaningful. However in the inner recesses of her mind is a strong wish to do a great love story; one that is simple and charming and in the style of "Smilin' Thru."

With the completion of her first three-year plan, the sultry actress feels she no longer needs to depend upon her lovely legs or glamorous curves. But this does not mean that she's going to shroud her figure from public gaze altogether. "That," says Maria Montez, "would be like putting a Mother Hubbard on Venus de Milo."

because not many people knew Gloria. "John's an intellectual," they said. And so, despite her incredibly lovely face, is Gloria. "John's a conversationalist, and he enjoys the company of a girl who is vivid, articulate, and witty," they said. Just so is Gloria, who kept a group at the Alan Ladd party—where she first met John—roaring with laughter at her anecdotes.

Just three months after this original meeting, John and Gloria were married—in December, to be vaguely exact—in the Bella Vista Community Church, Beverly Hills. Gloria wore a street dress of ice blue satin, a diminutive black hat covered with huge blue roses, and she carried white orchids. John wore the conventional navy blue—a suit tailored without thought of marriage, but for reasons of necessity. (Honorably discharged from the Army, and what did he find? That while he was in service, his entire wardrobe had been snatched!)

After the ceremony, the newlywed Paynes pooled their A tickets and drove to Palm Springs for their honeymoon. And don't tell MGM this, please, because the news is confidential—Gloria may give up her career! It depends, of course, upon a good many things, but one of them is that John firmly believes a marriage has much better chance of success if there is only one career in the family.

Perhaps this would be a good place in which to blast a popular misconception of what constitutes normal existence for a Hollywood actor. To judge from the quaint rumors one hears on the subject in Ailing, Illinois, and Silicosis, Kentucky, the life of the average H. M. (Hollywood male, married or otherwise) is a sybaritic (i. e., plushy) succession of trips to the tailor, dalliances upon a night club dance floor, and workouts on the table of a Swedish masseur. Nothing could be farther from the truth. At least in John's case.

Ladees and Gentullmen, we call your attention to the character standing at the bottom of a six-foot ditch, manicuring the earth with pickaxe and shovel. What is the man doing? The man is digging a channel six feet deep and twenty-three yards long which is to be used as conduit for a water pipe. The man is wearing a pair of very tired work shoes with hobnailed soles two inches thick, and a pair of levis of practically no color except 'dobe stain. From waist upward he is a mass of muscle, mahogany brown from sun and hard work. This man is not a member of Ditchdiggers' Local No. 986773; his union card reads "Screen Actors' Guild."

John dug this ditch because the new house he bought in Brentwood happened to need some additional plumbing.

There's a story, too, about how he acquired that house, in manner direct and resultful. He set out on foot one day to scout the terrain. When he saw a piece of property that appealed to him, he simply walked up to the door, rang, and asked the person who answered if the house happened to be for sale. A good many startled householders said "No"; eventually John placed his question to a charming elderly man who admitted that he and his wife had been planning to return to their original home back east. Yes, they would be glad to sell at a reasonable, uninflated price.

As soon as these samaritans moved out, John surveyed the premises and decided upon some alterations. (This was still in his before-marriage period, remember; when such things required no consulting with the missus.) The first thing he did was to investigate nearby lumber yards in search of redwood paneling; he finally located 1500 feet and bought the lot. This was installed on two walls in the living room, from floor to waist height (John's waist), and was used to cover the other two walls entirely. One of these walls was fitted with shelves, floor to ceiling, to receive John's extensive library. The other wall was interrupted by a generous stone fireplace. Once the paneling was installed, John had it stained a deep, glowing burgundy.

Next, the earnest householder set out to buy carpeting. At this point there will be a brief pause for comradely groans from all who have recently tried to buy floor covering. After plenty of searching, John found a mill end of jade green broadloom big enough to do the trick. The next purchase was a few odd rolls of imported tweed wallpaper, of no use to anyone but an enterprising householder with better than half his wall space already paneled.

And then furniture. Impossible to get, you say? Not if you have ingenuity and a sterling friendship with a competent man who builds to your specifications from second-hand springs, fumigated stuffing and odd lots of beautiful crash and chintz. John picked up some old wing chairs and had the wing sections cut down so that the proportions were better, the lines more interesting. Then he had some cast-off leather lounge chairs widened, deepened and upholstered in dark green broadcloth. These he placed on either side of the fireplace.

Does that living room come to life in your mind's eye? Deep burgundy paneling, a glowing fireplace, a green rug, tweed wallpaper, big roomy green chairs scattered about? See Omar Khayyam.

The living room opens upon a bricked courtyard, in the center of which stands a magnificently lacy pepper tree. Next summer, when more equipment is available, the Paynes will furnish this airy patio with garden furniture, and build a barbecue at one end. Rare spot for wiener bakes and steak fries.

In the dining room, there is an item of furniture that fetches ecstatic cries from all visiting guests, both male and female. It is a huge (6 feet in diameter) dining table, painted country-barn red. In the center is installed a rotating Lazy Mary. Dinners are served family style on the Lazy Mary; then everyone helps himself. Under this system, you'll note, the partaking of food and the indulgence in sparkling conversation can proceed without the annoyance of those olives being passed fourteen times.

The bedroom consists mainly of acres and acres of bed. This imposing sack is six feet wide and almost nine feet long. It would cause Rube Goldberg to resign as a novice inventor if he could see it, because of its system of built-in comforts. Viz: within handy reach there is a telephone, a radio, an electric razor, a shaving mirror, a shelf of books, a clock, and a memo pad that John consults every morning so that he can providently plan his day. This bed headboard, with its series of drawers, recesses and cupboards, is upholstered in beige leather.

Miss Julia Payne, John's 4½-year-old daughter, was privileged to choose the color scheme for her suite. She selected a white wallpaper on which was printed a single long-stemmed rose at random. Her rug was green, and she selected dimity cross curtains with wide ruffles. In feminine replica of the living room plan, she asked to have one end of her bedroom paneled floor to ceiling in knotty pine, so her amused father obliged.

This home, with its occupants (Julie, her nurse, the cook, the family cat named Smoky, the family dog called Lady, and the newlyweds named Payne) is usually referred to by John, because of the gender of all but the master, as Payne's Harem.

John called at the studio one afternoon and was passing the time of day in one of the publicity offices. "Just came from the vet's," he said. "I took Lady down to have his ears taped properly. The vet said Lady was getting along fine—what a dog!"

"Just a minute," said John's listener. "I thought Lady was a female."

"Sure he is. But I'm surrounded by the weaker sex, and—since I've always regarded The Dog en masse as a male institution—Lady is going to be called he."

There is one additional item in the Payne household always designated by the masculine pronoun: Julie's piggy bank. As soon as Julie was old enough to understand that money was not edible, John started her financial training. At regular intervals he secured a roll of shiny new nickels from the bank and tucked them away in a safe place. Then he established small duties for the young tycoon. If she picked up all her toys at night and put them away properly, she was paid one shiny nickel. This coin was placed in a bisque pig. When, after several months, the pig was stuffed, the Paynes, father and daughter, had a pig-smashing party, salvaged the coins, and deposited them in an account in Julie's name.

Currently Julie has come to understand that pass book. She knows that proceeds from punctured pigs are duly noted there, and that war bonds are bought when enough pigs have given their all.

Sometimes Pop Payne pays through the nose. Not so long ago he backed the car into the driveway, washed it, then went to work with chamois and wax. Julie, fascinated by the results, wanted to be in on the polish job. It might also be that she could hear the forthcoming jingle of another nickel in her piggy bank.

John supplied her with a soft cloth and indicated the left rear fender. "You make that shine," he suggested. Julie's small head bobbed in compliance; she set her small jaw and went to work.

After fifteen or twenty minutes, John worked his way back to the Julie department. And counted ten before he spoke. At some time during her elbow exercising, Julie had dropped her polishing cloth into a very gooey puddle. Unperturbed, she had continued her job with mud as a lubricant.

Well, she got her nickel—and John got writer's cramp on a grand scale trying to repair the damage!

Speaking of writer's cramp, did you know that John studied journalism at Columbia University and has sold poetry to any number of nationally-circulated publications? This fact would probably never have come to light if someone hadn't chanced across the verses while doing magazine research. When asked about his success, John looked into the middle distance with the expression of a man who wonders whether he can get away with swearing that he has a double. Not until he was reminded that Kipling, Vachel Lindsey, and Robert Service were rugged characters did he admit that at times he, too, has tried to dream up a word to rhyme with orange.

Martha Vickers ("The Big Sleep" may make her a star), and LeRoy Prinz, dance director at Warner Bros.—with a Jap Samurai sword and a Hari-Kari knife captured in the Pacific.

John's reading is voluminous. Recently he completed "Native Son," "Forever Amber," "Leave Her To Heaven," and a James M. Cain trilogy.

One of John's favorite bits of literature is "My Little Boy," consisting of a series of sketches published in Woollcott's Reader.

In addition to his love for and creation of poetry, John has another state secret: he is addicted to the use of Swiss pine bath essence in a hot bath after a day of digging ditches. It is wonderful for muscular aches and pains . . . and it smells better than liniment.

Although John realized that he used the pine oil generously, it seemed to him that violent evaporation must be taking place. The liquid disappeared faster than a Christmas bonus. Not being a suspicious man but knowing something of the habits of womankind, he approaches his daughter.

"Me—use your pine bath oil?" she repeated his question, lifting both eyebrows and her voice. "Goodness, no. I have my bubble bath, you know." Beneath her father's dubious eye, she recalled an emergency. "Well, I may have used it now and then—in a pinch," she amended.

The pinch continued. It became a squeeze play. So, among Julie's Christmas gifts was a quart of pine bath oil. And don't tell Julie, but a tall, dark shadow sneaked into her bathroom one night recently. Hereafter, she had better watch the liquid level in her bottle.

As soon as John had made his Brentwood home livable, he embarked upon a new strong-arm venture. He bought a lot at the beach near Malibu, consisting of 700 feet of ocean frontage, an inland depth of 650 feet, and an elevation at highest point of 30 feet. The ink wasn't dry on his deed before John was back in levis and hobnailed boots, supervising the activities of a bulldozer that was gouging out a road from the highest point of his land, to the beach. Next he had a load of gravel hauled in, then set to work to construct a driveway.

At this writing, the driveway is still in the process of manufacture. As soon as it is done, John plans to start construction of a one-room shanty on a spot from which you can see Honolulu on a clear day—through the Mt. Wilson telescope. He will pour his own cement for the floor, then have an expert build the fireplace. Eventually, with four walls and a roof, this will represent a week-end hideaway for John and Gloria.

Conclusion: Should the earth open tomorrow and swallow every studio in Hollywood, John Payne wouldn't be out of a job. As long as there are bulldozers, cement mixers, picks, shovels, and plenty of turf to be tossed around, Payne will get by.

"MINE IS A STORY no pictures can tell"

—says Mrs. Louise Sullenger of Dearborn, Michigan

"I am sending you two snapshots," writes Louise Sullenger, "one, of the woman I used to be—one, of the woman I am today. They tell you something of the physical change in my appearance. But no photograph can reveal the buoyancy, the zest for living, that now fills me with eagerness for the adventures of each new day.

"No one need tell me what an overweight woman thinks about!" says Mrs. Sullenger. "I know all the tortures of buying a size 40 dress. I know the misery of refusing invitations because of being ashamed of my appearance. Not so long ago, I was wallowing in self-pity, with only one remaining grain of resolution: I would try the DuBarry Success Course.

"In ten weeks from the time I started, I lost 25 pounds and got back the waistline I had as a girl. Then I bought a new suit—size 14!

"But no words and no pictures can express how it feels to look into the mirror and see reflected a shining, radiant face—to feel that all of life is still before you, and to know that you have the energy, the courage—yes, and the beauty to enjoy it."

These are the snapshots Mrs. Sullenger sent to Ann Delafield—the one above showing her "as she used to be," the one at right showing her on finishing the Success Course.

time, those long legs can bend or slouch or take most any stance you can think of. "It's a cinch," says Scott, "that is, if you're a Texan."

He has dark brown wavy hair, and beautiful — yep, really beautiful — brown eyes. And as if the eyes weren't enough, he's got to go ahead and be blessed with the longest, thickest lashes in Hollywood. It isn't fair (me being a girl), but then they must have come in handy during some of those Texas dust storms, when Zack was riding the range punching cattle.

And a nose. What can you say about a nose? Wouldn't be surprised but what that chiseled beak of his doesn't have a great deal to do with the casting of the John Barrymore part one of these days —when they get around to doing "Goodnight Sweet Prince." (My own private prediction is that Mr. Zachary Scott stands the best chance of getting this prize acting plum!) And a mouth. But then, haven't we said enough? Sure, it's everything to be desired.

He has long, thin hands—sensitive but strong—the kind that make you ask, "Do you play the piano?" Well, he did when he was a youngster, but gave it up because acting ambitions suddenly consumed all his spare time and effort. But it's the one regret of his life, and the reason for his well-stocked record collection of piano selections.

His voice is deep, compelling and musical. When he was working in "Dimitrios," he had a slight English or so-called stage accent. In "Hold Autumn in Your Hands," he had to slip back into his Texas drawl.

He has a wonderful sense of humor. Like the time in "Mask of Dimitrios' when Faye Emerson had a line saying, "I would like to see the body." (Of Dimitrios.) Zack wasn't on call for work that day, but he came on set. Just after Faye delivered the line, he had himself carried in by Sidney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre and plopped at her feet. Before Faye could give out with a double take, Zack said, "May I introduce my pall bearers, Madame?"

He's a very sympathetic guy and has a deep love for humanity. One of the things that distresses him greatly is that with the closing of the W.P.A. Theatre, a great many potentially great stars are lost to the world. And it is one of his greatest ambitions to start a good old-fashioned stock company of actors, when time and fortune permit.

Zack dresses to the occasion. But no matter how sartorially correct he may be, he looks at ease and comfortable. He prefers sport clothes, though, and likes to wear a choice belt of Mexican silver discs with his slacks.

He likes tennis, golf and swimming. But what a demon he is at riding! But naturally. "When I was a boy," says Zack, "I spent three months out of every year on my grandfather's ranch in Texas. I was the city cousin who came up to have all the starch taken out of him. But grandfather saw to it that his protege from the city had all the tips beforehand. I was never caught saying 'bulldoze,' when I should have said 'bulldog'—thanks to him!"

Being in the saddle all day long became second nature, and a first love to Zack. But riding wasn't the only thing this city slicker learned. He became a darned good cook! "Only trouble was," says Zack, "my cooking was a little monotonous then. You see, I discovered that when cooking for eight or ten people, it's the big pot that's the interesting one and the easy one. I was busier than a switch engine, making stews from morning to night."

Zack drives a midget sedan that can practically crawl under a Scotty. It's a B.M.W., which he calls "My Country 'Tis" because it's seen a lot of service—and, it gets 35 miles to a gallon of gas! (He's not so dumb!) "The car is a hangover from my boyhood days," remarks Zack. "I always wanted a small car. Sometimes I wonder, though, how I'd ever get in it if I didn't have my adaptable Texas legs!"

Zack lives in a charming, comfortably furnished home in West Hollywood, which you get to by first getting lost on a dirt road imbedded with rocks just right for cutting your tires to ribbons. This isn't Zack's fault. It has something to do with the numbering on his street—but it makes you mad just the same. That is, until you enter the Scott home. Then you gasp with awe and wonder. It's the Scott charm that does it. And the Scott charm is not only doubled, but tripled in that home. For you see, Zachary is married to a lovely and intelligent young woman, formerly Elaine Anderson of Fort Worth, Texas. And there is a young Scott miss named Waverly, who is now eight years old and takes after her parents.

But to get Mr. Scott settled in his home in the Hollywood hills, and up to date, perhaps a little backtracking is in order at this point.

Scott was born in Austin, Texas, Feb. 21, 1914, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Z. T. Scott. He attended the public schools of his home city, but was more interested in collecting dogs. Zack loved dogs—still does. (He has a champion white French poodle now named Jingo, given him by Jane Wyatt and fondly referred to by Zack as "Dreamy.") Fact is, as a kid he had more dogs than most kids have marbles. And they were all foundlings, except one—a Boston Bull named Tuffy, the only dog he ever bought.

When Zack was four years old, he appeared as Charlie Chaplin in a neighborhood vaudeville. (Chaplin was then his hero.) This little acting stint started something ticking inside the youthful Scott that burst like a timebomb when he was exactly 14. He informed his parents that he was going to be an actor.

Fond parents, however, decided he was a little too young to go on the stage, and convinced him that an education wasn't anything he couldn't tell his children about. Zack, himself, found that the University—in which he enrolled, in due time—had a Curtain Club, and on that stage he strutted in parts ranging from juveniles to old men.

Moreover, it was in college that he met "the girl who had everything." (That's probably why he stole Elaine Anderson away from his best friend. What guy wouldn't?)

Nevertheless, after three years of college, Scott set off for New Orleans and hopped a cotton freighter bound for Hull, England, there to set the world on fire, or at least an English stage.

The latter, Zack did by dint of being a dogged Texan, getting up in an English part in four days, and claiming to be an Australian. His first role was juvenile lead in "The Outsider." And, as he says, "I was type cast!"

Being a Texan, he got his man—one Gerrard Neville, of the English Repertory Company, who could dish out parts as easily as the Government collects a withholding tax.

He played on the British stage for a year and a half. But between plays, Zack was having himself a fine time seeing Germany, France, Belgium, Switzerland, etc. Until he was grabbed off a train at Innsbruck—skiis and all—by a couple of S.S. men on the German side of the Italian frontier who thought it would be a pious idea for him to sit in his hotel until notified by the German police. (It seems that a chap by the name of Dolfuss had been assassinated.)

It was plain these Gestapo embryos had never met up with a Texan: before the Nazis could say "Heil Hitler," Zach was flying over the Alps, absorbed in the beauty of the lovely green valleys below.

The incident, however, had a slightly sobering effect, and Zack found himself returning to the good old U.S.A. and the girl in Texas who had the reins on his heart.

On his 21st birthday, he married Miss Anderson, in Dallas. The young couple, very much in love and both career-minded toward acting, set out forthwith for New York.

"You know what?" asks Zack, and immediately answers his own query. "We didn't take anyone or anything by storm but ourselves. For a year we were engaged in the non-lucrative profession of proving we could live on love. The theatre went its merry way, unmindful of the Scott dream-children."

So back to Texas they went. Zack reentered the University, from which he graduated in 1938. Between studies, he sandwiched in directing an Austin little theatre, some oil rigging, laboratory work in a refining company, and driving for his physician-father on night calls—all fairly remunerative occupations.

Then, with money in their jeans, the young Zachary Scotts hit New York again, ready to take another crack at the stage. But once more the aspiring thespians were set back on their resilient heels. After a year and a half of Broadway's cold shoulder, they decided that a pair of well-soled shoes looked better to them than a part in a play.

"So Elaine gave up her acting ambitions," says Zack, "and subsequently started as assistant stage manager and office helper with the Theatre Guild. I thought the two of us could horn in on the job, but she insisted that one of us had to be an actor. I was elected."

Zack did summer stock for a couple of years. Elaine paid the grocery bills. And they were more in love with each other than ever.

"Elaine is far from bitter about that turn of events," Zack comments, "because she adored stage managing. And as you know, she eventually stage-managed 'Oklahoma' and wound up being one of the top two in her field."

Zack himself graduated from summer stock after three years, and landed a part on Broadway in the "Circle of Chalk." In 1942, he was prominently cast in "The Damask Cheek," which closed suddenly because of the illness of Flora Robson. Over the week-end, he found a part in "This Rock," starring Billie Burke, and this flopped. But the fabulous Texan was now on the move and in the groove. Next he landed the male lead in "Those Endearing Young Charms." The play was a hit. Scott was a hit. And a guy in the audience, name of Jack L. Warner, was no dope. He immediately signed Zack to a Warner contract.

The Zach Scotts, at lunch in Warner's famous Green Room. He's in "Mildred Pierce."

Presto! Mr. Zachary Scott was a screen actor in Hollywood and hotter'n a depot stove!

And at home with Elaine, who is a whizz with a needle and equally as good with a pair of reins; and Waverly, who runs her shoes down at the heels and falls off her bike like any other kid—Scott's life is complete.

The Scotts love to entertain—informally, with a few guests. "Because," says Zack, "we not only like intimate gatherings best, but our home is too small for anything else."

Zack is tremendously loyal to his friends. His closest are the Gregory Pecks and the William Princes—and Beulah Bondi, whom he practically carries around on a pillow, and about whom Elaine says, "She's the only other woman I worry about."

At home Zack can cook to his heart's content. But a far cry from ranch chow is his "a deux" dinner, the mention of which is Elaine's cue to send Waverly off for the evening with the housekeeper. It starts off with a glorified salad—a slice of melba toast, a slice of tomato, a big gob of mashed avocado, a big gob of cottage cheese topped off with mayonnaise: all on a lettuce leaf. Then comes a squab stuffed with wild rice (which he must get from Frank Morgan, who has two sacks stashed away) and almonds, augmented with French string beans. Last—and get this—chocolate ice cream with a spoonful of creme de menthe over it. And demi tasse.

Zack loves to dance, especially the square dance. He is an avid gin rummy and blackjack player. He gets a kick out of listening to opera, but collects Charles Trenet records like "Grandfather, You've Forgotten Your Horse." His favorite color is green, but he never wears it. He dislikes people with pretenses, but finds that Hollywood has fewer of such than he expected.

And, if you're not a glamour goon, take heart. Zack says that he sees so much perfection in Hollywood that he begins to miss freckles, a crooked tooth, or eyebrows that stop a little short. "Such things," he avers, "helps you create a personality."

SYLVIA SIDNEY

"I'd get so I just couldn't take any more of it," she recalls. "It got me down mentally, always being on the wrong side of the tracks or the law, always fighting something or somebody, dirty gangsters, dirty politics, the dirty rich. Then I had to wear those awful clothes, with my hair either stringy or in buns. I played slaveys and weeping widows and inmates of women's prisons, and in one picture, my entire wardrobe consisted of a prison uniform which I wore for ten straight weeks. Well, you know what that would do to any woman—the same dress, eight hours a day, every day for ten weeks. You shudder to look in the mirror, and you feel so bedraggled you get so you don't even want to take a bath!"

Sylvia talks about these harrowing memories now with giggles and twinkling eyes.

It might even surprise you to hear that she loves to do comedy, though she'd rather do it on the stage than on the screen, because she loves to hear the laughter of the audience.

"I get positively drunk on laughter," she says. "I used to stay in the wings off-stage and just gurgle over it. When you work on a sound stage you miss that. There's something sort of weird and chilling about playing a funny scene and hearing no response, or at best, only a faint giggle here and there from the crew. It scares me.

"I did play in three comedies on the screen," she says, "but that did no good against that long list of tear jerkers. I was trapped. What really hurt was that whenever a good part came up in one of the more glamorous opuses, and my name was mentioned for it, somebody would always say, 'Oh, Sidney would be good—but she can't wear clothes!'"

Well, those wiseacres who thought Sylvia couldn't wear clothes are going to have another think coming when they see her in "Blood on the Sun" with Jimmy Cagney. She plays a beautiful and seductive Eurasian girl in this story (which takes place in Japan about 1929) and get herself involved in some very fancy spy and/or counterspy work which will have you guessing. In the course of her duties, she pals around with people like Premier Baron Giichi Tanaka, General Tojo, and Admiral Yamamoto, who at that time and in that country were roosting on top of the social ladder. However you may feel about that, the old boys liked their playmates dressy, and Sylvia obliges in a wardrobe by a new designer named Michael Woulfe that will make doubting Thomases sit up and give the old wolf call, while the girls drool with envy.

Yes, Sylvia is definitely on the sexy side this time, and you can see at a glance that far from needing protection against a crool and wicked world, she can take care of herself anywhere.

Nothing pleases her more than to be complimented on her clothes. She takes the most feminine and "untragic" interest in this turn of conversation, and will exclaim delightedly, "Oh, do you think I can wear clothes?" That crack to the contrary was the unkindest cut of all, and it still rankles.

During her first years in Hollywood, Sylvia gained quite a reputation for being the stormy petrel of the town, which she admits quite frankly that she earned. "I believe a petrel is supposed to be the herald of a storm," she says. "Well, I guess I was both the herald and the storm."

Besides her constant fight to get out of drab roles, she used to fight about a great many other things, too. When asked if she thinks Hollywood has changed, or if she herself has changed, she replies with disarming frankness, "I've changed. The trouble was with me. I was too young to handle the opportunities and success that came to me, for one thing. I do think I had a legitimate right to complain about being typed, but I didn't know how to do it effectively.

"I think when you're very young, it's important to have smart people to advise you, particularly how to complain. I didn't have anyone to tell me, and I didn't know how. I'd just walk into somebody's office and go 'Yaaaah!' If I had had good advice or better judgment, I could have handled the situation better.

"The whole thing about working on either stage or screen is not to get to playing the same character year after year. All you have to do is look at actors who do it. They get that dead look in their eyes. They lose their spontaneity, get hollow inside, so that if they finally do try to branch out, they go flat.

"You can't say whose fault it is when an actor gets typed. Sometimes it's the producer's idea to hold an actor to a characterization he does particularly well, if the public likes him in it. But sometimes it's the actor's fault. Actors don't always know what's best for them.

"As for all those objections I used to have, I think if you had pinned me down, I wouldn't have been able to tell you just what was wrong. I took things too seriously, was much too intense about my work, and I just would not compromise about anything.

"I had an awful sense of insecurity because I felt such a terrific lack of ability. I was terrified that I might give a bad performance, or even do one line badly. My husband (Luther Adler) used to say, 'You can't afford not to give a bad performance now and then.' I couldn't understand this, because I believed I couldn't afford to give a bad performance.

"Now I think it's important to do it, and I often give a bad performance. Sometimes it will only be a line that's bad, or a scene; sometimes the whole performance. Even if nobody notices, or comments on it, I know it's bad, because I know inside of me how it should be and where I've missed. But that's how to learn, how to improve.

It's a little difficult to imagine Sylvia's giving a bad performance, for she's always been one of our better actresses. She developed the urge to act very young, appeared with little theatre productions in her early teens, and was soon invited to enter the Theatre Guild school, for which honor only the most talented are chosen. There she distinguished herself to the point of being selected for the lead in her graduation play, "Prunella," directed by Winthrop Ames, and two months later got her first professional engagement. The play ran only two weeks, but there were other offers in

Beginner Earns $1,819.00

"Today I received a check for $165 for a story. Another I sold for $34. The other day I counted up just how much I made previously. It amounted up to $1,620.00. Not bad for a beginner, is it?"—Mrs. L. L. Gray, 579 E. McHarg Ave., Stamford, Texas.

How do you KNOW you can't WRITE?

Have you ever tried?

Have you ever attempted even the least bit of training, under competent guidance?

Or have you been sitting back, as it is so easy to do, waiting for the day to come when you will awaken, all of a sudden, to the discovery, "I am a writer"?

If the latter course is the one of your choosing, you probably never will write. Lawyers must be law clerks. Doctors must be internes. We all know that, in our time, the egg does come before the chicken.

It is seldom that anyone becomes a writer until he (or she) has been writing for some time. That is why so many authors and writers spring up out of the newspaper business. The day-to-day necessity of writing—of gathering material about which to write—develops their talent, their insight, their background and their confidence as nothing else could.

That is why the Newspaper Institute of America bases its writing instruction on journalism—continuous writing—the training that has produced so many successful authors.

Learn to write by writing

NEWSPAPER Institute training is based on the New York Copy Desk Method. It starts and keeps you writing in your own home, on your own time. Week by week you receive actual assignments, just as if you were right at work on a great metropolitan daily. Your writing is individually corrected and constructively criticized. Thoroughly experienced, practical, active writers are responsible for this instruction. Under such sympathetic guidance, you will find that (instead of vainly trying to copy someone else's writing tricks) you are rapidly developing your own distinctive, self-flavored style—undergoing an experience that has a thrill to it and which at the same time develops in you the power to make your feelings articulate.

Many people who should be writing become awe-struck by fabulous stories about millionaire authors, and, therefore, give little thought to the $25, $50 and $100 or more that can often be earned for material that takes little time to write—stories, articles on business, local and club activities, homemaking, hobbies, decorating, etc.—things that can easily be turned out in leisure hours, and often on the impulse of the moment.

rapid succession, and the little Sidney was never long idle.

She put in a season of stock at Elitch Gardens in Denver, and from there came to Hollywood to make "Through Different Eyes." When that one was unrolled on the screen for her, Sylvia was so upset she deserted Hollywood "forever"—for the first time.

Any girl with Sylvia's ability, who has developed it through unceasing hard work and study, as she did, is bound to turn into an extremely competent actress. Add to this her sensitive face, with the Slavic cast of features (her mother was Russian, her father Rumanian) which can reflect tragedy with such beautiful and heart-breaking effect, and it's not surprising that she was frequently being paged by Hollywood and handed such heavy assignments as "An American Tragedy," "Street Scene," Pick Up," "Jennie Gerhardt," etc.

But neither is it surprising, when you meet Sylvia informally and see what a twinkly, fun-loving girl she is by nature, that she rebelled against a screen life of almost unalleviated sorrow. It was bound to have a depressing effect on her natural good spirits, quite apart from the fact that it was wrong from a professional standpoint.

It was a little over a year ago that Sylvia returned to Hollywood this last time. She wasn't thinking of herself, but of her little boy, Jody, aged five, whose delicate health she felt sure would improve in the Southern California sunshine. It did, and before they had been here many months, came Sylvia's chance to appear with Cagney in "Blood on the Sun," which she considers one of her happiest assignments.

Sylvia gets very earnest when she talks about Jimmy Cagney. "It's been a marvelous experience to work with him. I don't think I've ever met anyone who gets into his part so intensely. He positively burns with his belief in his characterization. It's almost childlike. He's so completely the person he's playing—that's why, after doing the whole picture with him, I don't feel I know Jimmy Cagney. Not personally. I only know Nick Condon, the character he plays."

As to the future, Sylvia has no fixed ideas, no marked preference for either stage or screen. "I just want to be wherever there's something interesting being done," she says. "Just so I'm busy—that's the main thing."

That may be the main thing professionally, but you can't talk to Sylvia long without realizing that the main thing personally is her son Jody, a blond little boy with a delicate, expressive elfin face who reminds you of A. A. Milne's charming sketches and poems about children. She'd rather tell you about Jody than about Sylvia any day.

When asked about herself, she gives thoughtful, honest answers to questions, but doesn't offer more. Not that she's reticent exactly; she just doesn't seem to care particularly for talking about herself, which is a nice trait in anybody.

But ask her something about Jody, and that's a different matter. She "lights up inside" and may reel off a dozen stories about him.

Adele Mara, (Rep.), star of the first bi-lingual picture, "Song of Mexico."

She likes to tell about the day Jody took a Christmas gift to his teacher. For several days previous, Sylvia, not being able to find Christmas tree ornaments, had been making little dodads out of last year's cellophane wrappings and ribbons, which Jody had watched with great interest.

When she handed him the package for his teacher, he asked what it was. Perfume, she told him. Jody's face fell.

"Oh, I don't want to give her perfume," he said. "I don't think she'd like that."

"Why not, Jody?"

"Well, I wanted to give her one of those pretty things you've been making," he said.

So Jody's teacher got the perfume plus a do-dad.

Sylvia's husband, Luther Adler, is in the east. She admits they have separated, but says she has no plans for a divorce. For the present, at least, everything is status quo. She's seen about with Fletcher Martin, the artist, and they appear to be very good friends, which is all it takes to start romantic rumors in Hollywood. But Sylvia insists she has no matrimonial plans.

Meantime, she and Jody live in a charming little house high on a hillside above Sunset Boulevard, with a magnificent view overlooking the city, and on clear days. the ocean. Birdie, a devoted servant who came out with them from New York, looks after their wants, and cares for Jody while Sylvia's working. They live graciously but simply, getting a great deal of fun out of the smallest details of daily life.

"Everything seems so much less complex now than it used to. It's all a part of growing up, I suppose. So many things have happened to change my point of view since the days when I was so unhappy here. I've learned a lot from living in New York and knowing many different kinds of people. Having a child changes your point of view, too—makes you think less about yourself. Maybe I'm changing from an introvert to an extrovert. Anyway, everything seems much more interesting. And there are people that you meet everywhere, anywhere — they're so wonderful! Saroyan said they were, and they are. I don't go all the way with Saroyan, but he's certainly right about that!"

Well, that's what the lady said, and there's one thing certain: you'd have a hard time finding a happier looking girl than "Sorrowful Sidney."

MOVIELAND GIVES A PARTY

their congratulations to all the many nice things being said to and about the guests of honor?

Well, you can take our cameraman's word for it (poor Bill Dudas, he was wishing for a shutter-box that could stutter fast like an automatic machine gun!) . . . there were forty-five celebrities on hand; fact is, many more than that!

The first to arrive was Faye Emerson; not only was she about an hour early of the scheduled tee-off time, but she was a day in advance. Telephoning Movieland's Hollywood office, she said plaintively, "I'm here at Mocambo, but nothing seems to be happening. Where is everybody?" Said Western Editor Jane Wilkie, "Getting primed for tomorrow!" (Incidentally, Faye Emerson is one of the realest girls you could possibly meet. She may have married the President's son, but she is a Marquesa of Good Manners in her own right. She has made a great many friends for herself during the past few months by her genuineness, charm, and sincerity.)

Maureen O'Hara arrived beneath a black hat with a 20-gallon brim—such a bonnet! It was lovely on Maureen, although a wag telephoned her next morning and—taking into consideration that the party was held The Night Of The Big Wind In Hollywood—asked innocently, "How did you get back from Hueneme?" (Hueneme is about 50 miles up the coast!)

Bob Walker squired Shirley Patterson, Tom Drake brought Jan Clayton, Dean Harens brought Bonita Granville, Dinah was there with her khaki husband, George Montgomery; Jinx Falkenburg (just back from her warfront tour) was making the rest of the femmes drool with the adroit use of gold dust sprinkled in her hair; Glenn Ford was passing out cigars in honor of his new son, magnificent dancer Johnny Coy (if the name is now unfamiliar to you, memorize it because he is going to be one of the biggest stars in the business—he's originally Canadian and naturally terrific) was chatting with the photogs; Charles (Gaza) Korvin was stepping up feminine blood pressure; Ann Rutherford was proving that she had just finished reading "Forever Amber" by calling out to friend and foe alike, "A pox on you."

Xavier Cugat wandered in, saying that he had heard sounds of merriment from the sidewalk before Mocambo and just wondered what was going on. He was persuaded to stay, and Hoagy Carmichael was persuaded to play. "I can't," Hoagy averred. "I'm starving." But fortified by a series of the Mocambo's drool-developing hors d'oeuvres, he managed to ascend the stand and sprinkle the air with melodic bells.

Maria Montez had been invited to bring her three delightful sisters. When she arrived with only two and was closely questioned, she said simply, "Well, my sister wanted to wear her hair in a new way, so I volunteered to cut it. She said that if it turned out badly, she couldn't come to the party. Hmm. You see?"

Sonny Tufts received and receipted for Frank Sinatra's award, in the absence of The Voice, who had just left for New Jersey after having been 4-F'ed by his Draft Board again. Everyone tried to get Sonny to sing "Accentuate the Positive," or some such chune, but he said he didn't want the Award to be transferred at such a late date. (He has been kidding the Bing ever since on the score that he, Sonny, got an Award—without ever uttering a competitive note!)

Almost-Didn't-Get-There-Guest was Jimmie Cardwell, who telephoned MOVIELAND's office late the afternoon of the party day, and confessed that he had been ripped out of bed that morning by Western Union, who sought to deliver his telegraphic invitation shortly before dawn. He said "Uhuh-mggn-lllmp-Thank you," and hung up. At about four p. m., he began to wonder what he had agreed to do. He was glad it was nothing more crucial than attending a really super party.

SCREEN STYLES

dressing many of the stage luminaries.

Motion pictures, at this time, were still in their swaddling clothes. And we daresay it might have been ditto for the stars who appeared in those pictures—for there were as yet no big studios with big budgets for engaging high-salaried designers—but no, they bought their own, from local shops. Indeed, many of the extras of those early days were known as "dress extras," and on their ability to buy and maintain a sizable wardrobe depended the number of jobs offered them. For period extravaganzas, exceptions were made; costumes were frequently rented from theatrical supply firms like Eaves and Brooks.

Checking up on the styles worn by players in those waning "teens" dubbed The War Period, we note that the Miss America of the day felt well-dressed (but how could she?) in an ankle length suit, with a jacket reaching to the end of her fingertips. She was also showing a fondness for bigger-the-better fox stoles, complete with the animal's head, claws and tail. Her hat literally "sat" on her head, without the slightest suggestion of a tilt; and when she visited her milliner it was for a "made to order" draped silk turban with aigrettes flashing upwards, or a "poke" bonnet of silk and straw, transparently lacey and ornamented with feathers or ribbon binding. With a brim? Then it was medium-wide; but hardly noticeable for the accent on crown, which was high, oh-so-high, like a coachman's.

Fur of every natural variety (and some unknown to any of Nature's little animals, though bands of mink and skunk rated most popularly) was used as dress trimming, even on the sheerest of afternoon frocks and evening gowns. Silk was still obtainable in those days—in spite of the war—and there was a plentiful use of taffeta, georgette crêpe and crêpe de chine; with lace and passementerie for dinner dress adornment.

Toward the end of the period, came the long tunic and the hobble skirt.

With the early twenties, Paris came back into its own. Silk and woolen industries began to thrive, and the shrewd and knowing French couturiers, busy as before preparing seasonal showings for their wealthy, style-conscious European and American customers, had just begun to cast their eyes covetously in the direction of a new market—American ready-to-wear. These collections, sponsored by a few of the familiar French "big names," have the added advantage of showing the ingenuity of several bright newcomers to the field—names which have since become giants in the dress industry; Patou, Lelong, Chanel, Vionnet, and Molyneux. And their "originals" started to appear in the French salons of our better American department stores, bought in limited quantities for those wealthy enough to afford them.

There was a working fashion press established in Paris and the wires and big newspapers carried full accounts of dynamic fashion changes. Lelong, with his "kinetic" line (meaning fluid movement) created quite a stir, for it was the first departure from the static straight-line skirt. Retaining the pencil-slim back, Lelong's new dress had added fullness with flowing inserts in the front of the skirt. And meanwhile other designers, not to be outdone, offered equally original ideas, all smart and revolutionary, until slowly but surely the short skirt reached such ridiculous (we think now) heights that it became a thing of laughter instead of beauty. And while skirts ascended, waistlines descended—so that the original "boyish" mode became a "little girl" fashion.

But while Paris was struggling with the problem of skirt lengths, what was happening to fashion in Hollywood?

During the early twenties, through the introduction of exotic fashions designed especially for their highest salaried stars, the movies became style-conscious. Quantity, however, rather than quality, was the order of the day.

When Hollywood became the established movie center, it was "the call to the West" for several American artists and designers. They had all had their initial training in Paris; but New York and Paris were too far away, and the first rebellion against organized fashion had begun.

The movies were attracting all the American beauties. (Fox was signing contracts with girls like Dorothy Mackaill and Billie Dove, which should set the time in your memory, if you can remember.) The great stress on classic beauty was undoubtedly due to the general use of the close-up in silent romantic scenes. With the advent of the "flapper," obesity on the screen (even plumpness, if it showed) became a social crime, and best-friends and experts all recommended their favorite diets, in the interests of the "show-girl" figure for the screen lovelies—which was a must. The girl who was blessed with a slim waist and curves in the right spots naturally rebelled against the sack-line dress and the cloche that fell almost to her eyes. Even the flaming youth girls, with their boyishly bobbed hair (of which Madge Bellamy, in "Sandy," was a shining example), wanted to show off their trim figures. Short skirts passed muster, they admitted, for they showed their shapely thighs and trim ankles—but fashion be hanged if they weren't going to show their waistlines, too!

So the studio dressmakers took a tip from the stars' private preferences, and made the screen clothes with waistlines. (A first "declaration of independence" from what Paris dictated, and don't think it didn't bring a storm of criticism from visiting Parisian couturiers!)

It was the time of Lois Moran (who'd collected laurels as the child in the first "Stella Dallas"), and dark-eyed charmers the likes o' Olive Borden, and then Janet Gaynor—when Janet drew critical acclaim for her performance in "Sunrise," and was awarded the coveted role of Diane in the first screen version of "Seventh Heaven," with Charlie Farrell as her

. . . Helps Prevent Brittle Ends From Breaking Off!

HERE IS THRILLING NEW HOPE for millions who want their dry, lusterless, unruly, brittle and breaking off hair more lovely ... longer. The Juelene SYSTEM has helped men and women all over the nation to find new happiness and confidence in more beautiful, healthy appearing hair. Yes, hair may get longer—the scalp and hair condition being otherwise normal — if the breaking-off process of dry, brittle ends can be retarded. That's why Juelene is such a natural way to help your hair gain its normal beauty. This wonderful SYSTEM helps relieve hair dryness that is caused by lack of natural oils. It helps soften harsh, brittle ends, thus giving your hair a chance to get longer once the breaking-off and the splitting ends have been curbed. If your hair is dry, rough and hard to keep neat, try the easy Juelene SYSTEM for just 7 days. See if Juelene's tendency to soften harsh, difficult-to-manage hair can help yours to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before—in just one short week! You may win compliments from both men and women who admire and envy your hair in its new lovely beauty.

Thrilling New Hair "Make-Up" adds sparkling highlights ...lustrous color effects

"She's almost attractive" too often describes the girl whose make-up stops at her hairline ... who depends on a shampoo alone to reveal the true beauty and brightness of her hair. For your hair — like your face — needs a note of color to look its loveliest!

No matter what color hair you have, you can give it fresh sparkle and achieve a smart new color effect with Marchand's Make-Up Hair Rinse! You can enrich the natural hair color ...give it a "warmer" tone or a "cooler" hue... even blend little gray streaks in with the original shade! A color chart on the back of the package shows which of the 12 Marchand shades will give the effect you desire.

After your shampoo, dissolve a package of Marchand's Rinse in warm water and brush or pour it through your hair. Gone is all soap film! Your hair is glorious with shining new color ... softer and more manageable, too!

Marchand's Rinse goes on and washes off as easily as facial make-up. Not a bleach — not a permanent dye — it's absolutely harmless.

leading man. For several years after this memorable picture was released, the team of Gaynor and Farrell was the best box-office bet in the country. Today, Janet is the wife of Adrian, one of Hollywood's foremost designers —which makes it no accident that she's also known as "one of Hollywood's best-dressed women."

By the time the late twenties had rolled around, Hollywood's insistence upon glamorizing the feminine figure was having its influence on the world of fashion, still emanating from Paris. Several of the highly paid stars of the day made periodic trips to Paris and brought back expensive French wardrobes. Some of these wardrobes found their way, inevitably, to the screen. And with the increasing popularity of the American motion picture abroad, the French couturiers recognized Hollywood pictures as a new advertising medium, a showcase for displaying their clothes to potential customers all over the world. And consequently, they started to take a tip from the simple, attractive clothes which younger stars were flaunting in defiance of organized style.

Moreover, American manufacturers, too, began to credit Hollywood with having an influence on fashion. With the result that famous designers both in Paris and New York were soon planning a moulded hipline, as a forerunner to a raised waistline, and then began to lengthen evening dresses with dipping panels at the sides of the skirt, or in peacock fashion, to the rear.

If the late twenties were devoid of beauty of line, there was no lack for rich materials and ornamentation. Lamés and brocades were used extensively for evening wraps and dresses; wraps were lavishly trimmed with fur and feathers. Those who couldn't afford ermine found white rabbit, specially treated, a fine substitute, and just as flattering. Sequins, crystals, and simulated jewels fairly encrusted the knee-length chiffon and tulle evening gowns. And naturally these rich materials, with all their glitter, having important photographic value, found their way to the screen.

With the advent of sound, in the early thirties, sophisticated drama and musicals came into vogue. The former called for smart attire, the latter for novelty and originality in costuming. It was at this time that the Studio Designing Departments—a head designer with a corps of assistants—came into being. From Paris and London came several well-known designers; from the New York theatre and Seventh Avenue, came others. One of the first musicals to show a blending of this designing genius was "Fox Movietone Follies," released in 1929, featuring Sue Carol, Dixie Lee, Sharon Lynn and Lola Lane.

Many of the stylesetters who created the screen fashions during the eventful thirties have since opened their own fashion salons, where they turn out sports clothes, tailleurs and evening clothes that vie with the French couturiers for being "the first and the best." In the annals of modern fashion there will always be a niche for inspired designers like Rene Hubert, Travis Benton, Bonnie Cashin, Yvonne Wood, Russell Patterson, Charles LeMaire, Gwen Wakeling, Royer, Rita Kaufman, Herschel, Dolly Tree, Sophie Wachner and Bernard Newman—men and women who have created some of the beautiful daytime and evening dresses and period costumes for such pictures as "George White's Scandals," "Bottoms Up," "Stand Up and Cheer," "Metropolitan." "One in a Million," "Wings of the Morning," "Second Honeymoon," "Lillian Russell," "My Gal Sal," "Coney Island," "Wilson"—and now, "Diamond Horseshoe."

Today, more than ever, the American designer has had to show a lot of ingenuity, working under wartime handicaps—with governmental regulations restricting the amount of yardage used, with substitutes for old-time fabrics which were formerly used with no thought of economy. Yet they've produced gowns and costumes as colorful and attractive as ever.

Since the early thirties, fashion has become truly universal in scope. It is difficult to analyze the subtle changes which have taken place. Skirts are a little shorter today than they were then; the almost over-padded shoulder which developed to be a caricature of the original Schiaparelli tailleur has been appropriately modified. Today's conception of fashion is to select from the vast number of existing designs and to discard all those not best-suited to the wearer's looks and personality, with accent on figure.

Naturally, we can expect a further revolution when World War II comes to an end. We will have a greater wealth of fabrics to draw upon, and no O.P.A. regulations will be necessary then to keep skirt lengths of one pattern. Of one thing you can be sure, however: the designing genius of Hollywood and New York will continue to be an expandingly influential one: because these designers of today are young, abreast with the times and international in thought and in approach. Their ideas will reflect the world of tomorrow, at the same time drawing from the experience of today and yesterday for the inspiration so necessary to true creative talent. A Nettie Rosenstein, who could look back to the times of "Jane Eyre" and "Wilson," and create such thoroughly modern collections based on costumes shown in those pictures, is a fine example of this thoroughness of designing. A Celia Chapman, who was inspired by the motion picture costumes of "Pin Up Girl" and "Diamond Horseshoe" to create a wearable, charming modern line is another . . . and there are still others; designers creating clothes to be worn by Miss Modern America.

THE END

Hollywood's "Look of the Month"; it's Toledo-born Dusty Anderson, Columbia.

WORDS OF MUSIC

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

Decca:

Records may come and records may go, but we always have records by Crosby. This month there are four sides by Bing. The first two, with John Scott Trotter's orchestra, are "More and More" and "Strange Music." On the second coupling, Bing has the assistance of Ethel Smith at the organ, the Ken Darby singers, and the music of Victor Young. It's "Just A Prayer Away" and "My Mother's Waltz."

Guy Lombardo also does double duty this month. Number one is "Poor Little Rhode Island" and "Oh! Moytle," both novelty tunes, and number two is "I Want A Bunny For Easter" and "Easter Sunday On The Prairie."

Billie Holiday, a favorite singer among musicians, has a terrific new disc. It's "Lover Man," and "That Ole Devil Called Love." The latter tune was written especially for her by the composers of "Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall."

The Delta Rhythm Boys, one of the best of the singing groups, are accompanied by the Gulf Coast Five on "Gee, Baby, Ain't I Good Tò You" and "Is There Somebody Else?"

In the jive department, here's Jimmie Lunceford's orchestra doing "I'm Gonna See My Baby" and "That Someone Must Be You."

Another jive gentleman, Louis Armstrong, has two swell sides in "I Wonder" and "Jodie Man." Louis does both vocals in his usual wonderful style, and "I Wonder" has some of that good Armstrong trumpet.

Fred Astaire is heard on wax for the first time in ages on "This Heart Of Mine," from his picture, "Ziegfeld Follies" and "If Swing Goes, I Go Too," which Fred wrote himself.

Mel Torme (pronounced Tormay) and his Mel-Tones, a fine vocal group, are a new addition to Decca's list of artists. Their first effort is a good one—"Stranger in Town" and "You've Laughed At Me For The Last Time." Keep your eye on Mel. He's only nineteen, and a most talented lad. He got his start as a drummer-singer-arranger with the old Chico Marx band and is now heard regularly on the Fitch Bandwagon air show.

Columbia:

Frank Sinatra has recorded two of the tunes from his M-G-M picture, "Anchors Aweigh." They are "I Begged Her" and "What Makes The Sunset?" Axel Stordahl's orchestra and arrangements as usual. Now, girls, don't knock each other down trying to be the first one at the music counter.

The big Calypso hit, "Rum and Coca-Cola" is done by Abe Lyman's orchestra, with a vocal by Rose Blane (Mrs. Lyman). The reverse side is "Since You."

Here's Harry James with "Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry," sung by Kitty Kallen, and "I Don't Care Who Knows It."

One of the prettiest of the new ballads is "He's Home For A Little While." Les Brown has recorded it with lyrics by Doris Day. It is backed up by "My Dreams Are Getting Better All The Time."

If you're in a Latin mood, try "Tico Tico" and "Linda Mujer" by Xavier Cugat. Cugat's new feminine vocalist, Elena Verdugo, sings the first side and Del Campo is heard on the second.

Frankie Carle, who usually plays sweet piano, is off on a boogie kick with "Carle Boogie." The back-up is "Saturday Night," sung by Phyllis Lynne.

Morton Gould has made a fine instrumental album entitled "After Dark." There are four twelve-inch records, including good tunes like "Temptation," "Dancing In The Dark," and "That Old Black Magic."

Victor:

The King Sisters' new platter is one of their best. It's "Candy" and "Saturday Night," with Buddy Cole's orchestra.

"Candy" also serves as one side of Dinah Shore's latest. On the reverse she does "He's Home For A Little While." Dinah sings this one as if it had been written for her.

Tommy Dorsey's new one is "Please Don't Say No," which he does in his picture, "Thrill Of A Romance," with a tenor vocal by Freddie Stewart, and "I Should Care," with Bonnie Lou Williams and the Sentimentalists in the lyric department. Dorsey heavily features his string section on both tunes.

Duke Ellington's latest composition, "I Ain't Got Nothin' But The Blues" is sung by Lena Horne, as only she can do this type of thing. It is coupled with the oldie, "As Long As I Live." Lena is on a theatre tour again, and was a sensation at the Capitol Theatre in New York.

Artie Shaw has two fine instrumentals with "I'll Never Be The Same" and "'S Wonderful." There's plenty of the Shaw clarinet on both sides.

If you're interested in the evolution of jazz, you'll want Victor's educational jazz series. There are six albums in all, with the following artists and bands represented: McKinley's Cotton Pickers, Jelly Roll Morton, The Quintet of the Hot Club of France, Louis Armstrong, Lionel Hampton, and the Benny Goodman Trio and Quartet. Many of the numbers in these albums are collector's items.

Capitol:

Betty Hutton's second record is a worthy sequel to her sensational "Rocking Horse" and "It Had To Be You." It's "Blue Skies" and "Stuff Like That There."

Here's an album called "Dennis Day Sings." It was recorded before Dennis went into the navy and contains eight ballads, including "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes" and "When Day Is Done."

That double barrelled baritone, Andy Russell is present and accounted for with "Don't Love Me" and "Negra Consentida" (My Pet Brunette). He sings the latter number both in English and Spanish. "Don't Love Me" is a new ballad by the writers of "I Don't Want To Set

JAM NOTES:

Benny Goodman is leaving the hit show, "Seven Lively Arts," and is planning to reorganize his big band. He will play the Paramount Theatre and possibly go out on the road. . . . Raymond Scott may replace Benny in the show. . . Jo Stafford is pleased as punch over her night club success in New York. It was her first try in this field. She will probably follow Goodman into the Paramount. . . Bob Haymes is set for the lead in Columbia's "Blonde From Brooklyn," which will be a romantic comedy. Though the picture isn't a musical, Bob will sing four songs. . . Jean Tighe, who is heard on the Guy Lombardo airshow over the Blue Network, has won her wings and is now a member of the Civilian Air Patrol. . . Tommy Dorsey has been having male vocalist trouble again. When Bob Allen left the band a few months ago, Tommy hired tenor Freddie Stewart. Hal Winters took Stewart's place for a short time and was succeeded by Frank De Vito. Then Billy Usher joined the band. Who's next? . . . Bonnie Lou Williams, the Dorsey feminine singer, was married recently to Walter Benson, trombonist with the band, and T.D. was the best man. A few days after the wedding, Walter was inducted into the army . . . Tommy reopened the 400 Club in New York, which will feature name bands from now on. . . Dick Brown has been tested by Warner Brothers in the East in view to a film contract. . . . Kate Smith became a member of the Red Cross "Gallon Club" when she donated her eighth pint of blood. . . . Woody Herman and Decca Records have come to the parting of the ways. In the future Woody will record for Columbia exclusively. . . Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is talking about making a picture called "The Lombardos." The film would be the life story of Guy and his musical family. . . . Lionel Hampton is going to appear at Carnegie Hall in April with the Philharmonic orchestra. That should be some jazz concert! . . . Marion Hutton is being considered for an important role in the forthcoming Warner Bros. film, "The Life of Cole Porter". . . I spied Helen O'Connell at Jimmy Dorsey's Pennsylvania Hotel opening and she looked terrific. But Helen is contented with the domestic life and is not returning to singing, which is bad news for her fans. . . Gil Rodin and Ray Bauduc, who were with the old Bob Crosby orchestra are both out of the army and have organized a new band together. . . The King Cole Trio have been signed for the "Stork Club" picture at Paramount at a reported $12,000 salary for two weeks work. . . . Gene Krupa will have a spot in the Harry James-Dick Haymes starrer, "Kitten On The Keys" . . .

So long for now, playmates. If you have any musical puzzlers, send them along and I'll do my best to answer you. But remember, not too many questions, and be sure to enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Just mail to Jill Warren, MOVIELAND MAGAZINE, 1476 Broadway, New York City 18, New York.

suggested that Dietrich had done more than she to make women's pants popular. "Oh, I wore pants long before she did," said Katharine. "It's a terrible disease, pants. Actually, I think people stare at me in a dress, but I suppose they stare just as much in pants." For final touches, the column disclosed that Miss Hepburn has freckles all over, even on her tummy.

A Wilson essay on Joan Fontaine revealed that David P. Lewis of International Pictures had kicked Miss Fontaine "square on her derrière" for tricking him into buying her $575 worth of hats after "Frenchman's Creek" had been completed.

Wilson's wordage that has captivated his readers, and the point of view that is the envy of journalistic onlookers, grows, not from a matching personality, but from the sheer craftsmanship of a lifelong writer accustomed to perform well on any assignment the editor might hand out. Each wisecrack, every guffaw, or the strange jive-talk of a hep musician is the product of sweat and pain and hours over the tired typewriter in the low pulse hours of early dawn, when the galloping 7 a.m. deadline of an afternoon newspaper stares him grimly in the face.

In Rockford, Ohio—population 1,100—where Wilson did his first newspapering, he hadn't the slightest idea that he was headed for a grind of three to nine night clubs a night in New York. He did set out in cold blood to be a newspaperman, starting at the age of twelve with prolific, but unpaid, contributions of local items to the Rockford Weekly Press. "In a town like that anybody who could put words down on paper was priceless to the editor," Wilson reminisces. "I enjoyed seeing the stuff in print so much that it never occurred to me to ask about getting paid. I guess the editor never thought of it either. He did let me sit around the office and read Editor and Publisher. I considered that a very great privilege. In it I gobbled up a raft of too-early knowledge of the great big wonderful newspaper world and decided that was for me."

Later he landed a job as a college sports correspondent, then a political reporting job for a news syndicate, and finally he was offered a $45-a-week rewrite job on the New York Post.

That was May, 1934. The money didn't go very far in New York. But like most aspiring reporters Earl was glad to be in the really big, big time. The work was hard and the hours long. At first he had the "lobster trick," going to work at 3:00 a.m. and staying on til 11:00, when the interesting part of the newspaper day was just unfolding. But at last he began to get out on the street and cover big city stories. The editor learned that in Columbus, Earl had covered electrocutions as part of his State House job. So he rubbed it in on him by sending him to Sing Sing to be "execution editor." Earl figures he has seen 75 to 100 executions.

The romance chapter of Wilson's life enters about here. It is in true O. Henry tradition, involving a poor boy and a poor girl and love in depressing Greenwich Village rooms. Earl had a room in an ancient walk-up flat building on Washington Square. His cubbyhole was one of seven on a long corridor. The other tenants were just colorless people he nodded to in the hall. Except for a good looking girl named Rosemary Lyons who lived at the other end. They were both lonely, and it was natural that they should dine together occasionally in Village dumps. Rosemary knew the thing was serious when Earl presented her with a sumptuous electric alarm clock one Christmas. When he left the house early mornings, he had been in the habit of setting his own alarm clock and placing it at Rosemary's door to awaken her a couple of hours later. The electric clock cost real money and soon they were married. The ceremony took place during Rosemary's lunch hour from her job as secretary to a department store executive. She went right on working as there was neither time nor money for a honeymoon.

Nowadays, the Wilson menage, in a comfortable old-fashioned apartment just above the theatrical district, consists of "Slugger," or Earl Lyons Wilson, their thirteen-months-old son, Mrs. Rosella Lyons, who is Rosemary's widowed mother, and the devoted pal of both Wilsons, and "Empress," a little white dog with a lovable disposition.

The Wilson afternoon usually progresses with Earl going out on a prearranged interview with such sterling column material as, say, Marlene Dietrich.

Not all of these people are handled in the column with what they or their press agents would consider kid gloves. Yet Earl reports he has not as yet, collected a single really mad interviewee, a libel suit, or been barred from any saloon. When he reported Carole Landis to be bow-legged, she greeted him enthusiastically in a night club lobby and hiked up her skirts to show that the latter rumor was true. When he said Lady Mendl stood on her head to clear her brain, she loved it.

Wilson has developed to a high degree one of the most vicious weapons available to a trained reporter. That is to let the victim hang himself with his own words. He attributes

I HATE
GRAY HAIR!

Of Course you do! You know tell-tale gray hair kills romance, that it can cause a hundred little heartbreaks, and yet for years you have hesitated to do anything about it! Has fear held you back—fear of dangerous dyes, fear that it is too difficult, that people will know your hair has been dyed? These fears are so needless! Today you can buy at your drug or department store a hair coloring preparation called Mary T. Goldman's. Pronounced positively harmless by competent medical authorities (no skin test needed), and sold on a money-back guarantee, Mary T. John Garfield and Geraldine Fitzgerald chat with Producer Mark Hellinger, only recently returned to the Warner lot after an overseas trip. (He was a Hearst war correspondent.)

the original advice on this to his editor who said, "Play it strictly dead pan." That's exactly what Wilson does. Instead of being the smooth sophisticated columnist who knows all the answers and is tired of repeating them, he is wide-eyed in wonder at the people he meets and the wonderful places he is allowed to go on his "Booze Beat."

There are some with whom it will add greatly to Wilson's prestige to know that he has actually and in person interviewed Greta Garbo. Twice, for that matter. For the record, no other reporter in either New York or Hollywood has succeeded in doing this even once since Gee-Gee entered the "wawnt to be alawn" stage of her career.

Quixotically journalistic as always, Earl laid siege to the Garbo by posting himself outside the Ritz Towers where she was staying. Such tactics, where anyone less than a beautiful husband murderess is concerned, are definitely below the social standards of top New York reporters. But Earl stuck it out on the sidewalk for three days running, because Garbo didn't leave her room for the first two. By that time, even the autograph fans had given up. Imagine the pitter-pat of the Wilson heart when the great Garbo actually emerged and teetered on the Park Avenue curbstone waiting for a break in the traffic. As Earl put it in a breathlessly sardonic column: "I upped to her and took her arm. Yes, simple little ME touched Garbo—TWICE! I took her arm, oh so protectively as we crossed the street. When our little romance was over (Garbo wouldn't talk for publication) she shook hands. True, her hand had a glove on it. But her hand touched my hand! Pardon me, while I look at my hand. It looks the same but it isn't."

What Earl didn't put in the column was the fact that Garbo seemed a bit clairvoyant about him. As they crossed the street (she was striding so fast that Earl was dog trotting to keep up) she turned to him and said: "You stay up all night. You have that look. Yes, you stay up all night finding out things about people. What for? WHAT FOR?" Earl didn't remember to answer it was to make a living.

There was a second "interview" with Garbo. It, too, produced a Wilson column. This time he trapped Gee-Gee at the Ruban Bleu. The resulting report went like this in next day's paper:

"Miss Gee-Gee Garbo astonished me this morning by violating a sacred rule of polite New York Saloon Society.

"Gee-Gee was around town without a male escort. Most women would rather be shot. Gee-Gee sat in the Ruban Bleu as late as 2:30 a.m. without a gent—indeed, in the company of another female! Being practically the social dictator of the Booze Who, I did the only decent thing—I rushed right over to volunteer to be her escort for the rest of the evening, or rather, morning.

"Miss Garbo and I are on speaking terms and the following brilliant dialogue scintillated between us:

"ME: Good evening, Miss Garbo.

"Garbo: ———— (That denotes silence.)

"ME: Miss Garbo, I'm the reporter who did that brilliant interview with you some weeks ago, loping along Madison and Fifth Avenue with you.

"GARBO: (Staring and throwing back her yaller hair.) For Heaven's sake!

"ME: Didn't you like it?

"GARBO: ————.

"ME: (Pleadingly) Say you did.

"GARBO: That's a seekret! Waiter! The check! We're going. (Cold stares, loud whispering to the other woman.)

"I'd cunningly slid in at the next table, and when Gee-Gee started putting on her beaver coat and sou'wester, I quickly helped her, as I am widely known as being the soul of chivalry and good breeding at all times. Miss Garbo didn't even thank me. But I got to touch her, bringing to three the total of times I've touched Gee-Gee. According to the latest dope, whose name cannot be revealed (that gag I stole from the Hollywood Reporter), three times is a new high, and this makes me the champion Garbo-toucher at my weight, 168 pounds. As Gee-Gee started downstairs, I tailed her, and a brilliant cross-fire between us continued to scintillate at minus 700 candlepower."

It's a temptation to go on quoting Earl. But to-morrow's paper is as likely as not to contain a newer and more priceless Wilsonism in "It Happened Last Night."

THE END

YVONNE DECARLO

buying, owning and being able to weather the huge repair bills on your first car, a sleek, gray and black Lincoln Zephyr.

Your most sheepish admission is that you talk violently and endlessly in your sleep after a hard day's work. You wear earrings when most other women would wear hats. You have a long-standing and unalterable preference for violets, and any flower that conveys a message—such as yellow, white and red roses. You prefer going to the opera to any other form of entertainment.

You will, at the mere mention of the word beautiful, tell anyone who cares to listen that three of the most beautiful women in the world are right here in Hollywood: Hedy Lamarr, Merle Oberon and Linda Darnell. You are even more precise when it comes to the men because you have only picked one; and your idea of the handsomest man in the world is not an actor, but Lord Louis Mountbatten.

You have exquisite taste in food and clothes and living quarters, and confess to a leaning towards the old brownstone houses of New York, the rarer old-English type of residences in California, and the pink-roofed houses of Bermuda. Your finger nails are always painted fuchsia-red.

You can't, away from your heavy studio chores, see too much of actresses Susanna Foster and Helen Walker, and your devoted, untiring mother, Marie DeCarlo Middleton.

When you like anyone a lot your thoughts go out to them from dawn to dusk—with time off, of course, to dream. You have never been officially and truly engaged to anyone. You have a 32" waist, a 36" bust, 7½" ankles, and your wrist measures 5¾".

You are the proud possessor of a chocolate-red toy Pomeranian you call Jolie Coeur, and whose one bad habit is eavesdropping on your most intimate phone conversations. You are an expert horsewoman, you love to ride alone, and your biggest thrill is bringing your horse to a stop on a high hill overlooking the surrounding California townships.

Your favorite foods are mixed salads for lunch, steak or fried chicken for dinner, and in-between you go for chocolate sundaes and liquorice drops.

You think that one of the most beautiful sights in the world is sunlight streaming through a stained-glass window.

You are romantically free at the moment, but your real love is a deep and—not dark—but very gay secret. You count among your truest friends actress Marjorie Rambeau, and the role you would like to play most is Diana in "The Robe."

You are Yvonne DeCarlo, grateful and gracious exponent of the right do's and don't of any young, striving and rising actress. You are also a girl with a mind very much of your own, and the glowing and devoted enthusiasm you have for the motion picture industry as a whole should give you much of what you want out of a career and, incidentally, out of life itself.

PRESTON FOSTER

Hollywood. As he got into one entrance of the Canyon, he found the road had been washed out. So he tried another way. It was the same story. In the end, he had to go clear around the mountain and come down from behind the ranch.

There are many stories about Twin Oaks, but probably the most amusing is Neeley's shopping tour for cattle, when the Fosters first took over.

Neeley is a sharp trader—let's admit that, right off. He went to see Bob Burns, who also is no slouch at bargaining. Neeley, of course, didn't tell Bob that the cattle were for Pres. Bob sort of felt sorry for Neeley, so he gave him a break on the first deal. Each time he returned, Bob gave him another break. Finally, Burns got suspicious.

"Say, do you have a radio show," he asked Neeley one day.

"No, why?" Neeley answered.

"Well, then how in h--- do you get enough money to buy all this stock?"

Bob didn't find out until just recently that the cattle were for Pres. And what a razzing he's had since!

You should know by now that Pres Foster doesn't lead the life of a gentleman farmer. When he's on the ranch, he's busy all the time. In fact, a 12-hour working day is nothing for him. And he really works!

But he's a complex sort of a guy. You realize that when you see him knock off ranch work at the end of a day, go into the house and head straight for the playroom. Guess that's what you'd call it—it's a long room, with a billiard table, a poker set-up and a bar; the walls are decorated with testimonials of his prowess as a hunter and fisherman—a deer's head, a couple of pheasants, three ducks, a sword fish, a rattlesnake (killed, by the way, on his front lawn in Beverly Hills). There's a super projection machine, too; he runs movies for his friends and help almost every evening.

But to get back to Foster's complexities. When he walks into this room, he switches characters, becomes a different person. I know. I saw it happen. After spending most of the day tending his stock, he came in, dressed in his cowboy clothes, and went over to the piano. Carelessly, he strummed a few chords, then swept into a symphony he has written. It was really beautiful—and that's no press agent's release! Then he changed to a ballad, and began to sing. Well, he would be the last to say so, but—so help me—the guy is good!

But those cowboy duds he wears—the zowy shirts, and the ten gallon hats. He has over fifty of those dizzy but beautiful shirts. I saw them, all lined up neat and tidy-like in the big closet in his room.

"This is the only place on the ranch where Hollywood still hangs on," Pres pointed out. "Take a gander at this room of mine. If this isn't an actor's room—!"

But it wasn't—not a typical actor's room. It wasn't plush and elegant. In fact, the only concession to the Hollywood scene that I could see were a couple of hidden lights that popped out of nowhere to light the bed for night reading. The rest? Just a real he-man's hangout. Nothing fussy here. Just like Pres—natural, forthright, without any trimmings.

I got the idea, visiting Twin Oaks, that it's just like Pres says—it wasn't bought as a show place or as an occasional mood relaxer. It was bought to be lived in—permanently. And what a job of living can be done there!

Pres bought the ranch with only one misgiving. He wasn't sure how it would suit his wife, Trudy. Funny thing, though... she took one look, her first trip up there, and started right away to make plans to re-do the house.

"We didn't move in for several months," Pres tells now, "because we had to sell our house in Beverly Hills first. To be quite honest about it, I wasn't even sure that we'd live up there permanently, since Trudy hadn't said anything about making Twin Oaks our home. Then one day on the way back to Beverly Hills, after a week-end at the ranch, Trudy said, 'Why don't we move up there?'

"That was all I was waiting to hear."

And difficult as the adjustment must have been, for a woman giving up the life she was accustomed to, there was little or no indication, until the notices in the newspapers just a few months ago, that the ranch-life experiment wasn't going to work out just about perfect. But the loneliness—that must have been the trouble. Mrs. Foster was alone up there so much of the time; Pres had to stay in town, when he was making a picture.

Anyway, the news is now that "the Fosters are separating"—after nineteen years.

But while Trudy may have regretted moving to Twin Oaks, Stephanie has loved it—right from the start. Stephanie is Pres' six-year-old adopted daughter, a pint-sized little piece but every inch a live-wire.

Stephanie is definitely an outdoor girl. She can ride like a cowboy. Pres spent months teaching her, and now she rides all over the ranch, on her pony.

She started to school last fall. The only school near the ranch is a one-room affair with only one teacher. And that's where Stephanie went.

"I think it'll do Stevie a lot of good to go to a real country school," Pres said at the time. "She'll learn the three R's there, for one thing, and that's important."

Stephanie has several playmates; children who live at Twin Oaks. She has already attracted the special attention of one little boy—Billy, who is the cook's son. Billy has even said he wants to marry Stephanie. But for a rather unromantic reason—he adores Pres, and wants to be able to say he has a movie star for a father-in-law. He may also be influenced by the fact that Pres is a member of a mountain posse set up by Sheriff Biscaluiz in Los Angeles county. Pres is on call day and night, in case there's any trouble in the mountains. And to Billy, that makes him a sort of Superman with a horse.

Actually, though, he's a land-lover. "It's a corny line, maybe," he said to me one day, "but when I say, 'This Land is Mine,' I get a lift I can scarcely explain. I remember the almost unbearable pride I felt, the day I paid off the mortgage. I wanted to shout, or something.

"This is it, I said to myself then... and that's how it is. I can go into Hollywood and make pictures, I can travel when I want to, after the war; I can do a lot of things that are pleasant, profitable, interesting. But it's only here—at Twin Oaks—that I'm really at home."

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

Mexican straw to British Chelsea) must not be moved, veiled, nor disposed of. Her bridles, hanging from the bed posts, should not be relegated to closets.

Said the decorator, "Perhaps we'd better postpone our alterations until Miss Taylor's taste has become more stabilized."

Said Elizabeth with a straight face, "Isn't that the trouble now?"

ROUND TWO:

If you are faithful to this column, it may be that you will remember an item that appeared in "Inside Hollywood" two months ago. This item had to do with the experience of Betty Grable in an eastern hotel. Because this writer was not furnished with the exact location (Miss Grable herself didn't remember where the incident occurred when she told me about the affair), the name of the town was not given.

The issue had not been on the stands for many days before your columnist began to dodge like Alice In Wonderland before a shower of cards. Mr. Henry W. Clune, syndicated columnist in the ROCHESTER DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE, revealed that Rochester, New York, was presumed to be the city in question, and most energetically gave his version of l'affaire Grable. He sent me a copy of his column. So did dozens of his readers. The postman on my beat, an observant gentleman, said kiddingly one morning, "I notice that your boy friend has been transferred to Rochester and he sure is keeping the postal service in funds." I said—er—yes, that was it—er—approximately.

But don't misunderstand me: the letters were not, for the most part, love letters. Most of them were pretty mad because I had referred to Rochester as a "small town." MAY I HEREBY APOLOGIZE TO ALL RESIDENTS OF ROCHESTER FOR ANY SLIGHT, HOWEVER UNINTENDED, THAT MAY HAVE APPEARED TO HAVE BEEN CONTAINED IN THE REPORT? ROCHESTER IS, TO JUDGE FROM MY MAIL ALONE, A HUGE CITY FILLED WITH ARTICULATE CITIZENS WHO READ MOVIELAND FROM COVER TO COVER, THANK HEAVEN.

At present it would appear that I have developed at least three permanent friends from among my correspondents: Mr. Clune himself, who has two sons in the Pacific; a good scout named Bob Bullock, Jr., and a charming lady (whose first letter was pretty critical, but whose second was magnanimous in highest degree) named Mrs. Allan Forest.

I am sorry to say that a handful of the letters were anonymous. Naturally these were the most disagreeable and abusive because the urchin, invisible behind a high board fence, always screams the foulest language.

I want it clearly understood that, in future, all writers to this column must sign their letters. How am I going to show unsigned letters, however angry, to my editor to prove my prestige? She will think I am writing them to myself.

MEAL SPIEL:

A few months ago, in this most widely-read and respected of journals, Kevin O'Shea obliged our domestic science department by giving—in print—his recipe for Veal a la Killarney. Hardly had the issue hit the news-stands before Mr. O'Shea appeared to have become the delicatessens expert of Hollywood. A good many persons informed him that Veal a la Killarney had appeared on their tables with the success of saleable shamrocks on St. Patrick's day. And one collector of recipes offered to trade her long-kept culinary secrets for Kevin's qustatory guides. All is proceeding with the smoothness of good Hollandaise Sauce.

Betty and Bracken; it was a party given at Ciro's following Eddie's first NBC broadcast.

HERE ARE THE WORDS—GET THE AIR OUTSIDE:

When June Haver was returning, via rail, from an eastern jaunt, she grew bored with the rackachacka of the rails. The rhythm set her to thinking of the song she was to sing in "Where Do We Go From Here." So, setting pencil to paper, and getting help from a club-car military neighbor, this is the lyric she wrote:

"I HAVE A PLAN FOR MY MAN"
by
June Haver

Now you've seen Minnie from New Guinea
And Ginny from Sardiny
You had me in tears
About a gal in Algiers
Go on and blow your top
'Cause it'll have to stop
When you get home.
You had a kitten in New Britain
While I was sittin' knittin'
You went on a spree
With a gal in Italy
While you're across the foam,
I'm stayin' home alone!
Now the places you've been touring
The gals are so alluring
Waving their veils and fans!
But I thought it might happen
So I haven't been a-nappin!
I've been makin' some post-war plans.
All the letters that I mailed ya
When you were in Australia
Should have put you wise
You should get a big surprise:
I've been savin' my love ration
I'll be the League of Nations to you!
I'll be your Minnie from New Guinea
Your Ginny from Sardiny
Your Nina from China
And your Nan from Iran,
And I don't have to ask ya
About the gal in Alaska
Or the cutie down in India

LOST: 100 POUNDS!
FOUND: Charm, Loveliness, Vitality!

BLONDES

New Home Shampoo Washes Hair Shades Lighter SAFELY

Made specially for blondes, this new shampoo helps keep light hair from darkening—brightens faded hair. Called Blondex, it quickly makes a rich cleansing lather. Instantly removes the dingy, dust-laden film that makes blonde hair dark, old-looking. Takes only 11 minutes to do at home. Gives hair attractive luster and highlights — keeps that just-shampooed look for a whole week. Safe for children's hair. Blondex is sold at 10c, drug and department stores.

REMOVE HAIR without razor, liquid paste or powder 25c

Baby Touch Hair Remover is the modern way to remove hair from the arms, legs and face. No chemicals—no odor. Use like a powder puff. Women prefer it because it is so convenient to use, and costs so little. Try it—if you don't like it better than any other method just return it to us. Your money will be promptly refunded. At drug and department stores or send 25c for one or $1.00 for five of the Baby Touch Pads. Baby Touch Mittens (Two sides) 35c each, 3 for $1.00.

(S) EXTRA DIVIDEND:

Chet Lauck, Jr. (aged 5) has his own herd of twenty registered cows on his father's ranch near Las Vegas. His father (Lum of Lum & Abner) has agreed to board his son's herd free of charge, but in return is to receive any bull calves that are born. When the first new calf arrived recently, Chet restrained his enthusiasm until an important point had been settled. "Is it," he wanted to know, "a boy cow or is it mine?"

DISC DILLY:

A fanatical band of Sinatra fans has long made it a habit to record his programs as they come over the air. Not so long ago, enthusiastic waxers got the treat of their lives. At the close of his broadcast, Frank said softly into the mike, "Happy Birthday, Son!" This illegal ether message has made recordings of that evening's program collectors' items.

SMALL WORLD DEPARTMENT:

Jinx Falkenburg, Marguerite Chapman, and Gayle Gifford (of Columbia) were returning by air, from a camp tour when they were grounded in a railroad junction because of impossible flying weather. Jinx was put on the next train out—a streamliner—but Marguerite and Gayle landed 24 hours later on an item of transportation that made the celebrated Slow Train Through Arkansas seem a V2. It was 100% chaircar, cold, dirty, and packed with irate passengers. There was, however, a diner.

When, after a two-hour wait in line, the girls were seated at a table already occupied by two weary army privates, one of the boys favored Marguerite with an analytical eye. "You're Marguerite Chapman, aren't you?" he demanded.

She admitted the charge.

"Well, will you kindly tell me what a girl like you is doing on this pain train? You're ruining my morale by destroying my illusions about actresses," he said solemnly.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Morie (The Body) McDonold when she arrived in N. Y., after her hospitol show tour.

FRIGID FUN:

Don't let anyone tell you that it doesn't get cold in California. There are times when the grassy green banks are covered with dawn frost, and when the great sound stages are northern caves breathing invisible blizzards. Came a day like that on the Selznick set for "Guest Wife." (This title is about to be changed.) The picture stars Claudette Colbert, Don Ameche, and Dick Foran.

Miss Colbert shivered and shook inside her wool suit. She huddled in her dressing room before a small but valiant electric heater. There came a knock at the door and one of the studio workman asked solicitously, "Would you like some ice cream—the vendor just came on the set?"

"N-N-No, thank you," shuddered Miss Colbert.

Twenty seconds later a second studio employee inquired graciously whether Miss Colbert would like an ice cream soda. By that time the Colbert teeth were rattling nicely as she said no. Forty seconds later the wardrobe girl tapped and delivered a message: there was ice cream to be had. After four additional callers had arrived, each suggesting a gustatory chill, Miss Colbert grew suspicious and opened the door narrowly in order to survey the scene. Sure enough, at the far end of the set, flailing his arms across his chest, was Mr. Ameche. He was buttonholing all innocent passersby and sending them over to the Colbert dressing room with assorted Eskimo pie messages.

The ribbing, always a major pastime on any picture in which Mr. Ameche is cast, was well started.

LAY THAT PISTOL DOWN, BABE:

Recently, Lana Turner has been awakened on several occasions by what she presumed was the stealthy sound of prowlers around her canyon home. She took up the matter with Whitey Hendry, head of Metro's police department. Whitey made a suggestion. Now, on Metro's back lot, astonished workmen are occasionally treated to the sight of Lana pointing a pistol at a nearby target and scoring frequently enough to make it feasible for all prowlers to arrive hereafter accompanied by a full symphony orchestra. This will demonstrate the prowlers' admiration without subjecting him to perforation.

Look Younger and Lovelier
THE NEW EASY WAY

DORLE HORMOCREME is helping women all over to enjoy . . . once again . . . the bloom and vitality of a youthful skin. DORLE HORMOCREME does this because it contains liberal amounts of that miracle of science—ESTROGENIC HORMONES.

These ESTROGENIC HORMONES (Young skin Ingredients) are absorbed through the skin and serve to replace the natural hormones which begin to diminish gradually in the twenties. Daily application helps the skin on face, throat and hands to become FIRM, FRESH, and RADIANT. The beautifying effect is not just superficial but ACTUAL for nature itself is being aided.

Desired results are observed within 30 days. ORDER TODAY. Take advantage of the introductory price of $3.00 (tax included) for 30 day supply. (Regularly $5.00.) Shipped Postpaid. Money back guarantee.

Sold by Mail only.

SALTY O'ROURKE (Paramount) is Alan Ladd, a slick racetrack operator risking his all to be able to repay a debt of 20 grand to a crooked, gun-totin' bookie (Bruce Cabot).

Given just 30 days to raise the money, or else, and aided by his trainer-sidekick (William Demarest), Salty hires a jockey named Johnny Cate (Stanley Clements), and his troubles really start, when Johnny falls in love with a pretty young schoolmarm (Gail Russell).

It's Laddie's picture, but what a boy Stanley Clements!

BILLY ROSE'S DIAMOND HORSESHOE (20th Century-Fox) rates raves for "eye and ear" appeal, being a star-studded Technicolor musical extravaganza—avec Betty Grable (her first picture since the birth of her daughter, Victoria James; and that's neither affirming nor denying the rumor that the little one is on Mr. Stork's list for getting a little baby brother, or a sister!)

The setting (as you could guess for yourself) is the famous New York nitery owned and operated by the fabulous Billy Rose. Dick Haymes is a young medical student with a yen to follow in papa's footsteps—literally his footsteps, you might say in this case, because "Papa" William Gaxton is a buck-and-wing-time hoofer. Okay, so the plot is thin—but who cares!

WRINKLES?

WATCH THE DANGER AREAS

Wrinkles often appear prematurely in the danger areas where the skin is thinnest, as around the eyes, mouth and throat . . . especially when the skin is deficient in natural oils. To help prevent these conditions, use the new, improved Estrobalm as directed. An ideal emollient to aid in preventing the onset of wrinkles prematurely. Contains real Turtle Oil with the new scientific discovery Estrogenic Hormones and other ingredients readily absorbed by the skin, and recognized by many beauty experts as excellent skin aids. No wonder thousands of happy users throughout the country recommend Estrobalm.

Don't wait until it is too late. Order Estrobalm today. Complete with Instruction Booklet. 2-oz. jar $2.00. 6-oz. jar $5.00. 1-pound jar $10.00. (Postage additional on C. O. D. orders). Satisfaction guaranteed or purchase price refunded. Write today!

BEDSIDE MANNER (United Artists)—And need more be said, when we explain that Ruth Hussey is Dr. Hedy Fredericks? "Doc" Charles Ruggles is her uncle. John Carroll is an engineer-pilot who keeps his distance from lady doctors with "opinions against," until he's injured in a crash landing, finds out a thing or three about "the bedside manner," and comes love.

Cast as three Marines, Joel McGinnis, John James and Frank Jenks are in there punching for laughs, and Ann Rutherford, Claudia Drake and Renee Godfrey are "something added" for the fem quota.

KEEP YOUR POWDER DRY (M-G-M) is a theme with a team, so old and so familiar, except that it's Lana Turner and Laraine Day (instead of the Lowe-McLaglen combo) exchanging the "sez you, sez me" lines. Susan Peters referees for the scrappers, who go battling all through their WAC basic training, and then on to officers' school . . . with more of the same.

All well and good, as a recruiting effort—but such effort!

PILLOW TO POST (Warner Bros.)—with Ida Lupino paired with a new leading man, one William Prince. Hilarious comedy all the way through, pitched to the old "It Happened One Night" situation of what confusion and embarrassing moments can result, when strangers meet in an auto court taking accommodations for "a married couple," and they're not. Happening in war time, in these days of housing shortages and "sorry, no hotel rooms available," the awkward predicament is particularly understandable. And in the end, of course, they know it's love, and the marriage gag is duly legalized.

Why Be SKINNY?

When You, Too, May

GAIN WEIGHT

and Have Those Full Glamorous Curves Men Admire

Are you thin, gawky, underweight due to lack of sufficient vitamins? Don't be! Let added weight help to round out your curves as Nature intended them to be. Men admire well developed, beautifully moulded women.

Poor appetite and lack of necessary vitamins probably cause many underweight conditions. You may eat three meals a day, yet be vitamin and mineral starved. BEAUTIFORM TABS contain Vitamins A, B1, C, D, and G (B2) plus calcium pantothenate, phosphorus, and iron—which may be the vitamin and mineral supplement you need for that improved appetite and added weight that often means added curves on your figure.

A well developed, shapely, normal figure attracts, inspires, and often leads to love and romance. Use the BEAUTIFORM Method to help you gain normal weight, thereby often transforming your figure into adorable rounded curves.

FREE with every order: Special Brochure on HOW TO GAIN WEIGHT and IMPROVE the appearance of your BUST, CHEST, and FIGURE.

Order BEAUTIFORM TABS today. Only $2.00, postpaid if remittance accompanies order, or C.O.D. plus postage. Try the BEAUTIFORM Method for 10 days at our risk. You must be satisfied or we guarantee to refund your money.

DO HIS LETTERS END WITH

I love you.

Does He Mean It? What Kind of a Man Is He? Would You Like to Find Out?

Do you know that a person's handwriting can reveal his inner personality? Send his letter together with $1.00 to ROB ROY, nationally known graphologist for a confidential analysis of his handwriting. Learn the secrets concealed in the stroke of a pen.

ROB ROY 92 LIBERTY STREET NEW YORK 6, N. Y.

SALOME—WHERE SHE DANCED (Universal), as you've probably heard by now, is the name of an actual town in Arizona. Originally Drinkman's Wells, it was renamed when Salome (Yvonne DeCarlo), a Viennese dancer, paused there on her trip to San Francisco. When a gal can have a town named for her, after one dance, she's got something—and five suitors could attest to that.

It's a fast moving western with a healthy portion of European glamour, spy plots, and outlaw bands. Figuring prominently in the cast are David Bruce, Rod Cameron, Walter Slezak, and Marjorie Rambeau.

IDENTITY UNKNOWN (Republic)—Richard Arlen, an American soldier amnesia victim, is believed to be the sole survivor of a group of four men who'd been trapped in enemy territory. Disturbed afterward by his not being able to remember, he goes A.W.O.L., and decides to visit the relatives of his buddies who didn't "come back."

Cheryl Walker, one of the grieving young widows, has her courage restored; meeting Arlen, she's able to see many reasons for going on with life, despite her great loss. And so it is with all the others he visits. In the end, the "unknown soldier" is identified.

STRANGE ILLUSION (PRC Pictures)—Another murder mystery. Tables are turned in this one, however—the criminologist is the corpse! The death is discovered, and the crime solved, all because of a dream. James Lydon is the dreamer, Sally Eilers and Jayne Hazard are his mother and sister, Mary McLeon, his pretty galfriend.

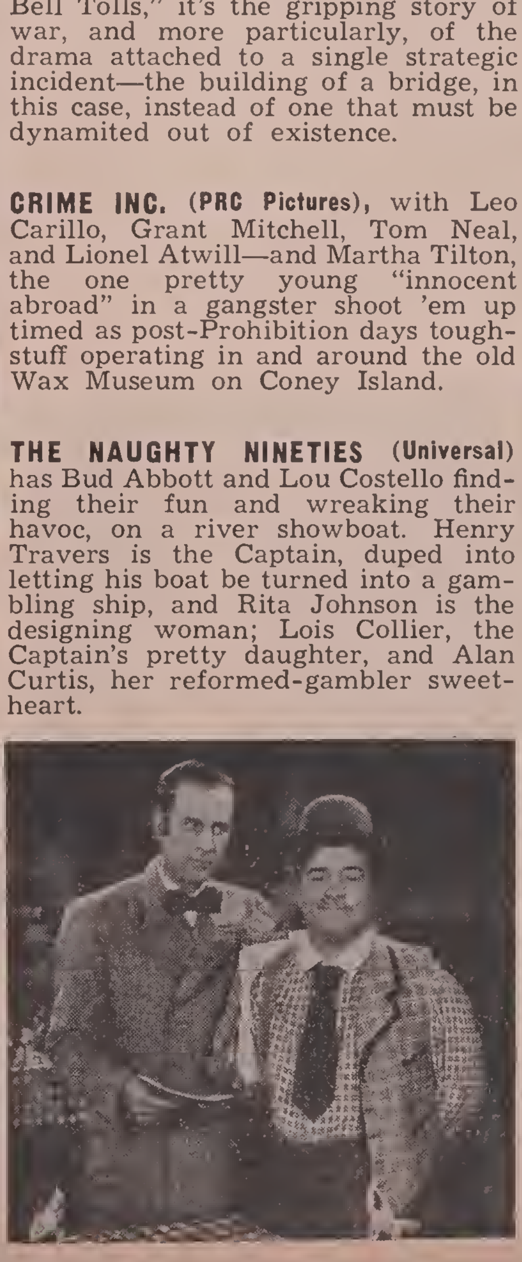
ESCAPE IN THE FOG (Columbia), would of course be set in—San Francisco. With Nina Foch as the pretty Navy nurse who comes up with key clues for solving a mystery plot about a "stolen message," by dreaming how it all happened, and warning the handsome hero (William Wright). Whereupon complications set in and the chase begins. Konstantine Shayne figures as the German spy villain, masquerading as a clock repairer.

COUNTER-ATTACK (Columbia)—Soviet paratroopers land behind the German lines in an attempt to get information for a Russian drive. Marguerite Chapman is a brave 'n' loyal partisan, sans glamour, and Paul Muni, a soldier in the Red Army. Like "For Whom the Bell Tolls," it's the gripping story of war, and more particularly, of the drama attached to a single strategic incident—the building of a bridge, in this case, instead of one that must be dynamited out of existence.

CRIME INC. (PRC Pictures), with Leo Carillo, Grant Mitchell, Tom Neal, and Lionel Atwill—and Martha Tilton, the one pretty young "innocent abroad" in a gangster shoot 'em up timed as post-Prohibition days tough-stuff operating in and around the old Wax Museum on Coney Island.

THE NAUGHTY NINETIES (Universal) has Bud Abbott and Lou Costello finding their fun and wreaking their havoc, on a river showboat. Henry Travers is the Captain, duped into letting his boat be turned into a gambling ship, and Rita Johnson is the designing woman; Lois Collier, the Captain's pretty daughter, and Alan Curtis, her reformed-gambler sweetheart.



DEFORMED OR INJURED BACK

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

A Man, helpless, unable to walk, because of a spinal injury, was, through support of the Philo Burt Appliance, riding horseback and playing tennis, within a year. A Lady, 72 years old, who suffered a severe spinal disorder, found relief. A Child, paralyzed from a spinal deformity was able to play about the house, in three weeks' time. The Philo Burt Appliance has been successfully used in over sixty-eight thousand cases in the past 43 years.

30 DAYS' TRIAL TO PROVE ITS VALUE IN YOUR OWN CASE
The Appliance is light, cool, flexible and easily adjusted—how different from the old torturing plaster casts, leather and celluloid jackets or steel braces. Every sufferer with a weakened, injured, diseased or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate. Physicians recommend it and we work with your Doctor. Reduced price within reach of all afflicted.

THE POWER OF THE WHISTLER (Columbia) is a mystery based on the popular radio series, with Richard Dix playing the role of a homicidal maniac escaped from a mental institution, and suffering a temporary lapse of memory. Janis Carter figures as the girl in the case, Jeff Donnell and Loren Tindall have the second leads.

CHINA'S LITTLE DEVILS (Monogram) could better be titled "China's brave little warriors." It's the story of war orphans turned raiders, banded together at Harry Carey's missionary school and stealing into the Jap camps at night, often capturing valuable supplies. Little Butch (Ducky L. Louis) leads the gang, in imitation of his hero, Flying Tiger Big Butch Dooley (Paul Kelly).

Produced by one-time screen leading man Grant Withers, and he collaborated on the screen script.

SONG OF THE SARONG (Universal) sends that funny man Bill Gargan off to a Pacific Isle, where except for the interventions of Nancy Kelly (avec sarong) he'd have been burned at the stake as a pearl pilferer. With Eddie Quillan and Fuzzy Knight, and an oh-so-attractive newcomer, George Dolenz.

ATLANTIC ADVENTURE (Crown Film Unit, released through Para.)—A powerful, if sometimes grim, feature-length documentary produced for the British Ministry of Information. Two years in the making, and filmed in Technicolor, it's a tribute to the humor and courage of "the average fighting man." Indeed, it is those men—not professional actors merely playing roles; men facing death at sea in an open lifeboat.

CALLING ALL RADIO FANS

Did you know that with just a flick of the dial you can tune in on five stirring confessions each week?

Straight from the pages of REAL STORY Magazine come the poignant problems of everyday people—problems which you or your friends may be facing at this very moment. For instance, what about that young bride who lives in your neighborhood? It's perfectly obvious that she's money-mad and that she's trying to instill the same ambition into her husband. But will her scheming make or break him?

Well, you may not find your actual neighbor in "Real Stories from Real Life," but you'll meet someone who's struggling with a similar conflict. Her way of solving it can't fail to hold you spellbound.

So if you like true dramatizations well spiced with human interest and human emotions, make this program a listening habit! You'll find it on WOR or your local Mutual Network Station Monday through Friday, at 9:15 to 9:30 PM, EWT.

YOUR PROBLEM AND MINE

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am not as young as most of the girls who write to you, but I think my problem is just as important as theirs, and I do so want you to help me.

You see I am twenty-four, and have no friends. There must be some reason for this, but I can not find it. I am not homely, better than average looking, I dress as well as the rest of the girls who work in the plant with me, and I want friends desperately, but all the other girls here seem to have enough friends without bothering with me.

I have strict ideas of my own, so it isn't just anybody I want for my friends, but it seems that I can not get out of this solitary existence, no matter what I do. I get awkward and bashful with new people, and that seems to end the conversation once and for all.

Please suggest something for me.

Sincerely,
Bernice F.

Dear Bernice:

First of all, you are old enough to have yourself pretty well in hand, to know your own shortcomings, and do something about them. No one has enough friends, and I am sure the other girls in your plant are more than willing to come half way in this friendship business.

Are you sure that you have not rebuffed them, in one way or another? After all, a simple gesture, a smile, a kind word are the most important introductions to other girls, if they are not self-consciously offered. Try to relax among the other girls and think of yourself as one of them, rather than as a lone individual 'way off by yourself. You will be surprised how much your own mental attitude has to do with this feeling of inferiority that you apparently have.

Try to be as friendly as you naturally can the next time you mingle with the others, and remember that a smile is always invaluable in gaining friends.

Good luck to you.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I have been a concert pianist, and now, although I am only twenty-eight, I have my own studio where I teach music to youngsters, and have made quite a success out of my profession.

My problem, however, concerns marriage. I am engaged to a wonderful chap, whom I love very much, and we are planning to be married this Spring. The one obstacle, and my big problem, is the fact that he wants me to give up my career when we marry.

I simply can not do this, for music is my whole life, and I have tried to convince him that our careers will not interfere with our marriage, but he will not understand.

Please advise me.

Thank you,
Carol L.

Dear Carol:

Many people have had to face this problem of Marriage Vs. Career, and it can only be solved by mutual understanding. However, you must decide what comes first in your life, and if it is marriage, then you must be prepared to accede to your husband's wishes.

This problem may be worked out satisfactorily, allowing for both a career and marriage, providing the wife never lets her marriage suffer as a consequence. Perhaps you can convince your fiancé that this will be your definite plan, and then try it for six months. However, promise him that you will be willing to give up your career if this does not work out happily, and abide by your promise.

Others have done this, and there is no reason why you can not, providing you both cooperate and maintain a complete understanding of the issues involved.

Let me know how this plan works out.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My parents died when I was a child, and I have been living with my grandmother ever since. I am now eighteen, but she treats me as though I were still a child.

She is so strict with me that she makes life miserable. If I am late getting in at night, she forbids me to go out for two weeks. She saw me kiss a boy good night once last month, so she won't let me see him any more. Well, this was going too far, because he is a wonderful boy and likes me very much.

I have been meeting him secretly, but I frankly do not feel right about this. What do you suggest?

Very truly yours,
Mary K.

Dear Mary:

I am glad you say you do not feel right about meeting this boy in secret. That kind of conduct never works out right, no matter how strict your grandmother may be.

I admit that yours is a difficult situation, for you are under obligation to your grandmother, and this is different from a parent's supervision. However, there must be a common ground of understanding, whereby you can convince your grandmother that you are old enough to be trusted, and that you will meet her more than half way if she will give you a little more independence.

Make an arrangement with her, and then keep your part of the bargain. Then you will not have to resort to secret meetings.

Yours,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I have a brother in the Army, and he has been overseas for a year and a half. Lately, he has been writing me asking me to write to several of his buddies because they don't get letters from anyone at home.

I am all for this idea as I love to write letters anyway, but my mother thinks that since I am only sixteen, I am too young to be writing to boys I don't know.

Do you think this is true?

Susan V.

Dear Susan:

I can not see what harm your letters to the soldiers can do if they are properly written. However, I can understand your mother's views, especially at your age.

Why not get your mother's cooperation in this project, and let her read the letters you write to these boys, so she can understand that you intend to keep them completely impersonal, with just the right touch of chatter and home about them?

After all, your brother undoubtedly has explained your age to his buddies, and probably feels that he would like to share the letters that are so important to him with these other boys.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am a girl of seventeen, and was born with a bluish-red birthmark covering the entire length of my left leg. I am very self-conscious about it and cannot participate in school activities on account of it.

I wonder if you have possibly heard of any way to cover birthmarks or of methods of removing them. If you could help me, I would be the happiest girl in the world.

Jerry

Dear Jerry:

There is a preparation which was invented by a girl who had just such a mark as yours on the side of her face. It is a creamy liquid which you paint over the mark. This preparation comes in different skin shades, and is prescribed by physicians.

If you will send me your doctor's name and address, I will forward to him the name of this product. He can look into it and see if it is a proper preparation for you to use in your case.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

We are a group of eight teen-age girls and we have a problem for you. We used to have a Teen-age Club, but it was disbanded because none of the older people took an interest in it. We also have about eight boys in our group who won't cooperate in helping to plan things. We really need advice on how to make a teen-age club a success.

Hopeful Eight

Dear Teen-agers:

I would suggest that you organize your Teen-Age Club again, and meet twice a month, or oftener if you like, at the home of one of your members.

You can dance to records, play games, serve light refreshments, and really have a good time. In order to interest your parents, why don't you appoint the father and mother of the member at whose home you meet, as co-host and co-hostess, and let them help plan the evening's fun.

I would also suggest that you add a serious objective to your good times by pledging yourself to get a stated number of blood donors a week, by pledging yourselves to buy a certain amount of war stamps—and although you probably consider yourselves too old to gather scrap, etc., you can organize your younger brothers and sisters into teams to gather metals, paper and scrap, and have contests to see which team will lead. If you teen-agers would organize for such a purpose, you could make a tremendous contribution to the war effort.

And don't worry, when the boys see what fun you are having, they will not want to be left out of it.

JANE WYMAN

three stunning head dresses . . . three appropriate hair-dos!

On this page, NORMA RICHTER . . . lovely New York fashion model, Cover Girl and "Drene Girl" . . . models three stunning, new bridal head dresses and shows you an appropriate hair-do for each. (Above) An exquisite head dress of orange blossoms and pearls, shaped like the brim of a bonnet. Here Norma's hair-do is suitably demure, but smart . . . the front held close to the head, the back in a soft page-boy roll. The shining beauty of her hair is due to Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioner, which Norma always uses. She knows no other shampoo leaves her hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Are you in the know?

Leg make-up looks best if you—

- ☐ Use a depilatory
- ☐ Choose a stocking shade
- ☐ Apply it evenly

It takes more than a light-going-over to make those gams whistle-worthy. It takes the three answers given above. De-fuzz your legs. Choose a stocking shade that matches your suntan. Apply it evenly. Cosmetic "hose" are so comfortable, seems they're here to stay. So, too, is the comfort you get from Kotex—for Kotex stays soft while wearing. That's why there's such a difference between Kotex and pads that just "feel" soft at first touch. Kotex doesn't bunch up . . . its softness stays and stays!

For a slick permanent, which is a "must"?

- ☐ A skilled operator
- ☐ A cold wave
- ☐ A machine wave

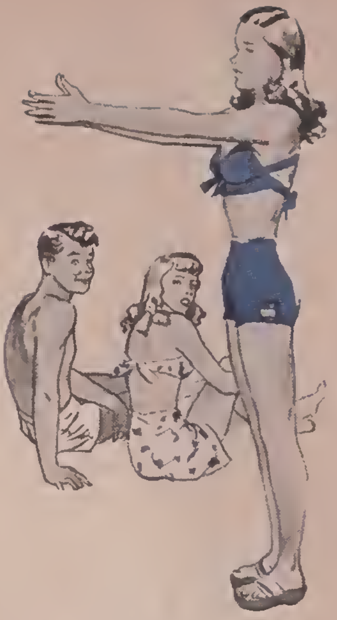
Frizzy flub—or dream girl? That depends largely on the skill of your operator. Let her decide the right type of wave for your hair-texture. Slick grooming requires infinite care. And guard your daintiness with care . . . especially at "certain" times.

Now there's a deodorant locked inside each Kotex napkin. The deodorant can't shake out, because it is processed into each pad—not merely dusted on. No extra charge for this new Kotex "extra" that aids your charm, your confidence.



Is this little beach belle—

- ☐ Playing patty-cake
- ☐ Dive balmy
- ☐ Collar-bone conscious

No, she's not "tetched". . . just collar-bone conscious . . . and if you have a lean-and-hollow-look around the base of your neck, try: Standing erect, arms out (as shown), elbows stiff. Swing arms backward, forward—touching finger tips. This also banishes shoulder-blade problems. And to banish problem-day worries—choose Kotex, because the special safety center of Kotex gives you plus protection by keeping moisture from the sides of the pad . . . helps safeguard your secret.

If you're stymied with a show-off, should you—

- ☐ Try to reform him
- ☐ Go smilin' through
- ☐ Make with the icicles

Why attempt to freeze or reform him? Be smart and go smilin' through his clowning. It can be fun—and he'll tell the world you're wonderful! Learning to laugh in a trying situation helps build self-confidence. That goes for trying days, too . . . when you laugh off "telltale outline" fears with the patented, flat tapered ends of Kotex. So unlike thick, stubby napkins, those flat pressed ends don't show revealing lines. Kotex keeps you confident!

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

There are several kinds of laughs. The smile, the chuckle, the quirk of amusement—

★ ★ ★ ★

None of these goes with the new Spencer Tracy-Katharine Hepburn film —"Without Love".

★ ★ ★ ★

We're talking about the Abdominal Upheaval—the kind of laugh that gets a half-nelson on your midriff and rolls you around in your seat.

★ ★ ★ ★

The handkerchief-stuffed-in-the-mouth kind of laughter.

★ ★ ★ ★

"Without Love" is sensationally funny. And personal and warm.

★ ★ ★ ★

This columnist saw the picture four times before writing this. We laugh in the same places each time.

★ ★ ★ ★

Spencer was never immenser. Katharine attempts to woo, but his attitude is that it can't Hepburn here.

★ ★ ★ ★

The picture is much better than that.

★ ★ ★ ★

Donald Ogden Stewart has adapted Philip Barry's play with a fresh approach and a free hand. He has introduced a sleep-walking motif.

★ ★ ★ ★

Spence sleep-walks at first and Katie sleep-walks right back at him. It's a sleep-walkie-talkie.

★ ★ ★ ★

Lawrence Weingarten, who is awfully good at producing this sort of clever fare for M-G-M, is up to his old tricks.

★ ★ ★ ★

Harold Bucquet, the director, deserves a bouquet for his excellent job.

★ ★ ★ ★

The picture has one of the greatest casts ever. In addition to Tracy and Hepburn, there's, to begin with, Lucille Ball, a star on her own, who lives up to her reputation.

★ ★ ★ ★

Keenan Wynn never was funnier. Then there are Carl Esmond, Patricia Morison, Felix Bressart—and and and.

★ ★ ★ ★

It started during Easter at the Radio City Music Hall in New York and is still running. It's a long run picture.

★ ★ ★ ★

Changing the subject, how many of you have seen "The Picture of Dorian Gray", the most unusual film of the year?

★ ★ ★ ★

DORIAN GRAY

This production based on Oscar Wilde's absinthe-tinted drama is causing a great deal of talk. It is so superbly produced, so different in theme from conventional fare. We think you ought to see "Dorian".

★ ★ ★ ★

M-G-M has many wonderful offerings on the way. You might look for "The Clock", "Son of Lassie", "The Valley of Decision" "Thrill of a Romance", and "Ziegfeld Follies".

Still roaring. —Leo

OSCARITIS:

Bing Crosby had never seen "Going My Way," until a week before the Academy Award festivities were scheduled to take place at Grauman's Chinese. So he and Dixie decided that, since the picture was so much discussed, perhaps they should really see it. You top that in modesty if you can—which you can't, says my last ten dollars.

They went to a neighborhood theatre, named The Elite, and there found a queue. So they took their patient places and waited for seats. During the forty-five minutes they moved slowly along in line, not one person recognized the Crosbys.

But . . . the night of the Award Show, the bleachers, constructed for the occasion at the entrance to the Chinese, screamed as one voice when Bing and Dixie drove up. Bing was wearing a brown business suit, a sport shirt, a red, yellow and green tie, and a yellow sport scarf. This ensemble provoked one of Bob Hope's best sallies (he was MC during the evening.) "This affair is informal," cracked Bob. "We have only had to send Bing home twice . . . to get on his shoes."

You have undoubtedly read explicit reports on the awards, but just to keep your scrapbook complete, here is the box score in simplified form:

GOING MY WAY snagged seven Oscars, to wit:

Best Motion Picture of the year.

Best Performance By An Actor In a Supporting Role—Barry Fitzgerald, who said, "I don't have anything to say except that I'm grateful."

Best Achievement In Directing—won by Leo McCarey.

Best Original Motion Picture Story, also won by Mr. McCarey.

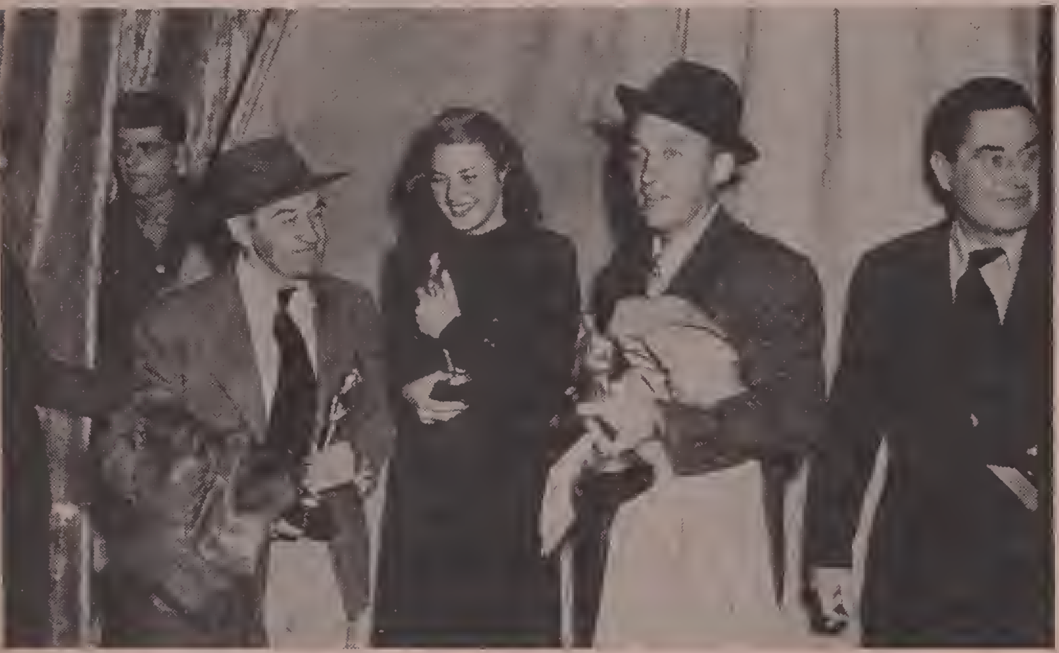
Best Written Screenplay, won by Frank Butler and Frank Cavett.

Best Original Song—"Swinging On A Star," music by James Van Heusen, lyrics by Johnny Burke.

Best Performance By An Actor—The Great Bing. This was a sort of second-hand triumph for Bob Hope, too. When he first emerged on the stage, he glared at the audience, then said that he was happy to be allowed to preside at the Award affair again this year . . . that he was anxious to see what excuses they would give him this time. Then, giving a long waebegone look at the representative of Price, Waterhouse & Company, Bob observed that he was positive that the counting was accurate and honest . . . because they had returned his check that morning. He added that he had just received a note from the Chamber of Commerce, requesting him thereafter to refer to Price, Waterhouse & Company as Price, Sunporch & Company. As you can see, Bob was in rare form.

When Bing acknowledged his award, he said that this only confirmed his opinion that opportunity was widespread in these United States, when "a broken down crooner like myself can be taken by the hand by a director like Leo McCarey and led through a picture to an Academy Award." He added, "Now if someone will only get me a horse that will win the Kentucky Derby!"

As Bing, making a kidding pass at Bob, left the stage, Bob cracked, "No wonder he won—he's got six votes in his own family!" Then, heaving the profound sigh of the van-



Three happy people! Barry Fitzgerald, Ingrid Bergman, Bing Crosby, as they left The Grauman's Chinese stage after receiving their respective Academy Award Oscars.

It's an old Academy custom! Jennifer Jones, the winnah last year, "presented" to Bergman.

Gary Cooper (a former winner) officiated in the absence of Paul Lukas, 1944 "best actor."

From one "best supporting actor" to another; Charles (Mr. Dingle) Coburn to Fitzgerald.

quished, he observed, "Now I know how Dewey felt."

Darryl Zanuck's great picture, "Wilson," romped home with six awards, as follows:

Best Original Screen Play—by Lamarr Trotti.

Best Achievement In Cinematography—by Leon Shamroy. (When Bob announced this award, he said, "You know what a Cinematographer is—a cinematic redcap; they've taken care of plenty of bags for me."

Best Interior Decoration For Color Films—Wiard Inhen and Thomas Little.

Best Sound Recording—E. H. Hanson.

Best Film Editing—Barbara McLean. Miss McLean, incidentally, was the only feminine technician (among three girl nominees, and the other two were interior decorators) to win an award. Although all the winners were thrilled, I can well imagine that her delight was the greatest of the evening.

To cap this fine array, Mr. Zanuck was the winner of the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award for consistently high idealism in motion picture production. This award was presented by Norma Shearer, who wore a long, orange-flame crepe dress, and looked like a bit of fugitive sunset.

There was drama in Ingrid Bergman's winning this year's Oscar for the best performance as an actress. A great many people thought she would win the award last year, and one of those people was the winner, Jennifer Jones. As she went to the platform to receive her award last year, Miss Jones had the fineness to tell Ingrid that she felt Miss Bergman should have had the award. So it was intensely pleasant for her to have the fun of opening this year's envelope and finding Miss Bergman's name listed because of her work in "Gaslight."

In acknowledging her award, Ingrid said, "I'm deeply grateful for this award. I'm particularly glad to get it at this time, because I'm working on a picture with Mr. Crosby and Mr. McCarey at present ("Bells Of St. Mary's") and I'm afraid that if I went on the set tomorrow without an award, nobody would speak to me."

Jennifer's speech, incidentally, was very pretty and appropriate. She told Miss Bergman, "You have won our votes with your artistry, and our hearts with your graciousness."

Award for the Best Performance of A Supporting Actress went to Miss Ethel Barrymore for her brilliant work in "None But The Lonely Heart." This was as it should be. However, you may anticipate the winning, in years to come, of Agnes Moorehead (who consistently turns in splendid performances) and Angela Lansbury, who is soon to take her place as one of the best.

Charles Coburn, last year's Male Supporting Role Award winner, made the presentation to Barry Fitzgerald, and said jocularly, "I want you to know that, if I weren't Charles Coburn, I'd like to be Barry Fitzgerald."

Margaret O'Brien, the first child actress to win the Award since the junior days of Shirley Temple, was awarded an Oscarette for outstanding performance. Bob picked her up and held her high so that the microphone would catch her sweet, high treble. "I don't know what to say except 'Thank You,' " she announced, beaming upon Bob. To the audience Bob said, "She's just ad libbing until she thinks of a really good line . . . hmmmm . . . now I know what happens to people who work in pictures with you." Bob has, by this time, given Margaret so many different awards that they are old friends. "Look, honey," he said with an adoring look, "why don't you hurry and grow up?"

Margaret O'Brien's film career started in '42; she's made 9 pictures, all MGM but one.

Bob Hope received a plaque for outstanding 1944 achievements; presented by W. Wanger.

USE TAMPAX

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

What a satisfaction it is—especially in the season of summery attire—to know there is not a belt, a pin or a pad that can bulge or show through on "those days" of the month! For Tampax is worn internally and cannot cause even a ridge or wrinkle. Furthermore, it produces no odor . . . So you see Tampax is truly a great modern improvement and a help to social and business poise!

From a scientific standpoint Tampax has a fine history. Invented and perfected by a doctor, its principle is that of "internal absorption." Compared with external pads, Tampax has only about one-seventh their bulk. Yet it is extremely absorbent, because it is made throughout of pure, long-fiber surgical cotton. Tampax comes in individual applicators for easy and dainty insertion.

Tampax is comfortable, convenient and modern. Quick to change. Easy disposal. Sold at drug stores, notion counters. Three absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Month's supply will slip in your purse. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

In addition to these awards, acclaim was also given to:

THE FIGHTING LADY, for distinctive achievement in documentary production;

WHO'S WHO IN ANIMAL LAND, a one-reel subject;

I WON'T PLAY, a two-reel subject in which Dane Clark was outstanding;

MOUSE TROUBLE, a cartoon short made by MGM. After awarding the plaque for this cartoon, Bob said reminiscently, "So Mr. Quimby got his award for 'Mouse Trouble.' Wonder why he gave me such a searching look?"

COVER GIRL for the best achievement in sound recording;

THIRTY SECONDS OVER TOKYO for best achievement in special effects;

GASLIGHT for best achievement in art direction; (remember the foggy streets, the forbidding clock on the stair landing, the victorian, cluttered rooms?)

COVER GIRL for the best scoring of a musical.

SINCE YOU WENT AWAY for the best music score written for a dramatic picture;

LAURA for the best black-and-white cinematography. (WILSON won this award in the color division, so this was a department triumph for 20th Century.)

Although this statement may seem odd to those of you living away from Hollywood, the fact remains that Academy Award affairs have, in the past, been something of a bore. The same cannot be said of this year's program. Mark Sandrich, who died a week before his hard work reached consummation.

"Among those present" . . . the Paramount delegation: Joan Caulfield, Andre de Toth and Veronica Lake, in the order named. Veronica's at work now in "The Blue Dahlia."

Six awards to Darryl Zanuck! Here he accepts the Thalberg Memorial from Norma Shearer.

Shirley Temple was escorted by Guy Madison, the sailor lad who was such a hit in S.Y.W.A.

had suggested that a photo-montage be made of the pictures included under each category. This was done with stimulating effect. For instance, before the Award for Distinctive Achievement in Documentary Production was announced, we saw brief, indicative shots from THE FIGHTING LADY (remember the faces of the navy fliers waiting in the Ready Room, remember the down-barrel shots of tropical islands under bombardment?), from RESISTING ENEMY INTERROGATION, from NEW AMERICANS, from ARTURO TOSCANINI, and from THE MARINES AT TARAWA. In this division, THE FIGHTING LADY won the feature-length award, and THE MARINES AT TARAWA won the short subject award. General Smith, a lean, grim-faced man, accepted the award "in the names of those men who died in that action."

Before the evening was over, we saw quite a bit of GOING MY WAY for a second time (or fourth or fiftieth, if you are a real fan), as well as many feet from WILSON.

A word about the human politics of Academy Awards for the four acting awards. Although these awards should be given entirely for merit, there is always a certain human consideration in the balloting. Last year, when the race was between Ingrid Bergman and Jennifer Jones, those who had the right to cast a vote were saying, "Jones may never again be awarded a part as terrific as 'Bernadette', whereas Bergman is certain to be given a series of dynamic parts. She has 'Gaslight' coming up, and if that isn't quite good enough for an Oscar, she has finished 'Saratoga Trunk' which is certain to be Academy calibre." You see how it works?

This year there were many who felt that Alexander Knox' portrayal of WILSON was artistry of the most impressive sort, just as Bing's young priest in GOING MY WAY was superb characterization. It would have been almost impossible to decide between them—BUT, again came the forecast of the future. Bing specializes in comedy, so the chances are that never again will he have a role impressive enough to merit Academy consideration. However, Alexander Knox is undoubtedly one of the most gifted, most versatile, and most drama-worthy of our young actors; in future, he will enact dozens of parts of consequence, and for one or two of them, he will win the Oscar.

Check us on this next year, kids.

As this informative epic goes to press, Jimmie Dunn is scurrying frantically up and down the hills of Hollywood, trying to find a house or an apartment or a king-sized piano box in which to set up housekeeping with his bride, Edna Rush. Interesting highlights on this marriage are that Jimmie and his new wife knew one another many years before, and were considered by their friends to be altar-bound. However, he came to Hollywood and Miss Rush remained in the East, marrying and winning radio success for herself. Also, bridesmaid at the wedding was Betty Smith, writer of the book, "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn" which—as a screen play—has given Jimmie a revitalized career.

BLUE BOOTEES:

When The Bub, whose legal tag is James Craig, Jr., learned that he was about to become the senior child in his family, he assumed that the newcomer was to be a brother. "What will you call your new brother then?" asked James, Sr.

"Bob," said The Bub without an instant's hesitation.

So Bob Craig is now safely installed in his nursery, and The Bub has been telling school friends, "I've got a new baby. I've given him all my old clothes. And he looks exactly like me."

The Keenan Wynn newcomer also proved to be a second son, and was named Tracy Keenan Wynn in honor of his godfather, Spencer Tracy. The older Wynn son, Edmond Keenan, is now 4.

PUTTING POP ON ICE:

Nine years ago Tom Drake and Christopher Curtis were members of the same summer stock company in Poughkeepsie, but Chris was wearing bands on her teeth at the time and she seemed far too juvenile for the mature consideration of Mr. Drake, 3½ years her senior. He patronized her, gave her good advice (even assuring her it was a mistake when she married another man) and never forgot her.

Her marriage produced a dream child named Christopher, also—and ended in divorce.

So Tom and Christopher renewed their friendship, discovered that it had probably always been love, and rushed to Las Vegas, Nevada, and were married recently.

During the months in which Tom had been a frequent visitor in Christopher's home, he was addressed—in Chris' presence—as "Mr. Drake" by Christopher, Jr. The little lady preferred to call him Tom, and did so in private moments.

When the two Christophers moved into Tom's quarters as part of a family, Junior Chris was told, "Now you must call Mr. Drake, Daddy."

Chris regarded her new father with a chilly eye. "Awww, why did you have to marry him?" she wanted to know. "Just when I was getting around to calling him 'Tom' in front of everyone."

TWO OF A KIND

In the hospital waiting room there strode to and fro three miserable men. One was tall and brawny, one was taller and brawnier, and one was Jess Barker. The men, in the manner of the male of the species under such circumstances, began to describe, first their sufferings, then their anticipations.

One of the men was apparently a former athlete, currently engaged in trucking. He said that he came from a long family of husky men, that his wife was a singleton female in a family of boys—he was expecting a son.

The second man had much the same idea.

Jess, the quiet type, just swallowed hard and said he hoped Susan was getting along all right. He said he felt pretty useless.

In a few moments the nurse inserted a smiling face. "You have a lovely baby daughter, and your wife is doing fine," she said to the first man.

A few moments later she returned a second time. To the second man she announced, "And you have a wonderful baby daughter."

By common consent, the two relieved fathers kept watch with Jess. The nurse, hurried, passed through the room to say, "The first one is a boy, Mr. Barker."

She was back twenty minutes later. "And the second one is a boy, too."

Mr. Barker took his two friends out to buy them a drink. Tactfully, he directed the conversation toward a discussion of ice hockey and spring baseball training.

NO HABLO EL ESPANOL:

Merchant Seaman Richard Jaeckel had never seen "Wing And A Prayer," so—when his ship happened to put into port at Rio de Janeiro and local theatre marquees announced that picture as the current attraction, Dick chuckled to himself and thought, "Get me! Seeing this picture in South America." Once inside the theatre his complacency dissolved: the picture had been dubbed in Spanish, of which Dick understands not a word. Furthermore, the South American who had dubbed Dick's voice spoke in a thunderous baritone.

Dick's beautiful mother has been appearing most successfully in a Hollywood Little Theatre (the Playtime) in a brittle comedy entitled "Let's Marry."

This was before the winners were announced; David Selznick's smile was a dead give-away.

Pictures IN Production

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

YOUNG WIDOW is the Hunt Stromberg production starring that young grass widow, Ida Lupino, and her grass widower, Louis Hayward. There is no better proof of the civilized charm of these two delightful people than the fact that they are having a glorious time making this picture together. Marie McDonald (The Body) and Spring Byington are also in the cast.

DUEL IN THE SUN is the pictorialization of Niven Busch's great novel. Stars are Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Gregory Peck, Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Scott McKay and Steve Dunhill.

AT MGM:

YOLANDA AND THE THIEF, in Technicolor, will soon finish and set free Fred Astaire, Lucille Bremer, Frank Morgan, Leon Ames, Mildred Natwick and Mary Nash.

EARLY TO WED, in Technicolor, has been threatened from time to time with a title change, but so far remains as-is. Lucille Ball, Van Johnson, Esther Williams, Keenan Wynn (his motorcycle accident wasn't serious, luckily; it happened in almost the same spot, two years to the month after Van Johnson's near-fatal accident), Carlos Ramirez, Cecil Kellaway, and Paul Harvey make up the cast. Incidentally, those who talked to Esther Williams at the Academy Award affair could understand how she came by her magnificent skin and general beauty: she inherited them from her mother, who was Esther's guest on the Academy occasion.

THE HARVEY GIRLS, in Technicolor, is in its second month, with Judy Garland, Angela Lansbury, John Hodiak, Edward Arnold, Ray Bolger, Virginia O'Brien, Selena Royle, and Marjorie Main.

DANGEROUS PARTNERS, with James Craig, Signe Hasso, Edmund Gwenn, and Felix Bressart is new on the Metro slate. More about this one later.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE will undoubtedly be one of the most important pictures of the year. The script has been developed from the novel by William L. White; it is being directed by Commander John Ford, and its cast is notable: Lt. Commander Robert Montgomery, John Wayne, Ward Bond, Captain Jack Holt, Leon Ames, and Robert Barrat.

AT 20TH CENTURY FOX:

THE DOLLY SISTERS, in Technicolor, will soon wind up the chores of Betty Grable (look for her to accompany Harry James on tour this summer, if her health permits), John Payne, June Haver, S. Z. Sakall, Reginald Gardiner, Frank Latimore (watch his work—he's a newie and a goodie), Trudy Marshall and Sig Ruman.

JUNIOR MISS is a comedy of mixed-up affairs based upon Sally Benson's brilliant stories. Remember that Sally Benson wrote the stories on which "Meet Me In St. Louis" was based, and anticipate another dilly. Peggy Ann Garner, Allyn Joslyn, Michael Dunn, Mona Freeman (remember her work in "Together Again"), Stanley Prager and Connie Gilchrist make up the cast.

DRAGONWYCK is keeping Gene Tierney, Bill Eythe, Vincent Price, Anne Revere, Walter Huston, Spring Byington and Ruth Ford busy. One afternoon this week your reporter was rambling down a Beverly Hills street and met Gene, her dog Butch, and Vincent Price in full studio make-up, also out for a tour. The strike had temporarily expelled them from the set, so they were out shopping for

Hold on to your men, girls... here comes JOAN FONTAINE

And does that girl have what it takes to snare the boys as she plays Susan—a divine man-trap in her first gay, romantic comedy. "Slick trick" Susan uses a different line for each one—and they all work, but beautifully.

You'd think she didn't know anything when she meets George Brent. So wide-eyed and innocent (you know—the sweet sixteen act that makes men so protective)!

Some men, like Dennis O'Keefe, take women seriously! So Susan puts on glasses and takes up a good book —and she can write her own story from there on!

Glamour Girls! Take a lesson in dazzle from Susan. When she puts on the "allure" for Don DeFore she leads him on a conga that ends up you know where!

Walter Abel was the hard-to-get kind—until Susan used her "Society Siren" line—and how that lured him —is another lesson in how to get your man!

WITHIN THESE WALLS is the "Lucky" Humberstone picture starring Thomas Mitchell, Mary Anderson (remember her brilliant work as the nurse in "Lifeboat"?), Edward Ryan and Stephen Richards.

AT WARNERS:

SHADOW OF A WOMAN is keeping Andrea King, William Prince, Helmut Dantine, and Monte Blue busy. Everyone at Warners is raving about this Andrea King, using vocal italics and eyebrow exclamation points because of her work in "Hotel Berlin."

STOLEN LIFE, Bette Davis' first producing effort, is moving along nicely. In this picture, Bette wears no period costumes, no Gay Nineties hats nor hair-dos; she strongly looks like herself. Mrs. Mark Clark, visiting the set, met Bette and observed in happy surprise, "So this is the way you REALLY look!" It pleased Bette tremendously. Glenn Ford, Walter Brennan, Charlie Ruggles and Dane Clark make up the fast moving backfield.

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL, in Technicolor, is in its first week, with Dennis Morgan, Jack Carson, Jane Wyman Carmen Cavallaro, Martha Vickers and S. Z. Sakall. More of it later.

UNIVERSAL:

NIGHT IN PARADISE is the Walter Wanger Technicolor picture in its third month of shooting. Merle Oberon, Turhan Bey, Thomas Gomez, Gale Sondergaard, and Jerome Cowan are the players.

LADY ON A TRAIN is the Leslie Charteris thriller with Deanna Durbin, Ralph Bellamy, David Bruce, Edward Everett Horton, Allen Jenkins, Dan Duryea (wasn't he a fiend in "Woman In The Window"?), and Elizabeth Patterson.

SERENADE FOR MURDER gives Jess Barker his first starring role—now we'll see some career action for this able actor. Lois Collier and Edward S. Brophy will also contribute.

ONCE UPON A DREAM is the Robert Paige, Susanna Foster starrer with Louise Allbritton and Rod Cameron as added attractions.

AT RKO:

THE AMOROUS GHOST is a script written by Jerry Cady and John Tucker Battle, two very able story tellers, and with a cast consisting of Pat O'Brien, Adolphe Menjou, Rudy Vallee (in another "Palm Beach Story" role), Ellen Drew and Minna Gombell.

THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S has that Oscar team, Bing, Bergman & Leo McCarey, augmented by the efforts of Ruth Donnelly and Henry Travers. This will be a goodie.

AT PARAMOUNT:

THE WELL GROOMED BRIDE is a cerebral comedy dealing with the last magnum of champagne in San Francisco. Lt. Briggs (Ray Milland) wants it to christen a new aircraft carrier, and Marjorie Dawson (Olivia De Havilland) wants it for her wedding to Torchy (Sonny Tufts). Who wins Olivia in the last reel—Sonny or Ray?

YOU CAME ALONG is a heart-twister with Robert Cummings as a returned flier who has a rare blood disease that condemns him to death; Lizabeth Scott (a brilliant newcomer) is the girl who loves him and marries him. The flier's buddies are handsome Charles Drake (who looks like a P-38 pilot) and Don De Fore, who was so good as one of the four suitors in "The Affairs of Susan."

OUR HEARTS WERE GROWING UP is the very welcome sequel to OUR HEARTS WERE YOUNG AND GAY, with the same delicious cast of characters, Gail Russell, Diana Lynn, James Brown, Bill Edwards, aided and abetted by Brian Donlevy, Bill Demarest, and Byron Barr.

AT COLUMBIA:

OVER 21 is the film version of Ruth Gordon's drawing room comedy-drama with roles enacted by Irene Dunne, Alexander Knox, Charles Coburn, Jeff Donnell.

KISS AND TELL is now in its second month of production. Shirley Temple came down with a cold and no one knew exactly which one of the Kiss Boys in the picture was responsible. Jerome Courtland, Walter Abel, Darryl Hickman, and Scott Elliott have had no colds to date.

MONOGRAM:

HERE COMES TROUBLE is a confused little comedy through which are romping Billy Gilbert, Shemp Howard, Maxie Rosenbloom, Carlyle Blackwell Jr. and Patsy Moran.

Dottie Lamour and Arturo de Cordova (new but nice) in "A Medal for Benny" (Para.).

AT REPUBLIC:

MAN FROM OKLAHOMA is the latest Roy Rogers picture. Gabby Hayes will tote a gun for his pard' and Dale Evans is the other half of the sunset fadeout.

THE TIGER WOMAN has Kane Richman, Adele Mara, and Cy Kendall at work. I wish you kids would look Kane Richmond over. He is handsome, able, talented. Why he isn't starring in top "A" productions is one of the mysteries of Hollywood. A few ardent fans should adopt him and take his career to heart.

MANEUVERS... IN THE WAR OF LOVE!

In every sky battle he'd gotten his man. Now he's out to get his woman . . . but the furlough is a front where the female is a super-strategist!

Movieland's New Picture Guide

THE RHAPSODY IN BLUE (Warner Bros.)—Each year, a board of specially appointed experts gets an eye-full of some 1,400 films and selects a limited number for preservation by the Library of Congress. If we may be permitted to make a recommendation of the one picture which Hollywood has produced so far this year which clearly and unmistakably rates being preserved as "historically significant," this is it!

As a musical, there's been no other to compare—"Dixie" (sung by Al Jolson), "Embraceable You," all the great George Gershwin musical comedy hits; and "The Rhapsody," played by an orchestra Paul Whiteman conducts, and selections from "Porgy and Bess." The picture runs two hours and a half, as it is—you'll wish it were four hours.

As a biographical story, it's a script writer's dream—no need to embroider the real facts with dramatic detail, it's all there. And told just as it happened. The theme is as old as human experience—the battle of the artist (who's in this case a musician-composer) against the world. Not that, for George Gershwin, it was an unfriendly world. On the contrary, his success came almost too soon. He didn't have time—no time to spare from his music, no time to live. No man was ever more deserving of happiness; but like so many men of rare talent, George Gershwin was too late in learning where he could find it.

Probably this picture was made for reasons other than its being a deliberate attempt to "pay tribute"—but as a tribute, it's one of the finest, one of the few which doesn't sentimentalize. And Robert Alda, making his screen debut in the Gershwin role, is deserving of all the best that can be said of him; it would take a long string of superlatives to give just praise "as due."

WITHOUT LOVE (M-G-M), Philip Barry's play rewritten for the screen by Donald Ogden Stewart, co-stars Katharine Hepburn (in the role she played originally on the stage) and Spencer Tracy. Keenan Wynn rates supporting player plaudits—fact is, this reviewer is unreservedly enthusiastic about the guy, and saying: Isn't it too bad he's not the romantic type, because for sheer acting ability he has so much more to offer than many of the so-called actors, who are? Lucille Ball is cast-right for getting laughs as the wisecracking "real estate agent, feminine," and Patricia Morrison is the rich gal who's, in a word (a printable word)—unpleasant. Emily Massey, actually Miss Hepburn's secretary, appears in this as her maid.

Things have happened to the story; any resemblance to the original (excuse the cliché) seems "strictly coincidental." But the characters, and the basic situation, and the humor scenes stay essentially the same. Irish politics are deleted from the new version, which is probably just as well—because what writer knows what to say about the Irish political situation, anyway, without being offensive? The timing is made current-to-date with a running theme of scientists at work on inventions for war, but that what-and-why won't make any particular impression because it isn't intended to.

The real question posed here is: Can two people marry, and make a success of the marriage, eliminating the love factor? The comedy hasn't the same sock-appeal as "Philadelphia Story," but it should fare well in comparison with most anything else that's similar.

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE? (20th Century-Fox)—Scouts' Honor, if we told you, you wouldn't believe it!

Fred MacMurray is a regretting-it and wishing-he-weren't 4F, in love with a gal named Lucilla (June Haver), who's a flighty little thing, and loved by another gal named Sally (Joan Leslie), who isn't flighty at all. Why do nice boys always fall for the wrong girls, when it would seem just as easy to hand out their love where it's appreciated and given back?

Anyway, MacMurray is a little mixed up about all of that, and there's the story: thinking to clean up an old lamp he finds in a pile of junk turned in as metal for the scrap drive, he rubs the darned thing, and up pops Aladdin's No. 1 little helper.

But of course, the three wishes! One that puts "our Bill" in uniform—but by some strange trick of timing, the uniform of George Washington's Colonial Army; a second that sets him aboard the Santa Maria—the Nina and the Pinta traveling right along side; and the third, which pops him over to New Amsterdam, vintage the 17th century.

THE CORN IS GREEN (Warner Bros.), with Bette Davis in the role Ethel Barrymore played on the stage, and with John Dall making his screen debut as Morgan Evans, Joan Lorring as "the bad little piece," Bessie Watty.

Nigel Bruce, Rhys Williams, Rosalind Ivan and Mildred Dunnock fill out the listing for a cast that's extraordinarily all-just-right.

With all due respect to the thee-ah-tah, this seems a triumph chalked up on the side of the screen as a "best medium." The point of what-price-education is made more impressively, the simple story-with-significance of the English schoolmistress (Bette Davis), and her determined struggle to bring knowledge and enlightenment to a Welsh mining town, is told with greater effect.

THE AFFAIRS OF SUSAN (Hal Wallis Production, released by Paramount)—is the gayly defined tale of how one woman (Joan Fontaine) appears to three separate men. The story accumulates via flash-backs, as each of the three relates his amour to a fourth candidate, who's about to marry the gal.

George Brent is a play producer—he met her first, when she was a naive child of a girl, frank and honest even in situations where the truth wasn't exactly tactful. Fact is, it was embarrassing!

Don DeFore (and by the way, here's a newcomer who'll bear watching!) loved her when she was more on to the ways—and the wiles—of the world. He was a rich lumberman from the West, succeeded in turn by Dennis O'Keefe, author-intellectual.

Joan Fontaine wanted a comedy; she wanted a chance to wear lovely clothes on the screen, to deliver amusing bon mots instead of dramatic, emotional messages. This picture is all those wishes come true.

The Dry Cleaning DRAMA

Is packed with performances that show the way to new hair beauty. There's an unusual twist to this story. Read all about it!!!

By SHIRLEY COOK
BEAUTY EDITOR

The Characters

ARE two of filmdom's loveliest and most versatile lovelies. They are distinctly different. Tierney is slightly on the sultry side! Haver, fluffy and fragile-looking.

They are very much alike—both of them tremendously talented. Both of them beautiful and beautifully groomed.

We give you then, Miss Gene Tierney, of 20th Century's "A Bell For Adano" and Miss June Haver, of the same studio's "Where Do We Go From Here."

We suggest you pay particular attention to the performance they outline on this page.

The Plot

HINGES on hair—any kind of hair in any kind of weather—especially during the summer season when sun aggravates dryness or heat aggravates oiliness. It starts by solving the mystery of cleansing dry brittle locks (the kind blondes so often have) as frequently as is necessary. Another complication arises when the question of oil besets a brunette. Unfavorable working conditions, unavailability of beauty shops and last-minute dates add tension and suspense. A problem picture, really.

June Haver typifies unclouded blonde beauty.

The Action

IT's early evening and a beautiful but bad-tempered girl faces the mirror with a disgusted frown. Threads of grime, not silver, are doing uncomplimentary things to her golden tresses.

Flashback! You see the same damsel in distress just three days before. She is in the midst of a shampoo, from which she emerges, spic and span, on her way to work at the war plant.

Fade-out. She's back at the mirror again. Suddenly her expression changes. She remembers that precious box of dry shampoo powder. Out it comes and with deft fingers, she dry cleans her hair from dull drabness to lively lustre in a mere matter of ten minutes.

How? By drawing powder along each strand of hair from roots to tips; by wiping away all the soiled shampoo powder; by brushing vigorously for a prettier polish.

Now the second part of the story unfolds as we watch a busy housewife bend over a boiling kettle of consomme. Chilled later, yes, but look at that steam now.

Impatiently, this brown-haired beauty brushes back a loose and limp-with-oil lock from her forehead. She glances at the clock, turns off the gas, and marches to her shelf of beauty supplies. You guessed it! She takes down the dry shampoo powder and goes to work—this time on her hair.

The happy ending of this well-planned plot presents two very well-groomed young ladies. The blonde is dancing with her beau. The tip of his chin touches her fragrant cap of curls. The beaming brunette smiles a greeting to her home-coming husband. And he, in turn, kisses her smooth unfurrowed forehead under its shining immaculate crown.

Brownette Gene Tierney exemplifies grooming.

The Highlights

ARE noticeable immediately. Do away with dirt and there's a delightful difference in any girl's hair. Do it in as little time as it takes to dry shampoo and the difference seems miraculous.

The highlights are intensified, not only by the cleansing action of such a beauty bout, but by its stimulation. Tug each strand a bit as you cleanse it and the scalp circulation is considerably pepped up. Brush briskly for beauty and hair takes on a special kind of shine. More stimulating activity—more gleam and glow.

The Moral

SHOULD mean much to any girl. Never let it be said that your hair is in a state where nothing can be done. If your shampoo schedule is a regular weekly one—if you scrub thoroughly and rinse well—and if your coiffure still collapses in oily or dirty disorder right in the middle of the week—learn the dry shampoo method. It's a spur of the moment pickup. It's a good alternate for water and lather if hair is dried by over-exposure to sun. It's mid-week magic for an oil or perspiration soaked scalp.

Lizabeth Scott, tall and tawny blonde recruit from the face and figure trade, born Sept. 29th, 1922 (the place: Scranton, Pa.) . . . Elizabeth, of course, is her real name. She dropped the initial letter for theatrical effect, when she was a stock player on the New York subway circuit. Turned movie star overnight, and now playing her first leading role opposite Robert Cummings in "You Came Along" (Para.) . . . she understudied for Tallulah Bankhead in "Skin of Our Teeth," and came the night when Miss Bankhead couldn't go on. The New York critics gave enthusiastic nods of approval to Lisabeth's handling of the part—her "big break" had come, she had arrived! And there's every reason to believ that Hal Wallis has launched another "important discovery." She's an intense young woman, determined to act—and acting like it.

New and different! A fashion photo sent her to Hollywood.

HERE IS YOUR ERNIE PYLE

WHEN, through one of those strange quirks of army life, Captain Burgess Meredith found himself placed on inactive status and assigned to portray Ernie Pyle in "The Story of G.I. Joe" it was one of the largest orders he had ever been handed.

This was more than an important screen role. It was a responsibility to do right by Ernie Pyle, who's not only endeared himself to millions in this country through his writings, but has inspired a love that's akin to worship among those thousands of G.I.'s overseas, whose lives he's shared and translated into print for the folks back home.

Soldiers everywhere began writing suggestions to Producer Lester Cowan, and one thing they all insisted upon was that the actor who played Pyle must get personally acquainted with him first.

They needn't have worried. When Meredith was chosen for the role, that was his first thought, too.

Meredith and Pyle had met a few times before, but only casually. By the time the script was finished, Pyle was back in this country, resting up at his home in Albuquerque, New Mexico. So Meredith took himself over there and spent two weeks as his guest.

"I don't study a person for little mannerisms, like the way his lips move or the way he blinks his eyes," says Meredith. "I wanted to get at what really makes him tick—his point of view, his reactions, reasons, motives, opinions, etc. Most of the time I was there, we sat around the house talking about this, that, and everything. We'd take long walks sometimes during the day, and sit up late at night, talking over a drink.

"Well, the first thing you find out about Ernie Pyle is that he isn't much different from the G.I. He is a G.I. at heart."

And Captain Meredith is in a position to know about that. He started out as a G.I. himself, having enlisted as a private in February, 1942.

"Pyle's not a great intellectual, and it isn't a big frolic for him over there. It's anguish, just as it's anguish for everybody.

"Another thing people never seem to realize is that Pyle doesn't like this job he's doing. When he's a soldier, slogging around in the mud, he hates it as much as anybody. He gripes and bellyaches about things, just as the boys do. He hates dirt and disorder and discomfort. He's a man that likes

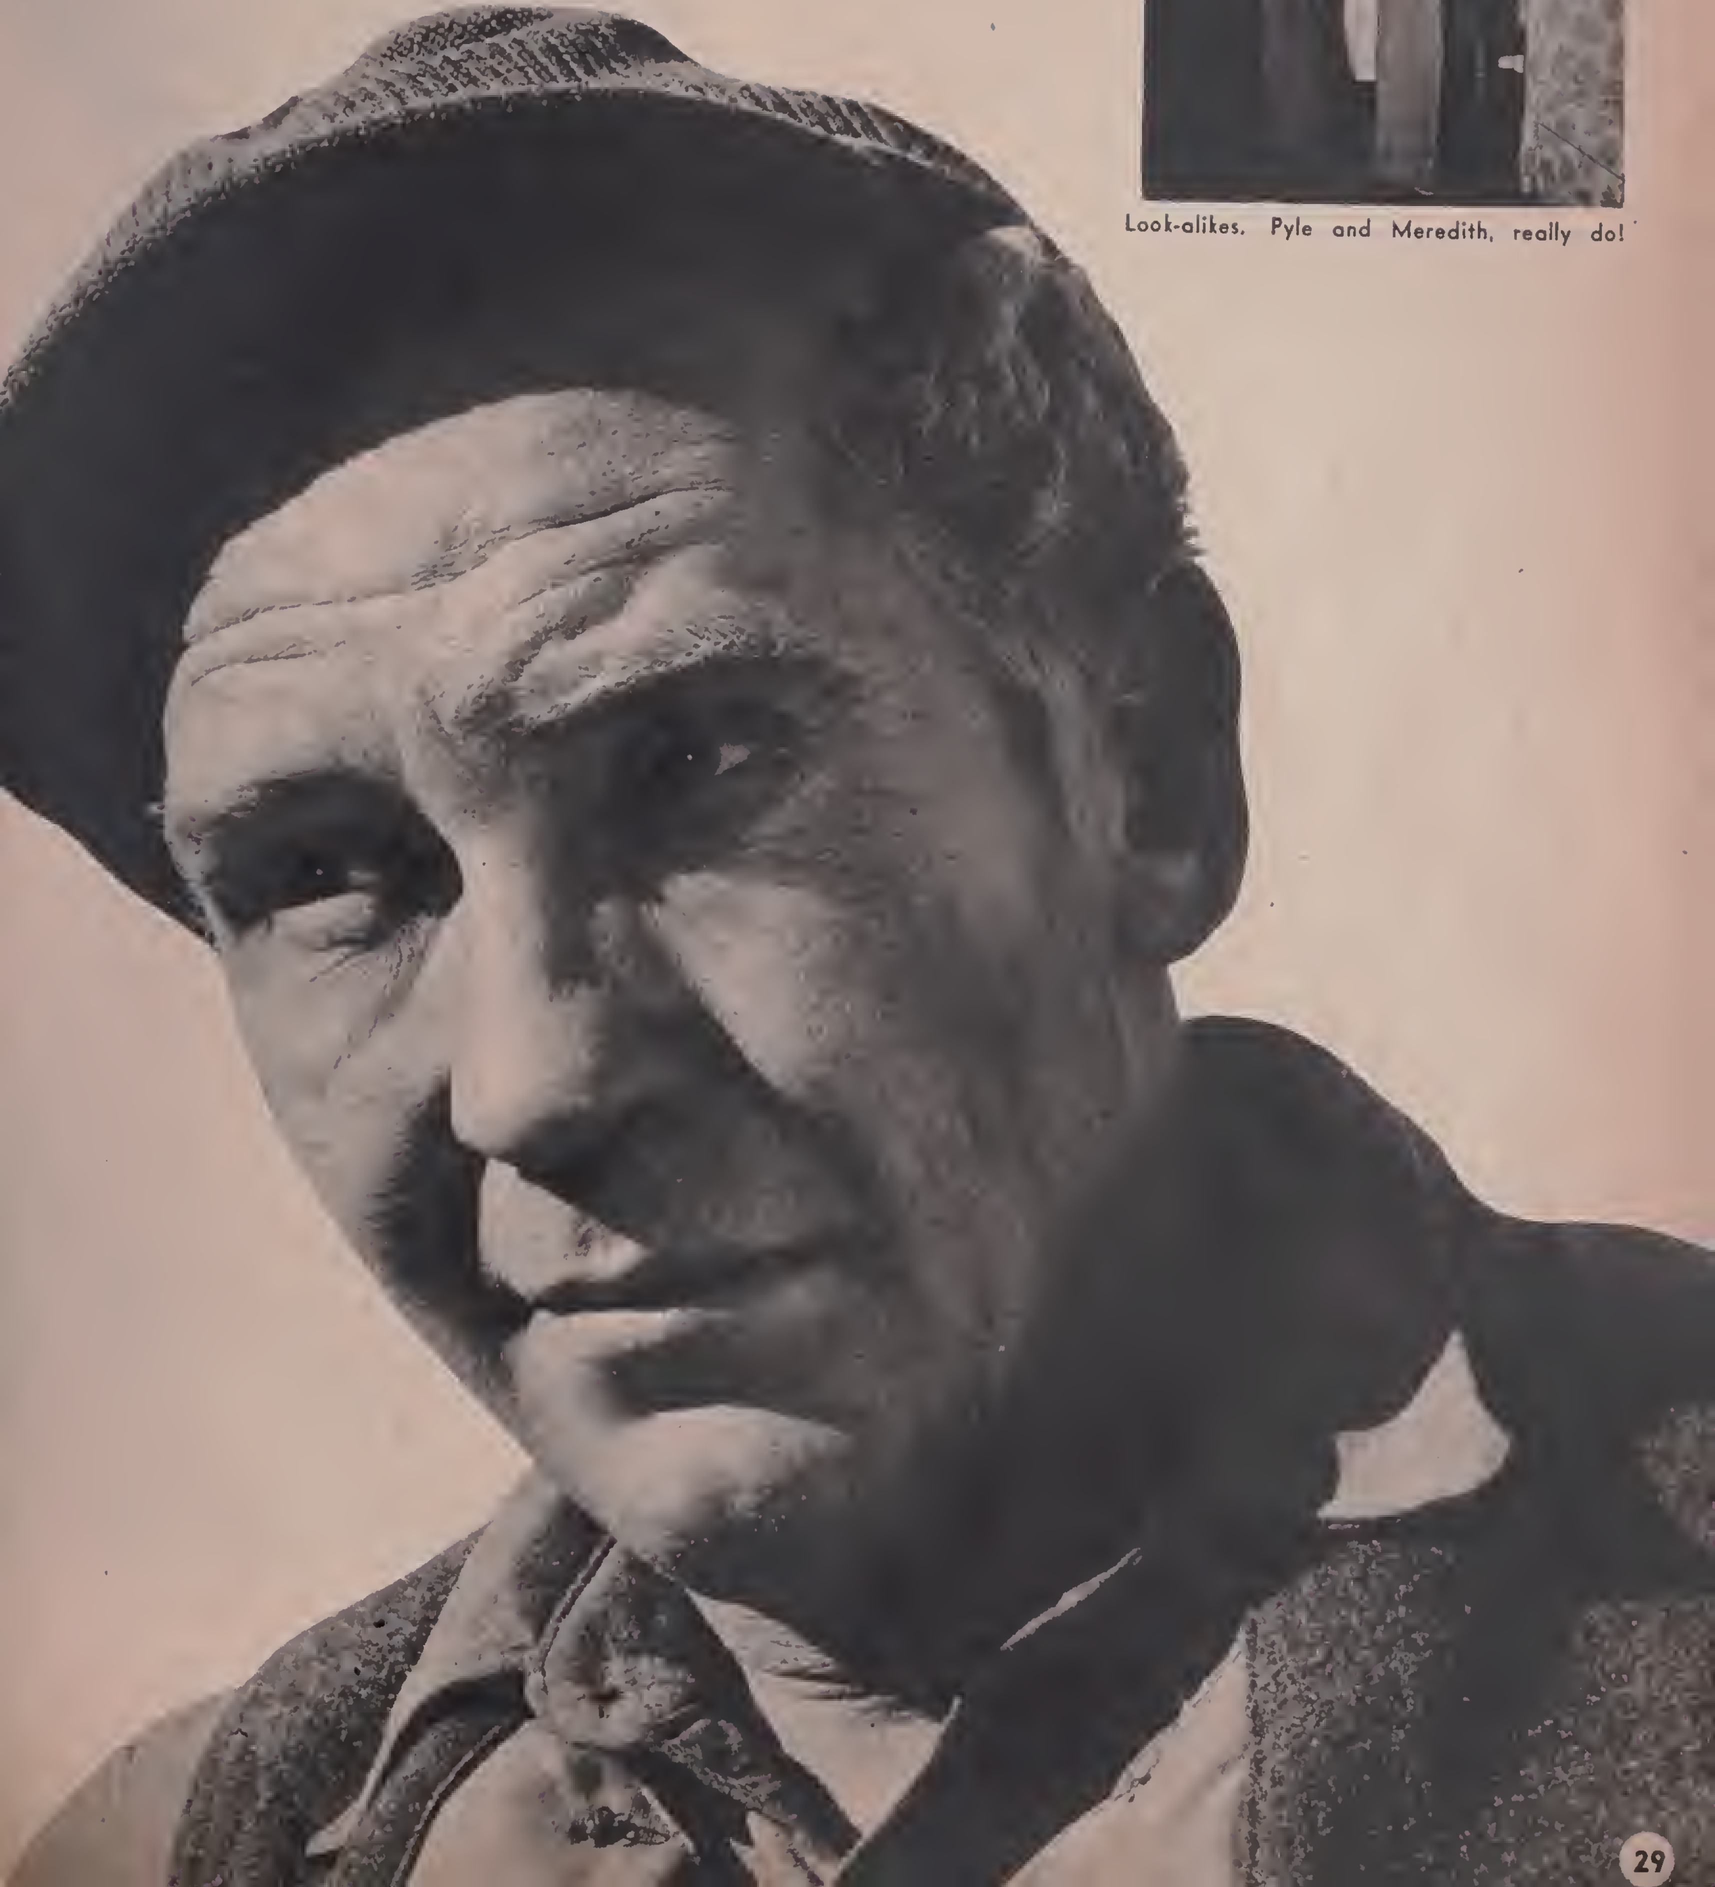
Alias Captain Burgess Meredith, alias Mr. Goddard to the pranksters on set, who liked it when Paulette came to visit and called her husband "Curly"

A surprising marriage? Meredith's answer: "Wouldn't you?"

By G. B. SHALLIN

Look-alikes, Pyle and Meredith, really do!



Joan Caulfield, the 22-year-old girl from New Jersey who scored a hit in Broadway's "Kiss and Tell," makes her film bow in "Miss Susie Slagle"—and everyone in the know predicts it will make her a star

JOAN CAULFIELD

She's what Paramount describes as "All-American." Clear blue eyes, soft golden hair, satiny pink and white skin, and a slimly feminine figure; likes sloppy joe sweaters, all the sports.

BIG NEWS!

By KAY PROCTOR

IT'S a bit difficult to tell you about Joan Caulfield and make her sound real, because she is so completely the antithesis of everything you expect.

For instance, she is 22 (practically an old lady, by Hollywood standards!) and has a solid New York hit, "Kiss and Tell" under her 23-inch belt—yet there is a genuine girlish quality of eagerness, excitement, and unsureness about her that you find in high school seniors about to graduate. She is more than amply blessed with a Dresden doll beauty, but in her great zest and zing for life she seems entirely unaware of it—or at least inclined to discount its importance. And despite her fame and rapidly rising fortune, her Broadway success and the brilliant start she has made in Hollywood, she still is a wholesome, normal American girl who giggles at jokes, gets a bang out of dates, and doesn't "impress" her family worth a darn!

I was sold on Joan half an hour after first meeting her and watching her beat her brains—and her feet—out in learning to dance so that she might have a chance at the dancing role opposite Paul Draper in the forthcoming "Blue Skies," with Bing Crosby. It takes grit to work that hard for nothing more than a chance.

You'll be sold on her too, I'm sure, after seeing her in her first picture, "Miss Susie Slagle," opposite Sonny Tufts. All of her charm and personality comes through with a bang. Besides which, she also proves she can act.

No wonder Paramount is doing nip-ups about having her under contract. They've got something in Joan that is neither "too little nor too late," from top man to messenger girl they know it! Best of all, her potentialities obviously have barely been scratched; it is not at all audacious to predict that within a year Joan will have earned a top place among the top stars of the movies.

Refreshingly enough, the story of Joan's road to success is not one of those dreary tales of heartbreak, coffee-and-doughnuts, and try, try again. In fact it was so absurdly free from the usual hardships and disappointments as to be almost unbelievable. Or at least proof that Fate isn't always an old sourpuss, hellbent on making things tough to test one's determination. The breaks were with her, all the way.

Take her background, for example. She was born in Orange, New Jersey, where her successful businessman (Continued on page 67)

"Actually," Joan says, "I'm not pretty." Oh, no?

Another model who turned actress.

A left-hander, but she knows how!

G. Abbott gave Joan her first break.

All of a sudden a guy named Dana Andrews comes

By JESSICA RYAN

HE'S rugged, six feet tall, with brown hair and eyes, and a marvelous crooked grin. He falls for a girl named "Laura" and there's publicity; there's talk. There's a personal appearance tour with frenzied mobs of fans grabbing his coat and tie. There's a fan problem to be reckoned with as mail pours in by the sackful.

Dana Andrews is a star. All of a sudden, he's "in."

A guy named Dana Andrews comes along who's had a Purpose in his life . . . family and career. So he has a wife named Mary Todd, who used to be an actress but she gave it up for him. "Which," Dana will explain with little urging, "is the best possible set-up for marrage in Hollywood. Pictures are a crazy sort of business. They're demanding. They require a rigid concentration. A layman, or woman, would have a hard time getting used to such a life."

But Mary? She understands what Dana's up against. She understands it when he stews about a part. She can talk with him about his work, intelligently, helpfully. And that's important to an actor . . . talking about his work. And, wryly, Dana says, "She can criticize me, too!"

Dana's got a boy named David, son of his first wife who died some years ago. And Dana would have you look for non-existent gray in his hair because David is eleven years old. He's got (Continued on page 60)

Just right for Fanny Rosa, in "Hungry Heart." The role is hers, if and when she gets to Eng.

Jean directed Gerry's last pic, "3 Strangers"; they've since finished "Nobody Lives Forever".

The Dublin dynamo was London filmstar at 19; an Orson Welles play brought her to the U.S.

A FRIEND, asked to describe the personality of Geraldine Fitzgerald, once said, "She's the sort of girl you'd expect to find living in the great house at the corner . . . the house that's supposed to be haunted in a friendly, merry sort of way. She's eminently sensible and genuine, as you would expect her father's daughter to be; although she is beautifully at home in gossamer and velvet, she is equally comfortable in blouses and skirts, flat heels and heavy wool knee-high stockings. Her heavy, reddish hair falls in soft, thick bundles about her somewhat freckled face. Her accent is enchanting. (And intriguing, too, is the other side of her nature—like the other side of the moon. She's otherworldly, pixie-ish and misty.) Remember the stories about fairies' garments sometimes found in a woods—constructed of the finest of white linen, but still the property of problematical beings? Well, that's Fitzgerald: of durable though dainty texture, and completely elfin."

Such a description would normally be suspect of exaggeration, but this particular speaker has proof, and witnesses. Cases can be cited.

I REMEMBER
The stump of a tree in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, on my way to school. It looked like a crouching bear. I was six and I believed it was a bear, waiting to spring out and tear me to pieces. I was terrified of it and used to walk blocks out of my way so as to avoid it.

My mother singing in her kitchen. She usually sang Polish songs—she came from Poland—or the Ukrainian airs my father had taught her. Remembering that, I can smell her freshly baked bread, the soup that always simmered on her stove, the odd spices she used, and the wonderful aroma of whatever fruit she was preserving . . .

Watching my father take part in the Russian plays put on in our parish in Hamtramck, Detroit, where we moved when I was eight. It wasn't a large stage but it seemed enormous to me when I was given child roles. I would stand in the wings, waiting to go on, stiff with stage fright, my hands icy . . . until my cue came.

I LIKE
Poker, shaslik, driving in the rain, basketball, dreaming with my eyes open.

I DISLIKE
Liver, gladhanders, people who keep fussing about something that's already over, suspense.

I HAVE NEVER Seen a horse race or been interested in race tracks;
Cared for night clubs;
Been married.

I DON'T REMEMBER
When I didn't love music, any kind—popular, classic, jazz, swing, symphonic—it doesn't matter. I choose it according to my mood.

I WISH

Gracie Fields

By LESLIE TRAINE

THE audience laughed and clapped, clapped and laughed; they roared: "Gracie!" and stamped their feet. Gracie Fields, out of breath with so much singing and dancing, made a final bow and somersaulted off the stage.

The leading lady of another act on the bill was addressing a group of chorus girls who had been watching Gracie from the wings. "That Gracie—" she was saying, "she's nobody. She goes about pickin' the brains of her betters, she does. She can't think up an act for herself, she can't!"

"G'arn, yer jealous, that's what!" grinned one of the chorus girls. They all romped away laughing. But to Gracie the sour comment rang true.

"It hit me where I lived," she told me. "All of a sudden I saw that she was right. I did imitations of popular star turns, sang other people's songs. I might have been clever, but I wasn't original. That girl did me a big favor. I made up my mind then that I wouldn't be just a funny shadow of somebody else. I'd be different." She screwed up her mouth and narrowed her eyes, thoughtfully. "I went about learning a bit from this one and a bit from that one. I tried to make real people I'd met just a little funnier than they were. I've been called on occasion 'the One and Only Gracie,' but as a matter of fact I'm a combination of a lot of folks I've known through the years, plus a little extra of my own."

The star of "Molly, Bless Her!" and "Holy Matrimony" sat by her green-tiled swimming-pool looking very smart in a trim dark suit and French felt hat, not at all the plump and ruddy Gracie (Continued on page 57)

THAT MAN

STEALING the glamour boys' stuff out Hollywood way is a little hungry looking guy with a voice like a wistful whisper and a knack of making make-believe seem real. Having racked himself up a comfortable fortune in the past fifteen years, writing hit songs like "Stardust," he's now out to hit the high spots in a new career—acting.

By this time you'll have seen his name in the main titles of Warners' "To Have And Have Not", as Cricket,—the derelict piano player with the roving eyes and haunting voice—and in RKO's "Johnny Angel", as Celestial O'Brien—the taxi driver with a cupid complex.

So you'll know what we mean when we start raving about one Hoagland Carmichael!

That man Hoagy at forty-three is one of those utterly charming guys who knocks you clear out by not realizing he's charming. He's that way in real life, and his easy charm picks up on the screen. And it's six, two, and even he's going to ride straight to stardom on that ticket.

Slight of build, about five feet three inches tall, Hoagy weighs about 130 pounds—a tough 130 pounds, kept wiry and lean by constant workouts on the tennis court. He has brown hair and brown eyes, and a slim long face with rather severe features, with a Noel Coward-ish quality of handsomeness. Most of all, he has an awareness that makes other people very much aware of him.

To Mrs. Howard Hawks, wife of the director of To HAHN, goes the responsibility for Hoagy's current metamorphosis (Continued on page 73)

HOAGY!

Lucien Lee Bowman III tips us all off to a good thing as he reaches for his Bond.

Beau Bowman streaked to fame at record-busting speed, but only after 5 years of "B" pix!

GALLANT GENT

By MAXINE ARNOLD

LEE BOWMAN is a streamlined, modern cavalier—Hollywood's answer to the days when knighthood was in flower. Handsome and dashing, but courteous, thoughtful and kind; sophisticated without the sting.

You can easily picture Lee's putting down his cloak for you to step on. Except that you feel he would have steered you around the puddle in the first place; that with his customary forethought, he'd have drawn up a blueprint of it and penciled in a detour. But if plans went afoul . . . then the cloak. But assuredly!

Meeting Bowman for the first time, he hits you dead center—always perfectly groomed, his lithe physique usually in tweeds, his dark good looks highlighted by large hazel eyes that are kind and twinkling yet have a forever ember kind of look.

You feel that he's sincerely interested in knowing you. For there's none of the blasé business about Bowman. He genuinely likes people . . . which explains why he seldom turns down any invitations to parties, gatherings of any kind,

He loves to study types and characteristics of the species, general and the specific.

There's nothing temperamental about the Columbia star. At the studio, he's always placidly unruffled, always cooperative, never stalls, and always keeps appointments.

He's very popular with all studio personnel. Particularly with the "Little Joes." Because of an extraordinary memory that lets him call them all by first names. You'll find him going down the line in the morning, from the time he enters the studio gate till he arrives on the sound stage: "Hi ya', Bill" . . . "How does it go, Joe?" . . . or, "Say, Tom, what do you hear from the kid overseas?"

Never irritable, he has a fast wit that's saved many a situation. None of the crazy comedy stuff. No practical gags, but a well-bred sense of humor that makes just being around him, and talking with him, great fun.

He talks about his wife, Helene; his step-daughter, also Helene; and his baby son, Lucien Lee Bowman III. And he pulls out a red leather series of picture frames that unreels like a picture postcard folder, showing 16-months-old Lucien Lee (more commonly known as "Beau") on his tummy . . . his back . . . on one side . . . Gypsy Rose Lee-ed. Everything but in make-up for Hamlet.

Then he draws forth a fat brown alligator wallet to see if there are any more pictures he's missed. Lee's a perpetual "junk toter" and carries so much stuff around with him, most of it in this wallet which bulges like a brief case and holds everything but a last year's world almanac.

Meanwhile he's chewing on a handsome silver and black cigarette holder, which is sometimes with cigarette . . . more often not. Helene bought it for him while they were in New York recently (when Lee was there making a series of public appearances and radio shots, in connection with "Tonight and Every Night"). Now, because he keeps it in his mouth almost constantly, Helene says she's "almost sorry" she gave it to him . . . "because the darned thing has almost changed his whole personality. He looks so stern and business-like, and he isn't you know!"

Bowman's pet ambitions outside of acting are, in order of their appearance: writing and painting. He's written three short stories in the past few years, has sent them off promptly, and editors have returned them the same way. He describes himself as the kind of writer who gets dazzling beginnings and brilliant endings, with nothing in between.

"Right now I'm working on a perfectly wonderful opening for a mystery," he tells you, "about a woman taxi driver—really something! I'm going zipping along, and then boom! There I am, stuck in the middle. It would make a swell movie, too.

"I can't understand it. The boy and girl practically flow into each other's arms. But what they talk about flies out the window. Maybe I should write the beginning and end, and paint in the middle," he laughs.

He's not only an expert victory gardener, but is on the employee list of a local airplane plant!

His urge to paint really originated in his wife's mind, after Helene read a magazine article to the effect that "It's FUN to get out and paint!" Tra la la. So she decided to buy Lee some paints for Christmas, and let him see for herself.

His first subject was the family garage. And though he'd never painted anything beyond a small cut with iodine, he has had utmost confidence. "I can do anything," he says, "until I lay an egg in it."

This is Lee's motto, and one that's really stood by him during discouraging years in Hollywood—that he can do anything until they prove he can't.

It all started with a young dancer friend of his, during those first hectic days in New York when they were attending a dancing school operated by one of the Condos Brothers. One day Lee was approached by an agent who'd caught his dancing (which is more than pictures have) and wanted him to go to Rio de Janeiro to star in a big club.

"Do you think you can handle it?" the agent asked.

Lee was a little unsure and said hesitantly, "I don't know . . ."

"Don't ever say that!" the dancer girlfriend scolded afterward. "Say you can do ANYTHING. Let them tell you you can't!"

Though he didn't go to Rio, that motto has seen Lee through some tough decisions, since he left his home in Cincinnati to try his luck in the field of drama.

Born the son of two Southerners, Lee Bowman Sr. and Elizabeth Brunson Bowman, who moved to Ohio and made a comfortable living in real estate, Lee has one sister, Rowena, who became a not-too-successful Broadway actress.

Lee was still in high school then. Ask him now if his sister's career had anything to do with his going to Broadway, and he says that if he'd thought twice about her career he'd never have had the nerve to go.

He studied law at the University of Cincinnati, but decided against a legal career when his friends who graduated from law school couldn't get jobs. He quit right then and there, and headed for New York and the American Academy of Dramatic Art.

Actually he never did "starve on Broadway." As he says (reasonably enough), (Continued on page 82)

Laraine Day—her story, which has a moral, being told at an important climax in her life; her home, because it seems to reflect that "new self"

By KATE HOLLIDAY

As inevitable as four times out of five—or six or seven—stardom changes people for the worst. Nice gals and nice guys see their names in lights and suddenly decide they are important.

But it doesn't always happen. And come to think of it, the stars who remain stars are usually swell. It's the Cinderellas and the Prince Charmings who get the big-shot complexes.

Sometimes, too, stardom is an education for a player. It changes him, or her—yes, distinctly for the better. And that's what happened to Laraine Day.

Laraine admits it. She says now that she was a pretty dismal character, a few years ago. I wouldn't go as far as to say that, but confidentially—I do see a difference!

Laraine, you remember, was "discovered" by an agent named Marty Martyn, in a Little Theater in Long Beach, Calif. Marty took her to MGM, where she signed a contract. MGM put her in a series of pictures having to do with a guy named Kildare. She played a nurse. She played a nurse for so long, in fact, that she finally rebelled. Loud and long, she yelled (through Marty) that she wanted to do something else, please. So finally, the studio killed her off—dramatically speaking, that is.

Then followed a period during which the moguls of Culver City sent scripts to Laraine, she read them, and she sent them back. One messenger boy became old in the service of his studio, traipsing up and down the hills between MGM and the Day menage. The answer to this was that the scripts were, in the parlance of the trade, lousy. At least they weren't suited to Laraine's talents, and she wanted nothing to do with them.

But at long last—and again, principally through Marty Martyn—Miss Day got the break she had been looking for. She was borrowed by RKO to play opposite Cary Grant in "Mr. Lucky." And from that moment both the Day career and Miss Day herself have bloomed.

She went on to do "The Story of Dr. Wassell," with Gary Cooper, "Bride By Mistake" (again at RKO), "Keep Your Powder Dry," with Lana Turner and Susan Peters, and back to RKO for "Those Endearing Young Charms." All of which adds up to making her "one of the hottest actresses in town;" both from the box-office and the personal standpoint, she's strictly Grade-A.

I review all this ancient history because I think it all has a bearing on "The New Day." It points up the changes, chief of which, as Laraine herself says, is: "I became tolerant for the first time in my life.

"When I first got into pictures," Laraine goes on to explain, "and first began meeting a lot of people, I lived my way. If someone didn't do as I did, I skipped him. If someone failed to react to something just as I would have reacted, I decided that I (Continued on page 85)

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH

Different in every role she's ever played . . . and to quote the lady herself, "Not one of them is the real Jennifer Jones!"

By ALICE L. TILDESLEY

"NEVER serious be, nor true,
And your wish will come to you—
And if that makes you happy, kid,
You'll be the first it ever did."

And for proof of what Dorothy Parker claims, in such a negative sort of way, probably there's no better example than one Jennifer Jones—who is serious (about things that are important, I mean), and whose motto could very well be "The truth, the whole truth and nothing but the. . . ." Well, you know the rest.

Fact is, she's such a little truth-teller herself, is Jennifer, that she can't imagine why anyone should ever want to tell anything not strictly the truth. No, not even when it's a publicity story. And let's admit it—publicity stories are sometimes a little exaggerated, because people who write them have somehow or other acquired the idea that every good story has to be exaggerated. That when people tell amusing tales, you know they never happened quite that way; they must be built up or they won't be funny.

When such stories are suggested to Jennifer, however, she objects, "But it won't be true! Wouldn't you rather print the truth?"

I know several little patches of truth about Jennifer . . .

The other day her hairdresser, who is expecting the stork while her husband is on duty overseas, had a slight accident on the lot. "I'm perfectly all right," she insisted, after she had picked herself up. The tendency of busy people is to believe that any person is all right if she says so; only Jennifer wasn't satisfied.

"You go right over to the hospital for X-rays," she insisted, "you can't take chances with babies." Further, she called both doctor and hospital and made herself responsible for the expense.

That patch goes right along with the next one. Jennifer's stand-in was taken ill suddenly and rushed to an emergency hospital. It was the star who remembered to call the girl's mother to tell her. "Please don't worry," she pleaded, "he's a wonderful doctor, she's sure to get well. And I'll pay for the operation." Which she quietly did.

Jennifer was made up for her role as halfbreed in "Duel In The Sun," when I saw her. Her sunlit brown hair fell in a windblown mane; her eyes were sometimes clear amber, sometimes velvet brown; the full blouse of her black peasant dress kept falling down over one luscious shoulder; straw sandals encased her restless feet.

While she waited for Gregory Peck to change for another clothes test with her before the cameras, she worked herself into her role. She didn't know anyone was watching, but I doubt if she would have cared. She practised walking with a sliding step, weaving just a little; she mounted and descended a short flight of steps, moving with the grace of a cat or a panther; she handled her full (Continued on page 70)

You've visited the local dime-stores (imagine Ann shopping anywhere but at the May Co.!) Here are the fixings for what looks like a gay time.

HOW IS

WHAT the stars do on the screen is called movie business, what they do on their own time is their own business. But what are they really like, what relaxation do they seek after "a hard day at the studio?" Well, it's like this—some do and some don't. Some like sports, some go into private-life hibernation between picture assignments, some make the rounds of the popular Hollywood nitespots, some go to movies—yet even! And there are others, like we say, who don't do any of "all this and that," as here listed. But this much is sure . . . the Hollywood younger set goes for parties.

It can be an informal evening, with just a few friends dropping in . . . or a larger guestfall, "admittance by invitation only" . . . or a Sunday brunch gathering, or an al fresco supper with weiners roasted on the backyard grill. Ann Rutherford's was a "make your own hat" party. Different, original, laughs-every-minute!

Bob Hutton is the shy type, they say. Says who, and who're they? We offer this photo evidence as how not to represent a typical wallflower, male.

Any actor can compete for a Hollywood Oscar. But a Harvey-with-moustache? That was the originality prize awarded Bracken.

Benny Goodman rehearses his new band at Col. studios, N.Y.

GREETINGS, boys and girls Get Spring off your minds for a few minutes, and trip along with me and find out what's cooking on the musical stove

Benny Goodman has a big band again And high time. When Benny had agency trouble last year he decided to break up his orchestra and just make occasional guest appearances on radio as a soloist Then Billy Rose came along with a good offer for the "Seven Lively Arts" show. So Goodman organized a sextet, went into the musical comedy with star billing and received rave notices from the tough New York critics. But you know Benny—he's the restless type So he left the show in March and reorganized a large band which he built around his sextet And he has two new vocalists, Bob Hayden and Jane Harvey At the moment, Benny's plans aren't too definite, but I think it's a safe bet that he'll swing around the country playing theatres and one-nighters

Billie Rogers has joined Jerry Wald's orchestra. Besides holding down a berth in the trumpet section, Billie will also handle some of the vocals. She had plenty of headaches with her own band, so she decided to hold off on being a lady orchestra leader until after the war

Her husband, Jack Archer, is also on the Wald payroll as band manager.

It looks like Tommy Dorsey's male vocalist problems have finally straightened out, in the person of Stuart Foster, who used to sing with Guy Lombardo. I never paid much attention to Stuart when he was with the Lombardo band, but I must say that he did impress me when I heard him with Tommy.

The brothers Dorsey are very happy over a deal which they recently signed with Producer Charles Rogers. They will co-star in a big budget musical to be called "My Brother Leads A Band." It will be a story about the lives and careers of Jimmy and Tommy, to go into production some time this summer. From what Tommy told me about the proposed script, it should turn out to be a sensation. Maybe this picture will be the one, finally, to show musicians as they really are. And hey, Mr. Rogers—inasmuch as you're the producer, how about signing some of the great musicians and singers who have worked with Jimmy and Tommy through the years and have had a lot to do with the success of both bands?

CROONERS' CORNER:

Frankie Boy has mapped out a strenuous schedule for himself before he goes overseas in June or July to sing for the G.I's. In addition to his radio show, he will make many camp and hospital appearances in this country, record several new tunes, and will speak before various organizations and schools on the subjects of juvenile delinquency and racial intolerance. Frank is very sincere about wanting to speak before the younger members of our population. He says he is so sick of hearing all the talk about anti-this and anti-that, and he feels he can be of some help in the fight against intolerance.

You can chalk up the Dick Haymes' marital difficulties to that old story, career trouble. Mrs. Haymes, who was Joanne Marshall, before her marriage to Dick, wants to accept one of the many film offers she has had, but Richard says no. At this writing, I know they are not planning a divorce, but people change their minds rapidly in Hollywood. However, I for one think they will straighten everything out, because they are really in love and are both crazy about their two adorable children. Incidentally, I met Dick's mother, Marguerite Haymes, recently in New York. She is charming and most attractive and looks young enough to be a sister to the Haymes boys. Mrs. Haymes is a well-known vocal teacher and has just published a book called "Make The Most Of Your Voice." She told me that when she first began teaching (Continued on page 58)

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

By Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

"Animal Kingdom" is Jane's new picture, with Jack Carson, Ann Sheridan, and Dennis Morgan.

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am coming to you with a very serious problem. I have fallen in love with Van Johnson. I cry myself to sleep every night, I have fallen down in my school grades, and my parents say they are going to take me to a doctor unless I stop acting this way. I have tried to talk myself out of this, but still love him. Can you help me?

Deborah

Dear Deborah:

If you will stop and consider your situation, you will realize that you are in love, not with the real Van Johnson, but a Van Johnson you have built up in your imagination.

Even though Van Johnson is a wonderful person, there is the greatest possibility that if you met him, you would find that he is not at all like the person you think you love. In fact, you might not like him at all.

To love someone—really—you must know him. Your personalities must agree and you must have a community of interests. The fact that you like his looks, or are impressed with his popularity, does not mean a thing. Why don't you take a common-sense viewpoint of this situation? Forget your imaginary love, and take an interest in someone you know.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am now a senior in high school, and have never been dated nor attended any of the school functions, because I am six feet five inches tall. The boys just look upon me as a nice, but tall, girl. I imagine that I'm attractive enough, and have tried to wear clothes to offset my height, but to no avail.

From one woman to another, can you help me?

Marion

Dear Marion:

I think I have the very solution to your problem. In Los Angeles (and I suppose this is true of other localities), we have an organization called the Tip Toppers, which is especially for extra tall folks. To join it, a woman must be six feet one inch tall, or better, and a man six feet three inches or more. If you will get in touch with your local Chamber of Commerce, you probably will be able to get information as to how to contact this organization. This group plans various functions for its members, such as dances, bowling, etc., and I know you would enjoy its activities.

Best of luck,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am eighteen and in love with a boy two years older. My folks disapprove of our going together because of his nationality. He is of German descent, and his sister, who doesn't like me, has been telling his folks a lot of lies which they believe, as they do not like me either. Neither my boy friend nor I has done anything for which they should dislike us. In fact, we have done everything to make them like us, but it doesn't do any good.

My problem is: Should we marry, knowing the resentment of our parents? Please help us.

Janet

Dear Janet:

Your letter has me a bit confused, but I gather that the situation is this: Your parents object to your boy friend because of his nationality, while his parents object to you because of the false statements his sister has made to them.

One of the hoped-for objectives of this present war is to do away with all such prejudices, and I am sure that if your boy friend is a true and loyal American, even of German descent, you can win your parents over by presenting the case in its true light. His parents will have to be convinced that they have formed a wrong impression of you, based on these false stories, and this can only be done by your own conduct. Let it be such that they will know you are incapable of the actions attributed to you.

To me, a more important objection to your marriage, than either of the above, is the fact that your boy friend is too young to take on the responsibilities of marriage. Marriage is something more than "and they lived happily ever after." It involves the financial support and care of a wife, and until a boy reaches at least majority, I do not think he should undertake it.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I was married in September, 1941, drafted in February, 1943, and went overseas in July, 1943. My wife's letters were cheerful and steady up until October, 1944. Then they started getting cold and impersonal.

Through my family I got the story. It seems that my wife met a man in a city 50 miles from my home. She thought she was in love with him. That accounted for the cold letters. It appears that he has taken a considerable amount of money from her and has left her a very unhappy and disillusioned woman. Now she writes and begs me to forgive her, and not to stop loving her. She admits going out, but swears that she has done nothing wrong.

I still love her. That's what makes my decision all the harder, although my family and friends still think that she is no good. A lot of things I've found out may just be idle gossip. Should I give her another chance?

Carl

Dear Carl:

I am inclined to say that you should give your wife another chance, since your love for her seems big enough to overlook her mistake. You know, wives of servicemen are having a pretty lonely time too, and while it is a great tragedy to you both that this had to happen, your wife has had a rugged lesson. It may be that it will have taught her to appreciate your love and straightforwardness all the more, by comparison. And, as you say, the case may have been grossly exaggerated by idle gossip.

In these unsettled days, we must recognize that people are more prone to emotional upsets, and while I am not condoning your wife's conduct, I do think if you can find it in your heart to forgive her, it would be worthwhile of the screen. "That was conceit, not ambition, mind ye. Bless you, it was me mother had the ambition! I've none. I just want to fumble about me own home and keep a little busy I always say I'd like to have a bit of a tea-house when I'm old." She lapsed into Lancaster dialect. "It must be just big enough so I can do everything meself if I can't get help. I'd like it down by the ocean below me little place in Capri. Me husband, Monty Banks, says I'm nuts, but I think I'm right. Being just a little busy is good for the old.

"The first house I ever owned was in Capri. I had to get all me family settled; this one and that one had to have a home or a little business; but finally I got money together to buy a place for me to end me days, and when I saw Capri I knew I'd found what I wanted. It was the loveliest spot I'd ever seen.... Now I've seen Santa Monica, California and we have this little place; it's joost as lovely and so like! Even the walk to the beach is almost the same.

"To get back to Capri: Trouble was I couldn't seem to get me tongue around the language. I'd say to a carpenter: 'Build me a little something over here, will ye?' and I'd go away for a bit. When I got back, I'd find he'd built me a little something else over there. I was worried. I thought I'd better be finding me a man who could speak the language. About then a girl from California come along and married the Mayor of Capri. I shoulda thought of that, I said to meself. I realized I hadn't much chance of marrying any other man in Capri, not being there long enough, so it was a miracle when I met Monty Banks. Italian is his own tongue and now I can leave everything to him."

War brought an end to pleasant sojourns in Capri. The Red Cross occupied Gracie's home after the Allies took it over until a sea mine blew up nearby. Now the place, what's left of it, is boarded up awaiting peace.

"Grace Stansfield" is the name on the birth records of Rochdale, Lancaster, England. Gracie's father, Fred Stansfield, was a mechanic and handy man; her mother did laundry for the actresses in the theatrical boarding house next door to their modest home. Incurably stagestruck, Mrs. Stansfield made up her mind that Gracie should have a career. When the child was six, her training began. Each week, with money saved from her mother's meager earnings, Gracie was sent to the local theater with instructions to watch the stars, learn their songs and come home and imitate them.

If she couldn't get all the words of a song, or hadn't caught an actor's mannerisms at one performance, Gracie had to use her wits to get a second look. There was no second sixpence. Sometimes, she'd hang around waiting for the doorman to look the other way, then slip past him and hide in the wings. Sometimes a friendly musician would smuggle the child into the orchestra pit; but come what might, Gracie had to appear before the neighbors every week with at least one new number.

Presently her mother decided it was time Gracie went to work, and she got her a job in a juvenile revue. Stars of the show were the two daughters of the manager, who gave them dancing lessons every afternoon Gracie showed up for the lessons, too, only to be curtly told to stick to imitations. Whether he liked it or not, however, the manager had her for a pupil, for Gracie from the back of the dark theater watched each new routine, practicing silently with two forefingers and later trying out steps in her room. Mastering enough for a short dance, Gracie did it as a second chorus for one of her songs and brought down the house. That ended her revue engagement.

By the time she was twelve, she was one of Clara Coverdale's Dainty Dots, touring the provinces. But truant officers caught up with the act, and Gracie was returned to school. Later she went into the Rochdale mill as a cotton winder.

"When I was in the mill, I used to think how wonderful it would be to act," recalled Gracie. "Not that I was ambitious, but in the theater you get up at eleven.... And now I'm in the movies, and have to get up at six. I might as well have stayed in the mill!"

She lost the mill job because she imitated the foreman. And there she was back in the juvenile revues.

"Me mother wouldn't let me be just one of the chorus kids, havin' fun and kickin' me legs a bit. She'd write: 'I see you and So-and-so are in the same town. Can you sing her songs?' And I'd write back: 'She's no good, Ma. I have 'er down pat. I know all she knows.' I knew everything in those days. Trouble was I had to prove it when I got 'ome. Me mother had all the neighborhood in to hear me. I kept tellin' her how good I was, and that was me downfall. 'If you're so good, miss,' she said, 'out ye go on a solo turn.' "

The solo turn of the Lancaster Lark stopped the show for an hour. At sixteen, Gracie was a featured performer with provincial musical comedy companies, getting five pounds (roughly twenty dollars) a week. At seventeen, her name went up in lights. Archie Pitt, the comedian playing opposite her at the time, wrote a revue for her called "Mr. Tower of London," which became a seven-year smash hit in London. She got $500 a week and married the comedian. He died some years later.

People try to explain the secret of Gracie's success. Her art is partly pantomime, partly vocal tricks, says one critic. No, it's all in her power to evoke tears or laughter at will, says another. It's because she's one of the people, asserts a third. But others lay stress on the kind things Gracie has done all her life. No actor, down on his luck, ever appealed to her in vain. Her capacity for pity is inexhaustible.

Gracie's first professional earnings amounted to a dollar and a half a week, but Gracie shared that with the less fortunate as willingly as she shared the vast sums she made years later when she was top-earning star of Great Britain. When she was doing two shows a day at London's Palladium and Coliseum, she also sang in prisons, hospitals and veterans' homes, not to mention the times she sang from hotel windows to crowds collected outside crying: "We want Gracie!"

Rochdale, her home town, held a celebration when her four millionth phonograph record was made, and citizens presented her with the Freedom of Rochdale, including a silver burial casket and free tram rides In return, Gracie hired a hall and invited 500 townsmen to a London high tea.

Her most spectacular honor came in 1938 when at Buckingham Palace King George VI presented her with a rose-colored ribbon and the badge of Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire.

In 1939, she became dangerously ill. While she hovered between life and death, Queen Mary came to the hospital to see her. So did hundreds of other friends of all ages and classes. Gracie could see no one, but she is sure that the outpouring of affection drew her back from the grave When war broke out in September that year, her doctor warned her she must rest for a year, but within a month she was singing in eight army camps a day. She toured hospitals, camps and factories bucking up British morale, was the first entertainer to go to France—but she came back from this tour on a stretcher.

After Dunkirk, Gracie toured this country for British war charities, working without salary and paying the expenses of accompanist and secretary. She still gives benefits for war charities and makes regular hospital tours. The day we met, she was about to set out for Santa Barbara's hospitals and rehabilitation centers.

"The poor lads are often so ill they don't crack a smile," she said, "Sometimes I say to the nurses: 'Surely this one won't care to be bothered with me,' but they always urge me to go in. 'He can't laugh, but he'll like to tell people you sang to him,' they say Maybe they're wrong, but I take the chance."

Gracie has toured Africa, Sicily, Malta and Canada, and sets out in June for New Zealand, Australia and the Far East.

"They tell me Australia's worse than England for expectin' ye to shout at them," she observed. "When I go anywhere at 'ome, people scream: 'Ah there, Gracie! How are ye, Gracie?' and expect me to scream back: 'Hello! Glad to see ye! How's the baby?' and so on at the top of me lungs, wavin' me arms above me head all the while. It's fair exhaustin'.

"If I was the Queen, I could just bend me head a bit, now and then raisin' a couple fingers to signal, or maybe only smilin', and they'd be pleased But no, I'm Gracie. If I did that, they'd say: 'Look at 'er, she's gone stuffy, that Gracie. 'Oo does she think she is?' So I have to bounce up and down and yell and go into contortions waving. . . But I warn you I shall get on a boat when me tour's over and lie flat on me back in a deck chair, me mouth shut like a trap all the way 'ome"

On the night of Gracie's last benefit before going to America in 1936 the theater in Dublin, Ireland, was crowded to the eaves She had been warned that her ship sailed at midnight and she must leave the stage in plenty of time. But the audience kept begging for just one more Even when she'd sung her final chorus, throngs gathered around the theater shouting: "We want Gracie!" and blocked her way. The manager arranged that she leave by way of the furnace room, through a grimy coal tunnel, to avoid admiring hordes. But as she crept along under the streets, she heard them stamping on manhole covers overhead, in time to their wild demand: "We want Gracie!" She could stand it no longer. "Well, if ye want me," she shouted, in that unmistakable husky voice of hers, "Get off the lid!" They hoisted her up and carried her on their shoulders to the ship, where she stood on the captain's bridge and sang until she could sing no more.

The first time "Our Gracie" came to America, she was told that audiences wouldn't understand her type of humor and she'd have to change her method of working. She tried it and was a flop. Next time she insisted on being herself.

"The press had been given some horror stories about me and the kind of language I spoke, I believe," she confided, "because whenever I'd meet a newspaper man or woman, they'd say: 'Why, I can understand you!' and I'd think: 'Whyever not?' I'd done songs in France, Italy and Holland, and everyone understood me, and I'd sung in all English-speaking countries with never a kick-back."

The American public proved her right. When Gracie went on the air in a five-minute spot, radio listeners everywhere made so vigorous a demand for more Gracie that her program had to be lengthened.

Monty Banks, producer-director-actor, had directed Gracie's sister in two films before Gracie met him. Her sister kept urging: 'Get Monty to direct you, Gracie. He's wonderful—that man!" At length Gracie did. The result was a hit picture. It was also love at first sight.

When Mr. and Mrs. Monty Banks first moved into their home in Santa Monica, they were enthusiastic hosts. Open house was the rule every Sunday. But when war plans absorbed all help, cooking, serving and cleaning up afterward became too strenuous.

"We never saw our guests, because the two of us were always bouncing about the kitchen. The thing had become an everlasting picnic. So we said: 'No more of this!' And now we entertain only servicemen, who will bounce about the kitchen themselves. Those boys are grand—they wash dishes, mix salads, carry trays and take their turns at the stove, bless 'em!"

Monty is returning to the screen in "A Bell For Adano," and there are rumors that he and Gracie may co-star in a picture before long. Monty, according to his wife, can do more with his back to the camera than most comedians can do in a close-up.

"He'll probably steal the picture from me," she said, proudly. "He's better on the screen than me. I like the stage best, because I can be different every time I go on. It's exciting. It's also exciting for my accompanist or orchestra leader, because they never know what I'll do. I never know, either. Sometimes I start out on an old song I haven't thought of for years. It's a toss-up if I can worry through it, but I whisper: 'Lord, help me remember the words of this thing I'm singing!'

"And somehow or other, He does!"

WORDS OF MUSIC

several years ago, she used Dick and Bob as her guinea pigs. Well, they both did all right with their vocal talents. By the way, Bob has been signed for the romantic lead in the next Abbott and Costello picture for Metro.

Jack Owens, the early morning crooner on the Breakfast Club Show over the Blue Network, has the Hollywood talent scouts after him. Of course Jack sang around Movietown for a long time, and worked as a voice double for many male stars who couldn't sing, but he never got a good break. So he left California and went back to Chicago and landed the Breakfast Club spot. Now they want him again. But that's Hollywood for you, they'll do it every time.

Andy Russell is hard at work at Paramount on his first movie, "Stork Club," opposite Betty Hutton. Andy is as reserved as Betty is vivacious, so the combination on film should prove interesting.

When June rolls around Perry Como will probably be Hollywood bound to make another picture for Twentieth Century-Fox. Here's hoping he gets a bigger part than he had in "Something For The Boys." By the way, Perry recently gifted his attractive wife, Roselle, with a gorgeous mink coat. Oh, why can't I marry a crooner?

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

Columbia:

All you Nelson Eddy fans will rejoice with Nelson's record of "Oh, What A Beautiful Morning" and "Surrey With The Fringe On Top," both from "Oklahoma." Robert Armbruster directs the orchestra.

Benny Goodman has waxed two new sides, "After You've Gone," with his sextet, and "Body and Soul," with his trio. The personnel of the groups are—Sextet; Clarinet, B. G.; piano, Teddy Wilson; drums, Morey Feld; guitar, Mike Bryan; bass, Slam Stewart (of Slim and Slam); and vibraphone, Red Norvo. The Trio: Goodman, Wilson and Feld.

Curt Massey is a new artist on the Columbia label. His first platter is "You've Got Me Where You Want Me," and "Candy," with Mitchell Ayres' orchestra.

Kate Smith offers "Just A Prayer Away" and "All of My Life," with The Four Chicks and Chuck, and Jack Miller's orchestra. Incidentally, "Chuck" is Chuck Goldstein, formerly of the Modernaires.

"I Should Care" and "Cry And You Cry Alone," are the two tunes for Gene Krupa's latest. Lillian Lane and the G-Noters do "I Should Care" and the G-Noters go it alone on "Cry."

Here's a wonderful album of George Gershwin music by Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra. Eight sides in all, including "Embraceable You," "So Wonderful," and "The Man I Love."

For his first disc under his new Columbia contract, Woody Herman has recorded "Laura" and "I Wonder." Woody sings both vocals. Right now seems as good a time as any to tell the story of the sensational "Laura."

Nobody can seem to say exactly what Johnny Mercer has. Slightly from pixie—maybe. But at any rate, this Georgia boy is just about the most sensational character to hit the record business in recent years. For Johnny not only sings tunes and writes them, but as president of Capitol Records he supervises all the other recordings the company makes as well.

1. His latest record, 'On the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe' with The Pied Pipers, will be released this month. Insiders say it will cause as much comment—nation-wide—as the assassination of McKinley. If so, it will be the 24th smash hit Capitol has recorded in the three short years of its existence.

2. One reason for Capitol's spectacular success is the fact that the company has its home in Hollywood—the greatest talent pool in the world. But even more important is the musical intuition of Mercer and Buddy De Sylva, chairman of Capitol's board. These two have set a whole new trend in the popular record business.

3. In three years they have picked more young talent such as The King Cole Trio—and lined them up under Capitol's banner—than all the rest of the record firms combined. This, together with the uncanny knack both seem to have for matching talent with tunes, has skyrocketed the young company right up among the old established leaders.

THERE'S NO CINDERELLA

Kathy, who is two and a half, and he's got a baby. The baby turned up at 5:20 one morning last December, which made it hard on a father who earns his living pleasing the eye of the camera . . . especially when close-ups are scheduled for just that day! (Close-ups just don't look so good, if you're falling asleep standing up.)

So when Dana staggered onto the set of "A Walk in the Sun" that morning, his emotions were split between his new son, Stephen, and the prospect of the close-ups. But he had underestimated the insight of Director Lewis Milestone.

"Know that scene where you fall asleep behind the stone wall?" Milestone said.

"Never heard of it," said Dana.

"We've added it to the script," was the reply. "We're doing it today."

Dana didn't argue. Confused in mind and body, he stumbled behind the wall, which just happened to be well out of sight of the camera; he curled up and fell into a deep sleep. He was awakened only when his snores interfered with the sound track.

Dana's got a new house at Toluca Lake, crooning distance from Sinatra and on the road to Bob Hope's (when he's home). There was nothing wrong with Dana's old house, as a matter of fact. Just ran out of bedrooms as the family increased.

Dana's got a garden that he's nuts about and a super job of a camera he's a fiend for. He's got a liking for rare roast beef and babies, good talk, eggs, Van Gogh. He's got a liking for the Motion Picture Industry. He's got a fondness for plain water in his whiskey, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, and brooding about what's wrong with the Motion Picture Industry. He's got a feeling of responsibility for his fans . . . especially if they're like Jeanette.

Jeanette lives in Long Beach, California, and she hitchhiked fifty miles to Agoura, where Dana was on location. But she hadn't reckoned with the time it would take to get there, and arrived only to find the company finishing for the day. Whereupon, she sat upon a rock and wept. But Dana drove her with him, all the way back to Hollywood, and made Jeanette the heroine of all her fans. "And for kids as interested as that," says Dana, "well, an actor just can't let them down!"

A guy named Dana Andrews comes along who's had this Purpose in his life. So, he's got war bonds in the safe deposit vault and money in the bank, and contracts with both Twentieth Century-Fox and Samuel Goldwyn. He's got the first picture in which he's starred alone, "A Walk in the Sun," tucked neatly under his belt, and "State Fair" in the works. He's got the woman, the kids and the work he loves. The Purpose of Dana Andrews' life is "in."

Yet, in some movie theater up in Remus, Michigan—or maybe it's the Bijou, down Calhoun, Kentucky way—there's probably that fellow named Willie Wiseguy who looks up at the screen, looks up at "Laura" or "A Walk in the Sun," and says to himself: "Pretty Soft! Boy, what a racket! Getting a pile of dough to act natural and make love to Gene Tierney! Say, I could do it myself, given the chance . . . given the breaks. It's a cinch!" And then he leans back in his seat and enjoys the picture and muses on the legends of Hollywood Cinderellas

So it's a cinch, Willie? A racket? You could do it yourself? Well, try it sometime, "Just acting natural!" And "just given the chance . . . just given the breaks!"

Well, "Breaks aren't 'given' you, not on a silver platter," says Dana Andrews. "You work and study and learn, and then you fight to make your own breaks. Sure, people help, they help a lot. But they don't help until you've helped yourself!"

Soft, Willie? A racket? Does that sound like Cinderella?

"The trouble with people like that—" says Dana, "they believe all the legends."

Now there's nothing wrong with legends, as Dana sees it, not if they're good legends. Gods on Mt. Olympus never hurt the Greeks. And there's really no reason why an actor must whistle in his dressing room when he firmly believes some poor ham flopped on the Drury Lane Circuit two hundred years ago for doing just that thing. But there are bad legends as well as good, and one of the bad ones is the legend of the Hollywood Cinderellas.

You know! Lana Turner was discovered sitting at a soda fountain and was made a star?

"She was discovered at a soda fountain, all right," Dana grins. "The only thing is, people seem to forget there was a time lapse there of nearly three years before she ever played any more than bits."

And Dana Andrews . . . remember? . . . was discovered working in a gas station.

"I asked a press agent once why they keep repeating that story," Dana says. "'It makes good copy,' he told me. 'People like to read it. Makes 'em feel it could happen to them.' Well," Dana goes on, "I don't agree with that idea. Because I believed it myself once, that 'it could happen to you' routine."

It was when he was a kid down in Texas. He'd gone to high school in Uvalde and Huntsville and worked his way through Sam Houston College. Then he landed a job as an accountant with Tobins, Inc., in Austin.

Well, he'd sit there being an accountant and mumble to himself: "This isn't the life for me. I don't want to spend the rest of my days keeping books. I ought to be out in Hollywood piling up all that dough and gold lined swimming pools!"

So one day, he quit. "I'm going to be a movie star," he announced to anyone who wanted to listen. And why not? Weren't people always telling him, "You should be in pictures?" And didn't they say he had talent in all those high school and college plays? Heck, he was just a kid! It looked easy.

So Dana came to Hollywood, just like thousands of others who come here every year. He came filled with the same thoughts as the others . . .

rosy, get-rich-quick, star-over-night kind of dreams . . . dreams encouraged by 'it could happen to you' stories he had read. Dreams of being a Hollywood Cinderella.

Cinderella? Star over night? Service station attendant crashes pictures? Don't make Dana laugh.

It was nine long, hardworking years before Dana Andrews ever got his face onto the screen, and five more years after that before they made him a star!

"But remember," he insists, "I was lucky! I keep thinking of all the others, the thousands who are working behind the soda fountains, or in drive-ins . . . sometimes worse. Because the 'it could happen to you' idea is not only unfair to all the actors and actresses who have worked long and hard to become stars (and that includes most of them, if you study the record), but it's dangerous, too. It can and has ruined lives. I was just lucky!"

Lucky, Dana calls himself. Some people might call it smart.

It was a man whom he met shortly after he got here who started him on the right track, a man who was very wise. Dana was depressed at the time. He was bitter and feeling sorry for himself that he wasn't getting the breaks.

"Look, Dana," this man said to him, "if you wanted to be a doctor, would you just put out a shingle and announce, 'Look, World! Now I am a doctor!'? Of course not. If you did, you'd be crazy. But people get the idea that all they need do to be an actor is walk into a casting office and say: 'I am an actor.' It doesn't work that way, Dana. You've got to learn the tools of your trade, and you can't learn them overnight. It doesn't happen that way, even in this business!"

Cinderella? Star over night? Not by a long shot!

Dana learned slowly, and carefully and thoroughly what it took to make a career. He learned patience. "And boy, I needed it during those nine lean years!" he says.

He held down any job he could get to keep himself and his family going . . . service station attendant included! And he went to the Pasadena Community Playhouse, where he learned his business from rock bottom on up, and we mean rock bottom!

"The first show I was in there was Shakespeare's 'Antony and Cleopatra'," Dana says. "I literally carried a spear, and didn't have one single line in all the five acts."

Dana studied fencing, diction, history of the theater . . . all the things that are part of an actor's training. "And don't think it doesn't mean something to be familiar with the plays of Bernard Shaw, say. It's pretty apt to mean you have an appreciation of good writing," Dana says. "That's knowledge that will come in handy if you ever reach the point where you have something to say about your scripts."

Dana studied singing for six whole years, yet he has never sung professionally. But he doesn't feel that any of that work is lost. It gave him a very sound idea of how to use his speaking voice, and a deeper appreciation of music in general, besides. But most important of all, he gained self confidence.

"As long as the solid background is there," he says, "you always have it to fall back on, and nothing can happen to you. You aren't suddenly going to be wrecked by some part you can't handle, because you've learned what you can do and how to do it."

This truth was proven when Dana had to make a fight to play lovers. "You're not a lover," his bosses told him. "You're a second lead."

So Dana lost the girl, in picture after picture, to some other guy. But Dana knew he could play lovers. He knew because he'd done it. He'd played them on the stage. And that gave him the confidence to fight.

The result? Well, who do you think was right?

And so a guy named Dana Andrews comes along. He's put in a long apprenticeship, he's put in years of work. And Willie Wiseguy would have a hard time saying in the face of that: Boy, soft! or What a racket!

So what does Dana say? Just this: "I went to a party last night. Jimmy Durante was there and entertained. I sat and watched him and thought of the years that had gone into making him the great performer he is. I sat there and felt like a rank amateur. If I can only learn that much . . . if I could ever be such a performer!"

Dana's face was solemn, his eyes intense. "But there isn't any Cinderella," he said. "There just isn't any easy way!"

He thought a moment. Then suddenly he grinned. "Anyhow, Cinderella, herself, put in a pretty long time sitting in the ashes before she ever got to the ball!"

HIGHER TYPE
Intimate Feminine Hygiene!

Greaseless Suppository Gives Hours of Continuous Medication

Everywhere today this higher type of intimate feminine cleanliness is being enthusiastically received among highly intelligent and exacting women. And it has a decided "extra" advantage:

1. Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories—easily inserted, so dainty and convenient to use.
2. Powerfully germicidal yet so safe to delicate tissues.
3. When inserted – Zonitors immediately begin to release their powerful germicidal properties and continue to do so for hours. Yet they are non-irritating, non-poisonous, non-smarting.
4. Zonitors actually destroy odor.
5. They immediately kill every germ they touch. Of course it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE—Zonitors kill all reachable living germs and keep them from multiplying.
6. Never leaves any sticky, greasy residue. Buy today–any drugstore.

The melody was written by David Raskin as part of his musical score for the Twentieth Century-Fox picture of the same name. Literally thousands of people who saw the movie wrote to the studio and asked where they could buy the music, so Raskin got Johnny Mercer to write a lyric, they published the song, and Johnnie Johnston introduced it on his Chesterfield show. Another interesting sidelight on "Laura"—Jerry Wald went to the Roxy Theatre in New York to see the picture, and was so enthralled with the beauty of the music that he decided to use it as his theme.

Decca:

Those juke box boys, The Ink Spots, are present and accounted for with "I Hope To Die If I Told A Lie," and "Maybe It's All For The Best." And with Ella Fitzgerald they do "I'm Beginning To See The Light" and "That's The Way It Is."

Jimmy Dorsey has two pretty things in "Twilight Time" and "I Should Care." Teddy Walters sings both vocals.

If you like "Rum and Coca-Cola" you'll enjoy a true Calypso version by Wilmoth Houdini and his Royal Calypso Orchestra. There are two sides and ten verses.

Decca seems to have a monopoly on recording the musical scores from the hit Broadway shows. Their latest is "Song of Norway." There are six twelve-inch records, and the artists are Kitty Carlisle, Robert Shafer, Helena Bliss and Lawrence Brooks. All except Kitty are from the original cast.

Bing "Academy-Award" Crosby's two new ones are "All Of My Life" and "A Friend of Yours." The first song is Irving Berlin's latest composition, and the second is from the picture Bing produced, "The Great John L." John Scott Trotter's orchestra as usual.

Nancy Walker, star of the hit show, "On The Town," has recorded two of the numbers she does in the production, "I Can Cook Too," and "Ya Got Me."

Mary Martin has done two more tunes from the same show, "Lucky To Be Me" and "Lonely Town." Mary is now on the road, touring with "One Touch Of Venus."

Sister Rosetta Tharpe shouts out "Two Little Fishes and Five Loaves of Bread" and "Strange Things Happening Every Day" in her revival-meeting style.

You jazz hounds will love Eddie Condon's "When Your Lover Has Gone" and "Wherever There's Love." The band personnel is much the same as that heard with Eddie on his Blue Network jazz concerts: Bobby Hackett, Billy Butterfield and Max Kaminsky on trumpet, Jack Teagarden on trombone, Ernie Caceres on baritone sax, Gene Schroeder on piano, Bob Haggart on bass, George Wettling on drums, and Eddie himself on guitar. Bobby Hackett plays a fine trumpet solo on "When Your Lover Has Gone." Lee Wiley sings a wonderful vocal on "Wherever There's Love," and the trombone solo is by Jack Teagarden.

It seems ages since we've heard a record by Deanna Durbin. But at last Decca has a release. It's "Always" and "Spring Will Be A Little Late This Year," with Edgar Fairchild's orchestra.

The Dinning Sisters: Aunts Ginger and Lou Mother Jean with wee daughter Sharon Lynn

Johnny Long and Dick Robertson join forces to bring us "Candy" and "My Dreams Are Getting Better All The Time."

Charlie Barnet and his orchestra do two instrumentals, "Skyliner," and "West End Blues." On the latter side Charlie plays a standout saxophone solo.

"This Heart of Mine" and "Love," both from the M. G. M. picture "Ziegfeld Follies," serve as excellent material for Judy Garland's latest platter.

Eddie Heywood and his orchestra have waxed "Begin The Beguine" and "Lover Man." Eddie is one of the most popular pianists in America today, and his arrangement of "Begin The Beguine" is really something.

Victor:

Freddy Martin and his orchestra have recorded "Dream" and "Every Time." Artie Wayne sings "Dream" and Glenn Hughes dittoes on "Every Time." The latter tune was written by the well-known radio maestro, Gordon Jenkins.

Here's Hal McIntyre and his boys with "Sentimental Journey," done as an instrumental, and "I'm Gonna See My Baby," sung by Ruth Gaylor.

Allan Jones, who hasn't been on wax since before the recording ban, is back among the fold with "I Dream Of You" and "I'll Walk Alone." It's a ten-inch disc on the Red Seal label.

"Carnegie Blues" and "My Heart Sings," with a Joya Sherill vocal, are the tunes chosen by Duke Ellington for his newest. "Carnegie" is an Ellington original, and was first heard as part of the Duke's tone poem, "Black, Brown and Beige."

Charlie Spivak and his orchestra offer "Sweetheart Of All My Dreams," the oldie which was revived in "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo," and "Yip, Yip De Hootie, My Baby Said Yes," one of the newer jump ditties. Irene Daye does an excellent job with the lyrics on both.

Capitol:

That jive girl, Ella Mae Morse jumps in with two novelty things "Captain Kidd" and "Ya'Betcha," accompanied by Billy May's orchestra. Billy will be remembered as one of the trumpet mainstays and arranger for Major Glenn Miller's civilian band.

The King Cole Trio has a smooth twosome in "Bring Another Drink" and "If You Can Smile and Say Yes." This second tune is all about rationing. King Cole sings both sides.

Sing Queen Jo Stafford's new one is one of her very best. She does the Johnny Mercer-Harold Arlen number, "Out Of This World," from the picture of the same name, and "There Is No You," which was written by Hal Hopper, one of the Pied Pipers, and Tom Adair, and was introduced by Frank Sinatra a few months ago. Paul Weston's orchestra and arrangements.

Jam Notes:

Patti Palmer has left Jimmy Dorsey's band to await a visit from Sir Stork. Patti is married to Jerry Lewis, well-known night club comedian. At this writing, Jimmy has made no replacement . . . Crooner Dick Brown has had his radio contract renewed.

It looks as if Harry James may land the summer replacement show for his present sponsor, Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer Harry is set to play an engagement at the Astor Roof in June, so the show will probably air from New York. Betty Grable has arranged her picture schedule so that she can come east with her favorite trumpet player.

Anita O'Day has cut out from the Stan Kenton band, and will work as a single. She recently signed a solo recording contract with Capitol . . . Artie Shaw is back in Hollywood and may do a picture if he can find a script to his liking . . . Ziggy Talent, who left the Vaughn Monroe band a little over a year ago to go out on his own, is back with his old boss.

It's nice having Ethel Smith and her Latin America ditties back on the Hit Parade, but I still miss Sinatra on that program . . . Barry Ulanov, editor of Metronome Magazine, is writing a biography of Duke Ellington, which will be published next fall . . . Horace Heidt is having trouble with his agents and has junked his band, at least for the time being. His trumpet star, Shorty Cherok, is organizing a new band with some of Heidt's men.

Sally Stuart has been ill and is taking a leave of absence from the Sammy Kaye orchestra . . . Hal McIntyre may be overseas by the time you read this . . . You characters in the New York area may be interested to know that Jill Warren (Oh! That's me) has a radio show every afternoon over Station WHOM—new records and lots of chit-chat about your favorite musical personalities.

THE END

So long for this month. Remember, I'm always interested to hear your views on the column, and I like to get your letters. I'll answer your musical questions to the best of my ability—but please, not too many of them, and DON'T FORGET TO ENCLOSE A SELF-ADDRESSED STAMPED ENVELOPE. Just write Jill Warren, Movieland Magazine, 1476 Broadway, New York City, 18, New York.

THE ELF FROM EIRE

Miss Fitzgerald's solid sense would seem to have been partly native, partly engendered by her father, who is quite a lad on his own record.

At the formative age of five, Geraldine came down to breakfast one morning (in Dublin, Ireland or Eire) after a brief illness and was greeted by her male parent. It had long been his habit to shake hands with each of his four children in the morning, during the day if one of them happened to have been absent for several hours, and at night before they went upstairs to bed.

On this particular morning, Father Fitzgerald shook hands with Geraldine and said, "How are you this morning."

"I feel pretty well," she began. "A little weak and headache-ish, perhaps. . ."

Her father interrupted. "Never tell anyone who says simply 'How are you?' how your health is. The phrase is used merely as a greeting and indicates no solicitude," he said.

From that day, Geraldine has always answered that particular phrase with a blithe statement of general excellence.

On another occasion, when Geraldine was somewhat older, she and her brothers and sister were awakened at four o'clock in the morning and tersely ordered to the family bathroom. A guest in the house had left discarded clothing heaped in one corner, the rugs in a state of uprising, and several towels in saturated strands over the fixtures. Gesturing majestically, the father said, "I just wanted you to see this. Never, under any circumstance, do I want a child of mine to leave a bathroom in such a shameful state." Then they were all herded back to bed.

His insistence that his children protect the welfare of others so that none should be harmed by another's mishap took this form: whenever a glass or a bit of china was broken (as frequently happens in a houseful of children) the breaker was instructed to write a large note reading, "Broken Glass In This Room," and to leave the warning in the doorway ON THE FLOOR of the room in which particles might still be lurking.

And by these and like machinations, worked out by her remarkable dad, Miss Fitzgerald's fanciful personality was lent the consideration for others which would help her to cope with a less imaginative world.

She has an uncanny gift for finding things which other persons, not Geraldine, might regard as lost. As a child she had this what seemed to her to be unremarkable ability, to the extent of answering casually questions about what had become of that book or that school card or that key.

At a party one night she was discussing this faculty when a dubious hostess said, "Well, don't make a mere game of this thing. If you want to prove that you can find a lost article, locate my lost seedpearl necklace."

"If I'm to do that," said Miss Fitzgerald, "will you give me permission to go about, opening drawers? I shan't disturb the contents of the drawers and the necklace may not be there at all. But—in order to relax—I should like to be able to move about, to open things."

This carte blanche granted, she wandered through two rooms, preoccupiedly touching this drawer and that cabinet. After a few moments she went directly to the dining room, without conscious volition, and removed the artificial fruit from a decorative bowl on the table. In the bottom of the bowl was the necklace.

Here and there Geraldine's uncanny accomplishment gained believers so that one summer when she was a guest on a boat, and one of the guests lost a signet ring, she was encouraged to find the ring. "I'll tell you this," she said with assurance, "that ring isn't on this boat."

That afternoon the party went up to the Inn, where they were keeping some of their gear and where they took an occasional meal. Some small voice within Geraldine said, "That ring!" And there it was, in a far corner, under a small bench and stymied against a mouse's doorway. It had been just a trifle too large for the entrance. Presumably the mouse had sent for a corps of engineers and the ring would have disappeared forever within a few hours.

Don't think for a moment that this ability of Geraldine's is modified by geography. Not so long ago she was attending a party in Beverly Hills when one of the guests exclaimed, "I've lost my ring. I think it rolled somewhere into the street gutter. We looked ever so long, but it was gone. Isn't that sickening?"

The lady with the Christopher Columbus skill shook her head. "I think the ring is somewhere in your car," she said. "If you'll tell me which is your car, I think I can find the ring."

As she was leaving the party, Geraldine stopped at the indicated automobile and gave the loss some thought. It was too dark to see the interior of the car, the seat, or the floor, and neither Geraldine nor the friend who was to take her home had a flashlight, so the situation looked fairly hopeless.

After a few moments, Finder Fitzgerald said, "When you go back to the party tell her that the ring is lying between the two sections of the divided front seat."

"Did you see it?"

Geraldine said, "No, I can't see it. I can't even feel it with my fingers, but I know it's there."

It was. The owner located it the next morning.

At present she is working on the mysterious disappearance of a friend's cashmere sweater. She has this to say about her insight: she thinks she must have a supremely sensitive subconscious that simply picks up from the depths of a loser's mind the actually known, but forgotten, circumstances of a loss that give clues as to where a thing may have been mislaid. Hers would appear to be the knack of penetrating beneath the surface of another person's mind.

Geraldine is also one of the few persons in The States who has felt the presence of a ghost. It happened, of course, in Ireland—where such things are commonplace. In her own home in Dublin there are a number of happy, sociable shades who waft up and down the stairways, vaporize in and out of rooms, and generally take a kindly, if misty, interest in the life of the household. At an early age she grew accustomed to the sensation of invisible personalities inhabiting a room.

It was in England that she observed the effect of revenants upon the composure of a friend. Virginia Welles (first wife of Orson), Geraldine and her husband were guests in one of the great houses in England. It is a massive pile of masonry, built around a hollow square. So intense has supernatural activity been that one entire wing of the house has been closed. The current owner emphatically does not believe in ghosts, even when his guests are evicted from the library by an irascible, elderly gentleman who dissolves when the owner descends upon him with punishment in mind. (The elderly gentleman, incidentally, is the owner's deceased grandfather.)

Virginia Welles, "dying to see a ghost" as Miss Fitzgerald says with a twinkle, elected—when a guest in this historic pile—to occupy a bedroom in the older wing. Geraldine, convinced and not wanting to spend a spooky night, chose a bedroom, with her husband, in the newer portion of the house. A portion too recently smelling of spirits of turpentine to be hospitable to spirits of torment.

Barely thirty minutes of the night had elapsed when rapid footsteps sounded along the corridor, followed by a hurried knocking and Virginia Welles' breathless question, "Is it all right with you for me to occupy the little sitting room off your bedroom?"

Geraldine and her husband said, "Of course. What happened?"

Nothing tangible, really. The room was cold with a chill literally out of this world. She closed the door of her room. Three minutes later the doorknob turned, the door opened, and no one was standing there. Virginia, attributing this phenomenon to drafts in the corridor, simply closed the door firmly and went on with her preparations for the night. Four minutes later the same inquisitive hand laid hold of the knob, turned it, and opened the door.

Exhilarated by this authentic bit of hocus-pocus, Virginia climbed into bed to read by candle-light, after having turned out the gas burner.

"I know what happened next," Geraldine said. "Your candle was extinguished by a poof! A very local breeze. The curtains didn't move. Nothing in the room moved. But that strong local poof put out the light."

"Y-Y-Yes," said Virginia. "So I think I shall sleep near you."

Then there is the case of Geraldine's friend who shall be called Agnes for the logical reason that Agnes is not her name. Agnes, as nearly as Geraldine can diagnose the condition, possesses actual double identity with materialized bodies to match. This division of personality appears to take place only when Agnes is not physically well in her normal self.

One winter she had flu and Geraldine took care of her. After having seen that her charge was comfortably asleep, Geraldine and a friend were seated before the living room fire, talking softly, when Agnes—apparently standing in the same room—said, "Geraldine Please come here. Geraldine!"

Geraldine ignored the voice, much to the friend's discomfort. When the call came a second and a third time, the friend said, "Don't you think you should answer?"

"Come with me, I'll show you," said Geraldine. They went back to Agnes' room, awakened her by knocking, and asked if she were all right. She was, she said. She had been deeply asleep.

On another occasion, Geraldine and a friend were lunching at a wonderful little restaurant when Geraldine said, "Agnes loves good food. We must be sure to tell her about this place."

"Why, there's Agnes now," said the friend. Geraldine turned toward the door. Agnes had entered the room. She looked about, hesitated, then turned slowly and left.

A few days later Geraldine called to see Agnes and found her ill again. "Why didn't you speak to us when you were in that quaint restaurant the other day? We had just been saying that you must be told about it, when you walked in," Geraldine said.

Agnes looked bewildered "I haven't been out of the house for a week," she said. "I've been much too ill."

This is the sort of fascinating conversation, based upon fascinating experience, that her friends are accustomed to hearing from Geraldine Fitzgerald. The stories she has to tell are legion, each one more piquant than the last.

Even her hobbies are unique. In the corner of her living room stands a three-panel screen that looks like "Ireland's answer to Salvadore Dali."

The screen, of ply-board, was originally painted a bright blue. Against this background are pasted literally hundreds of swatches of bright paper. "That," explained Miss Fitzgerald, "is my war memorial."

Her husband, as you already know, is stationed in Eire and she hasn't seen him for two years, although their letters fly back and forth like souped-up birds. Sometimes, between worry for him and worry for her family, Geraldine can't sleep. "I don't take sleeping tablets because they're so bad for the teeth," she has told friends. "Instead, I get a magazine and a pair of scissors and get busy."

She clips the unlettered portions of colored advertisements from magazines, runs a paste brush over some section of the screen, and sets the lithographed mosaic in place. Three panels are fairly well covered at the present time. When all available space is surrealist with memories of Coty, Bodies By Fisher, Harper's svelte ladies, in segmented sections, Geraldine plans to varnish the surface so that nothing but a panorama of color will smite the eye.

"Then, every time I look at the screen when the war is over, I'll say to myself, 'I lived through that. I can live through anything.'"

Geraldine's current picture at Warner's is "Three Strangers"—in itself an eerie undertaking. It tells the story of three dubious characters who buy a sweepstakes ticket, actually win a fortune, but are unable to collect their money. Why they are barred from realizing their frantic ambition constitutes the plot of the story.

Geraldine likes it because it is unique, quaint, a little out of this world. A description which exactly fits the star herself.

GOING TO EXTREMES

WHEN you step out into the summer scene, you should be all set to steal the show. One look at Esther Williams, at ease on the diving board, will show you just what we mean. Lengthen that look-see, study her streamlined stems, her pretty pedal extremities, and start pondering over your own newly noticeable feet and legs.

Imagine that you're Esther, teaching Van to swim in "Thrill of a Romance". Now, catch your breath and start doing a few of the things she obviously did first.

For comely contour from hip to heel, try daily exercise and nightly massage. Swimming, walking and riding a bike all help to develop muscles with carefully controlled curves—help to get rid of flabby fat too.

Covering the correct contour, you should have silky-soft skin, as well cared for as your smooth hands and face.

Some form of hair removal is a must. So—depending on how rapidly your leg fuzz puts in its appearance, make a date with a depilatory, a razor or "eraser".

Depilatories are fragrant creams which you spread thickly over the hairy area, allow to dry and rinse off, leaving a satiny surface. Erasers have a firm way with fuzz too. These gentle friction pads, rubbed lightly over the skin in a circular sweep, bring about "baldness" in nothing flat.

A razor is quick and convenient, too, but be sure to wipe it and your legs with antiseptic before you swoop downward with quick, short strokes.

Another "slick" trick is the rosinous wax treatment. Some waxes are heated first; some are not. All are spread over the hairy surface, allowed to dry and jerked off in long strips, lifting out the hair from beneath the skin.

Once your legs are hair-free, keep them bump and flake-free. Scrub hard every day at bathtime, using lots of soapy suds on a stiff brush. Lotion them lovingly after each immersion. Massage them magnificently once or twice a week with dry skin cream.

There you are—just like Esther! Shapely, smooth and soft. NOW, for glamour, a complete pedicure to complete a very pretty picture.

Hair is a handicap when legs are in the limelight. Why not just "erase" it?

Toe tips in the picture too! Tint them with bright pink or scarlet nail polish.

Massage with lubrication makes for trimmer looking and more comfortable toes.

father, Henry R. Caulfield, could well afford to send her to the private and parochial schools she attended, and later, Columbia University in New York City. She grew up enjoying the privileges and little luxuries familiar to any moderately well-to-do family, and when in high school she decided she wanted to become an actress, the family may have been amused but they never discouraged her ambition. The only complaints she received numbered exactly two: a general family one concerning her voice lesson exercises practised in the bathroom; and a specific one from her older sister, Mary, who finally objected to Joan's monopolizing the attention of her—Mary's—beau when he came a-calling by talking interminably and grandiosely of the "the-a-tuh", and illustrating some of the picturesque points of the Stanislawsky method.

"Ham" was their word for it.

For all they kidded her, however, the entire family was deeply sympathetic with Joan's aspirations, and was properly and genuinely thrilled at her success in "Kiss and Tell." The same moral support, in fact, is in evidence today; Mrs. Caulfield is making a home for Joan in Hollywood while Mr. Caulfield and younger sister, Betty, hold the fort in New Jersey. Betty replaced Joan in the "Kiss and Tell" lead, and sister Mary has since married.

Joan made her first semi-professional appearance on the stage in the Columbia University production of "Witch Hunt" staged by the Morningside Players. With it she received her first and only bad notice, a sharp reprimand to the effect that "Miss Caulfield spoke her lines as if they were machine made."

Her critic was a fellow student at the university, and he lived to rue his words. Some time later he himself essayed to play a role in one of the school plays, opposite Joan. It was not a fortuitous move on his part, because the Caulfields, like the elephants, never forget.

"Of course it wasn't on purpose," Joan grinned in recollection. "It just happened that I fed him the wrong cue lines, and it just happened that I upstaged him. Somehow he kept getting all mixed up!"

Being no dummy, Joan knew she had a good figure and was photogenic as all get-out; snapshots and class pictures had proved that. "Actually I'm not beautiful, I just look beautiful in pictures," she still insists. Actually she's all wrong; she both looks beautiful and is beautiful, which doesn't always happen as a matter of course.

Again being no dummy, Joan realized a little extra money always comes in handy to young ladies in school. Adding the two factors brought the obvious answer of a job as a model. Therefore she went to work during off hours as a Conover model (Start at the top is her motto!) specializing in college girl clothes, size 11. At the end of 18 months she had worked up to the $10 an hour bracket, gained quite a reputation along with other well-known models like Kay Aldridge and Jinx Falkenburg, and had her picture on the cover of Life. It was the May 11, 1942 issue and she was illustrating the new fluffy blouse fashion.

About this time she decided to abandon college in favor of the stage. Never one to favor the indirect route, she walked boldly into the office of George Abbott, a top N. Y. producer, without so much as a note of introduction. Quite by chance, of course, she carried under her arm the May 11, 1942 issue of Life. The receptionist flatly stated Mr. Abbott was granting no interviews, caught a glimpse of the magazine cover, and arranged an audition. Two days later Joan had a role—a small one, but a role!—in Abbott's forthcoming musical, "Beat The Band." Look out, Cornell, Hepburn, Hayes, Fontanne et al, here I come!

It almost turned out to be "She went that-a-way!" Her family was in the audience on the opening night of the usual try-out of the play in New Haven, and the family reaction was something to behold. Father thundered, Mother almost swooned, and sister Mary was fit to be tied. For little Joan, the sheltered darling of Orange, New Jersey, was evoking appreciative whistles from Yale as she sexily undulated across the stage, clad in the sheerest of pink and black scanties and flipping risque lines with the nonchalance of a veteran!

Fortunately for the family, "Beat The Band" lasted only eight weeks on Broadway, but it resulted in Joan's getting the coveted lead of Corliss Archer in Abbott's next production, "Kiss and Tell," and subsequently, in May of 1943, her present contract with Paramount. That contract, incidentally, permitted her to complete the additional year for which she was signed for "Kiss and Tell," which brought her to Hollywood in May of 1944. Within a few weeks she was neck deep in "Susie Slagle," and after the first day's rushes, Paramount was saying, "Bro-o-o-ther!"

Sister Betty, 18, currently is playing the lead in "Kiss and Tell" which Joan vacated in favor of Hollywood. The Caulfield girls obviously know what they want—and more important, how to get it—for Betty long had refused another role in the play. "I want Joan's role or nothing, and I'll wait until it's open," she insisted. She waited 14 months while Joan's fate star became brighter with every performance.

It was during the first weeks of her heady success that Joan learned how little she impressed her family as a great new star, for all the N. Y. critics were chanting her praises, and she learned the hard way. The first lesson came on the morning that she decided her new importance entitled her to breakfast in bed, a la the queen.

"Stuff and nonsense!" Mrs. Caulfield cut her down to size. "You get up, young lady, and come down to the table with the rest of us!" Joan breakfasted en famille.

The second lesson came when she languidly refused a telephone call at home, asking Mary to inform the caller she was "not in" and to take his name.

"Get you!" Mary snorted at Joan, and then told the caller, "Joan's home. Just a minute and I'll call her. J-O-A-N!" Joan answered the phone.

The final lesson came when Joan was discussing her financial affairs with her father and was bemoaning the inroads that taxis from home to the theater were making on her allowance.

"The buses are still running," Mr. Caulfield said. "I would suggest you use them." Joan took the bus.

There was no beef, however, when she spent a fat option check from Paramount on a mink coat. It was her right, they felt, and she was entitled to the splurge. Ironically, it was Joan herself who became critical of wearing the mink, especially to the theater.

"Makes me look like an obnoxious young show-off, especially in front of some of the older actresses who haven't been quite so lucky," Joan reasoned. "Besides, I'm supposed to be a 15-year-old girl in the play, and what would fans think if they saw me flouncing around in mink? I'll save it for Hollywood."

Now that she's in Hollywood she hasn't worn it half a dozen times, and then only on orders from her agent who told her she ought to go in for a little more glamour.

It wasn't only from her family that Joan learned discipline and conduct becoming a rising young actress. She well remembers the Sunday she was deliberately late in arriving at the theater, after church. It would add to her prestige and importance, she figured, if an entire company had to wait for her, and everyone would be in a tizzy wondering where she was, and if anything had happened to her.

Mama (Betty Grable), Proud Papa Harry James . . . "and baby makes three." Birthday congratulations are very much in order for one-year-old little Victoria Elizabeth James.

"Just a minute, Joan," the furious stage manager halted her as she strolled in. Then he assembled the entire company on the stage. Turning to Joan, he said, "You have been deliberately and inexcusably rude to all of these ladies and gentlemen, and you will apologize to them here and now!"

Contritely, and with a new understanding of her personal responsibilities towards the theater and her fellow players, Joan apologized. She was never late again, and to this day makes almost a phobia of being prompt for any and all appointments.

Joan lives a bit more quietly than most of the young actresses her age in Hollywood, possibly because she is so intensely serious about her work as to give it most of her time and attention. She has no steady beau, preferring to play the field in escorts; but she has definite ideas of what she likes and doesn't like. She doesn't like spoiled men who have to be humored and catered to all the time. Disliking overdressed women, she stresses sports clothes in her own wardrobe, and feels most at ease in the simple skirt and sloppy joe sweater ensemble so popular with the late teen-agers. She looks about that age, too, when she wears it.

There is nothing startling about her other tastes. They are, indeed, quite orthodox—and include a liking for tennis, the rhumba, the movies, and Chinese food, especially moo goo gai pen. She sings a little in a voice she describes as a vague cross between soprano and contralto, and her high school French is about what you'd expect. As a fan she is crazy about the Hitchcock type of psychological thriller-dillers, but as an actress she yearns for the Joan Fontaine kind of roles. Among stage actresses, Margaret Sullavan enchants her completely.

There is something startling, however, about the ferocity of her determination to learn to dance so superbly as to qualify as a dancing partner of the great Draper. And therein, I think, lies the key to her character. That she had to start from scratch appalled her, I know, but it did not deter her. Day after day, week after week, she reported (and still is reporting) for a three-hour lesson each morning. Day after day she worked, struggled and sweated under the demanding tutelage of Josephine Earl, the studio dance coach, and the sympathetic help of Joel Friend (why doesn't Paramount do right by him? He's young, good looking, and what a dancer!) who served as her partner. Fast taps, ballet, and tricky ballroom routines were thrown at her to absorb and master in quick succession, and master them she has. The accomplishment is unbelievable unless you see it, as I did in the rehearsal hall, and as I'll wager you will in "Blue Skies."

A lesser spirit would have whined under the grinding ordeal, or given up in black discouragement. To Joan, however—

"It's fun, wonderful fun! Think of it! I, Joan Caulfield, can dance!"

She, Joan Caulfield, is quite a gal.

—says Mrs. Jane Ende of Rock Island, Ill.

"Most women worry when their weight goes up just a few pounds," says Mrs. Jane Ende. "Can you imagine, then, how I felt—watching those scales go up . . . UP . . . UP! until I actually weighed 202. I think my greatest jolt came when I went to buy a dress and had to take a size 44. Right then was when I decided to start the DuBarry Success Course."

The first six weeks she lost 30 pounds. She kept right on and went through her course again and again. Today she weighs just 125—is slim, trim, attractive.

"Life is very different now," she declares. "I look and feel as a young woman of 28 should. I can wear smart, stylish, youthful dresses in size 14 instead of matronly 44. I have the pep and vitality to keep up with and enjoy my two children. And I know that following the DuBarry way, I need never be overweight again."

skirts and gayly colored sash, trying turns, dips and abrupt halts. Utterly absorbed, she stood before her dressing room mirror trying out expressions for the untamed Indian maid of Niven Busch's story. Now, she held her mouth slightly open, revealing the flash of perfect white teeth against her dark make-up; now, her eyes slid to one side; now, she looked up from under dropped eyelids. She was imagining herself into the part of a wanton charmer.

"I'm experimenting," she confessed, when she became aware of me. "My director, Mr. King Vidor, may have other ideas about this character. We'll develop it and work it out. The grand thing about every part I've done on the screen is that they're all different, and not one is like the real me.

"This girl is a wild creature, very, very sexy, but quite unconscious of her appeal; she's as natural as an animal, a wild animal. She rides like an Indian and dances like a savage; she lives and loves with tremendous abandon. Her looks and actions, her walk and her ways are nothing like mine.

"Bernadette was a peasant girl, too, of course, but she was different. She wasn't a nun like the sisters at school, so I didn't try to pattern her on any of the sisters I know. Mr. King told me that Bernadette was not a 'holier than thou' sort of person, she was simple and childlike all her life; things happened around her, not to her."

Jennifer doesn't think that Jane in "Since You Went Away" was like Phylis Isley at the same age. (Phylis Isley was Jennifer's name before Mr. Selznick rechristened her.) She speaks of Jane as "so much younger." Jane was seventeen. I suppose half a dozen years does seem a long time at Jennifer's age.

"I wasn't like that at seventeen," she assured me, earnestly, "but none of the girls at home were. When we lived in Garden City, Long Island, I used to see high school girls in their bobby sox, saddle shoes and sweaters, who acted like the girl in the picture. Then, too, Shirley Temple was nearer the age I was playing than I was—she was sixteen—so I studied Shirley and her friends."

That crush on the older man was real, she admits. We've all had those.

Never having been an amnesia victim, Jennifer couldn't have been like Singleton in "Love Letters." "She was a girl with no inhibitions. She didn't remember anything in her past, all she had was future; she said what she thought, had no reserves, did as she pleased, and was always thoroughly honest," explained Jennifer. "When I first read the script, it seemed to me that her condition was ideal, I couldn't think why she wanted to remember, she was so right as she was. The story explains that. It was fun to do Singleton. I'd like to be as straightforward as she was, always."

Forty miles east of Tucson, Arizona, lies the location site for "Duel In The Sun." Construction of five miles of road and three bridges was necessary to reach it, and a crew of carpenters has been busy erecting a twenty-room ranch house and other sets for the picture.

Jennifer is delighted at the idea of living on the desert. Everything new excites her. She's taking the children, and plans to have them learn to ride while there. Robert, Jr., and Michael, small replicas of their father, Robert Walker, can hardly wait. After all, real Westerners ride as soon as they can sit up, and the boys are three and four years old.

Their mother is like another child when she's with them, entering into their games, taking everything they say seriously, and, on the other hand, able to go right on studying, reading, practicing or conversing while they riot around her. Once her best friend, on hand to wave farewell to Jennifer's parents when they took the little boys to Palm Springs for a week-end, sighed: "Well, at last we can talk—we're free of the Keystone Kops! We can hear each other— Hallelujah!"

Jennifer was hurt. "Have you always felt that way?" she asked, tears starting in her velvety eyes.

"Darling, of course I have! I love the kids—you know I do—but you and I have business together. We can't get anything done when Bobby is hammering over here and Michael is pounding over there, and both of them are yelling at the top of their lungs."

The young star changed the subject, but next day in the midst of a conversation she suddenly said: "I know what you mean about us. When both the boys and I are in one room it does sound like a great many people."

She tries hard to be a good mother, to bring up her boys with proper discipline; but things don't always turn out as she plans. In great agitation, the other morning, she called up a studio friend: "Michael was naughty last night. He simply wouldn't eat his supper, and it was the right supper for him, all the books say so. Well, he wouldn't touch it, so I made him go to bed. And this morning he has a COLD!"

Those who have had dinner at Jennifer's when the maids were absent insist that the star can set out a delectable meal, but Jennifer asserts that she posi-tively can't cook. "I can't cook because I don't like to," she said, honestly. "You have to enjoy doing a thing before you're any good at it. But if ever I have a little girl, she'll be taught everything about a house, including how to put meals together. When you're a child you're interested in anything, and cooking well could grow to be a habit."

The Motion Picture Industry War Activities Committee recently awarded Jennifer the gold medal of honor for her work in the war effort. She serves actively as nurse's aide, and has toured the country on behalf of the Red Cross, Treasury Department and home nursing organizations.

"Everyone should take the nurse's aide course," she cried, enthusiastically, when I mentioned this. "It's wonderful to know how to cope with the accidents all children have. Do you know, I couldn't even take a temperature when I enrolled? Now I do lots of things—especially can I make a bed right! Trouble is, when you really know how it should be done, nobody else ever does it to please you!"

When Mrs. Walter Lippman thanked her for her services while she was in Washington, Jennifer looked at her, wide-eyed. "Why I haven't done much!" she replied. "When I joined the nurse's aides, I told them I couldn't keep regular hours, on account of pictures, but I'd serve as often as I could. I sometimes managed to be there three times a week, but not every week. Yes, I've gone on tours and visited hospitals, but that isn't work. The real grind is being on duty day in, day out. My part was fun."

Since she took the early shift at the hospital, most of her duties consisted in giving baths to patients. The first time she was on her own, she was assigned to bathe an old soldier. Her hands shook; she chewed her lip while she endeavored to roll him over so that a clean sheet could be inserted beneath him; she handled the patient as if she thought he'd break.

"Hey," he said at length, "you're new at this, ain't you?"

Jennifer swallowed. "Y-yes, I'm new," she admitted, "but I can do it!"

She meant it when she called her tours fun. In Washington, dressed in her nurse's aide uniform, she visited hospital after hospital, talking to the sick and wounded. When she first entered a ward, the men didn't know she was more than a pretty young aide, and they usually talked unselfconsciously with her for some time before the rumor got around that she was a picture star. By that time, they felt they knew her. She didn't try to entertain, as she neither sings nor dances professionally.

A very special social date had been arranged with a prominent Capital hostess one night, and her companion reminded her at five P. M. that she must break away and get dressed for the affair. "Can't we just skip the dinner?" she asked. "This is really important!"

Her approach to life is the young approach. She enjoyed those tours because they were new adventures, no matter what odd hours she had to keep, what weather she encountered, how many trains and buses jolted her, how many weary waits at dismal stations fell to her lot. When Mr. and Mrs. Phil Isley, her parents, borrowed the children for a trip shortly after her return, Jennifer excitedly called up Anita Colby, who had accompanied her on her tours. "Come over and stay all night," she urged. "It'll be just like being on the road again!"

"On the road!" groaned The Face, "that's all you need to say to keep me home. The road—those dreary trains—those ghastly hours—that awful food—"

"Why, it was lovely!" said the surprised Jennifer.

Here's another patch of truth about Jennifer Jones. She "wants to know." Now that she's taking piano lessons again, her interest in music has been awakened. She reads the life of the composer while she listens to his music, trying to understand the man so she can understand what he's trying to express.

Right now she "wants to know" all about Indian halfbreeds, how they feel and think.

Her home town is proud of her success. "Where," writes her mother, almost weekly, "is that autographed picture for the man at the drugstore?—or the man who used to sell you books?—or your Latin teacher?" Or whoever it is.

To Jennifer, autographing pictures is hard work, because she likes to say just the right thing to each person; sometimes it takes her hours to think of a phrase. She went to Henry Kaiser's shipyards to attend a ship launching not long ago. The shipbuilders sang a song composed for the occasion, called "Smooth Sailing." Jennifer thought it inspiring. When she went back to the studio to select and autograph pictures for the men at the yards, she was days worrying over the best thing to write.

"Good luck—Best always—oh no, Smooth Sailing, how's that? Or do you think Good luck, God Bless—that's what my best friend says!" She toiled over them for the better part of a week.

"I had my fortune told once," she observed, twisting a curl around her finger in her favorite manner. "The woman said: 'You'll never be a deep thinker, but you'll live a charmed life.'"

She didn't think she had a charmed life when she was yearning to play Claudia on the screen, and not getting anywhere. She got a test when David Selznick signed her to a contract, but she knew his office didn't think she was good enough for the role. Rose Franken, as was her custom, invited Jennifer down to her farm for a week-end to coach her for the test. To Rose, Claudia was a blonde, so she suggested that Jennifer lighten her hair.

"Oh no, I couldn't!" cried Jennifer.

"Well, then, let's cut it. Claudia has short hair."

"Oh no, no! I don't want it cut. I can't part with it!" She hugged her head. At the time, she wore her hair something like Lauren Bacall's, fairly straight with just a soft natural curl, the mass falling over her back and shoulders. Miss Franken insisted, and Jennifer sat before the mirror weeping while they chopped off just a little of her crowning glory and dressed it so that it looked short. She hated it so much that she didn't care whether she played Claudia or not. That who cares feeling helped her through the test, for though she went home and told Bob that she was terrible, simply terrible, and wasn't going to see the test, he attended the showing and said: "You're wonderful!" The test is now said to be so good that it's shown to screen students as an example.

Jennifer curled up like a kitten on her dressing room couch, still twisting that tortured curl. "I don't know if I believe in Fate," she pondered. "I haven't thought deeply enough to know. But I think I must believe in Luck in this town, for directors tell me there's a frightening lot of talent walking the boulevards now which no one will ever see. Only those who get breaks succeed. . . . So it must be Luck with me!"

Whenever a gardener comes to work on the Carmichael grounds, nothing in this world can prevent Hoagy from going out and getting into the gardener's way. He goes fully equipped, heavy gloves, clippers, shears, everything.

This day, he wanted to get some sun, so besides the clippers, shears, and gloves, all he wore was a brief pair of shorts and some sandals. He is an enthusiastic if haphazard gardener, and for a couple of hours he'd been throwing himself heart and hide into the mud around the Carmichael roses.

Dejected over the apparent lack of cooperation on the part of the plants to produce blooms, Hoagy came wandering into the house plaintively bellowing for Ruth and brandishing his shears.

Mrs. Hawks took a look, decided perhaps that her visit definitely needed curtailing. Offering Ruth her sympathies, she left hurriedly. But Hoagy with the rumpled hair had made a strong impression on her. Later, when Mr. Hawks was futilely searching for an actor for the coveted part of Cricket the dissolute piano player in To HAHN, Mrs. H. suggested Hoagy. He could play the piano, she knew, and he could sing—and, she added, he looked the part. Mr. Hawks agreed to test him.

They called Hoagy, only to find he had left for New York on business. A telephone call brought him back for the test, and a contract. Hoagy had had a previous taste of things cinematic in "Topper," when he appeared in a brief scene with Connie Bennett and George Brent. He had also been in a few 'shorts' featuring his music. But the part of Cricket got under his skin, and the blessed touch of ham in Hoagy rose to the surface. The taste of grease paint is habit-forming. If this had all started out for kicks, it rapidly developed into a serious and sincere urge to make a success in this new field. Hoagy's the kind of a guy who has the happy faculty of throwing himself wholeheartedly into whatever he's doing—whether it's writing a hit song, arguing a law case, acting, or gardening.

As Cricket he was in there pitching opposite some terrific competition in the form of Bogart and Lauren Bacall. Hollywood critics fell out applauding his sound characterization and complete naturalness. So Cricket was only the beginning. Once the preview raves were out, the rush was on. One role was enough to convince the guys in the know that Hoagy was potentially as great a screen success as he has been during the past fifteen years writing sixty or seventy hit songs that have kept squares and hepcats, alike, tapping their toes and warbling his melodies.

RKO got in the first bid for Hoagy to play Celestial O'Brien in "Johnny Angel," the George Raft-Signe Hasso Starrer. He equals, if not surpasses, his part of Cricket in this new role. He's a wistful-looking little guy in a seersucker uniform with that lock of hair falling down on his forehead under his taxi cap. His voice, just above a whisper, sometimes couldn't even be heard from the edge of the set, but it picks up on the sound track but terrific!

He's not abandoning music simply because he's started on a new career. He has planted songs in both his pictures. "How Little We Know" in To HAHN was his, as were a couple of other songs and much of the background music. In "Johnny Angel," his new "Memphis In June" is a featured song. Besides that, he has "Baltimore Oriole," "My Christmas Song For You," and many other new ones which have spilled off his prolific pen in the past few months.

His whole life has been characterized by that sort of tenacity of purpose which brings him success in anything he tries. Not only is he one of the top song writers, but he was for a time a successful attorney, a business man (he has his own song publishing company), a pianist, and an orchestra leader.

That man Hoagy was born in Bloomington, Indiana, into a home where music was a strong influence. His mother was an excellent pianist and Hoagy played by ear from the time he was 11. His folks wanted him to be a business man, and he took a law degree at the University of Indiana. Here he was occasionally a problem to the authorities, always organizing some deal like the Royal Order of Bent Eagles (a jazz fraternity), or he was smuggling suitcases of champagne to Indiana from New York to pay his law school tuition.

For kicks he organized a dance band which turned out to be a paying proposition, source of expense money. He played hot piano with the miraculous gang of hepcats of that time, Miff Mole, Frankie Trumbauer, the Dorsey and the DeMarcus brothers, and the immortal Bix Biederbecke, a close pal of The Hoag (who was then known to his cronies as Hogwash McCorkle).

His first song was published in 1924, "Riverboat Shuffle." He wrote two others soon after, "Boneyard Shuffle" and "Washboard Blues." "Washboard" introduced him to Paul Whiteman, and a close enduring friendship developed. He was offered a spot with a music publishing company when he graduated, but he was determined to hang out his shingle and get to work breaking wills and marriages. He went south to Miami, Florida, which was then strictly boom town stuff, and did a booming business in courtrooms.

But that old rhythm chair had him. He started writing tunes again, began playing piano, and the Case of Doe vs. Doe, Incompatibility, got lost in the shuffle. He went north when the Florida bubble burst, playing in dance halls for awhile, and then returning to Indianapolis to give law another whirl.

On a trip home to Bloomington, he wrote a new jazz piece. Friend Stewart Gorrell thought up a title for it, a word Hoagy never had heard, "Stardust." Publishers assigned lyri-cist Mitchell Parrish to supply lyrics to replace Hoagy's not-too-good ones. For three years the tune got nowhere. Then after musician friends plugged it, and Isham Jones recorded it, it began to catch on.

Hoagy had been working for $12 a week in the Chase National Bank, and for the Strauss Investment Co., which failed, impressing on Hoagy the vagaries of the business world. If life and income were to be uncertain, they might as well be uncertain while you were doing what you wanted to do. The coincidental rise to popularity of "Stardust," with the accompanying royalty checks, was the final point in deciding Hoagy in favor of a composing career.

Hoagy's songs finally brought him to Hollywood for studio work, and he established his home here, turning out such hits as "Rockin' Chair," "Skylark," "Small Fry," "Blue Orchids," "Two Sleepy People," "I Get Along Without You Very Well," "Lamplighter Serenade," "Little Old Lady," "Lazybones" (which he and Johnny Mercer wrote in 20 minutes), "Music Master," and about six dozen others.

His own favorite, he believes, is "Little Old Lady." The song which he thought should have been a much bigger hit than it was, is "One Morning In May," which was not too well-received.

On a trip to New York, Hoagy dated a former Indiana girlfriend and she brought her kid sister along for the ride. The sister was a model, Ruth Meinardi. The ride continued, but with Ruth and Hoagy alone. They were married in 1936, have two sons, Hoagy Bix (after Bix Biederbecke) and Randy Bob. They live in a lovely rambling home in Beverly Hills.

Among Hoagy's most cherished possessions are a group of small china figurines representing various old-fashioned musicians, which Ruth gave him for a present. Too, he prizes his record collection in which there are many priceless collectors' items, including a first pressing of "Stardust," which was recorded through horns with Hoagy singing his original lyrics. He has every Bix Biederbecke recording ever made.

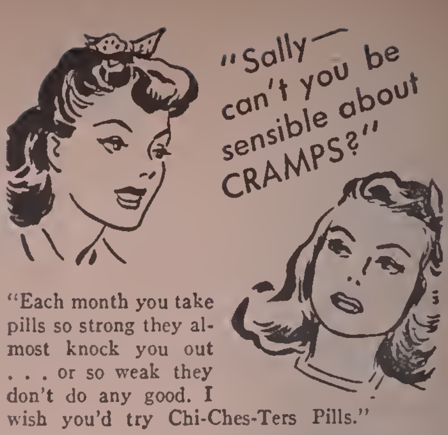
His Sunday night radio program, "Open House At Hoagy's," is enjoying gratifying popularity. Hoagy sings, reads lines, and discusses his music and his screen roles. In his spare time he is revising a 75,000-word manuscript, "Jazzbanders," a book which he has written about his old jazz cronies. He has a keen sense of humor, is witty, restless, and nervous. He has insomnia. His main extravagance is the stock market. (There is probably some connection.)

Hoagy confounds experts who maintain experience is the sole basis for fine acting. Perhaps the reason is that he is the character instead of acting it.

THE END

GOING, GOING, GONE—WITH TOP HAT:

Alexander Kirkland, Broadway star and recently divorced husband of Gypsy Rose Lee, returned to Hollywood to dispose of 12 rooms full of antique furniture. This announcement was carried in all metropolitan daily Los Angeles papers, of course, and one writing wag suggested that the auctioneer placard the beds: "Gypsy Rose Lee Slept Here."



"Sally— can't you be sensible about CRAMPS?"

"Each month you take pills so strong they almost knock you out . . . or so weak they don't do any good. I wish you'd try Chi-Ches-Ters Pills."

Chi-Ches-Ters do more than merely deaden simple menstrual pain. One ingredient tends to help relax muscular tension usually associated with periodic pain. An added iron factor tends to help build up your blood. You usually get best results if you begin taking Chi-Ches-Ters three days before your period. Get a 50¢ box from your druggist today!

THE CLOCK (M-G-M) is a fine showcase for "the return of Private Hargrove"—namely Bob Walker—and with Judy Garland as the girlfriend he makes a fine job of being a bewildered G. I. from somewhere in the Mid-West, arriving in The Big City for the first time and blinking his eyes at all the tall buildings. It presents an appealing situation, the boy who's in New York on a last 48-hour leave, about to be shipped overseas, and meeting the girl he wants to marry. The trouble is, this picture breaks the most fundamental rule for what makes a good story—being only a situation.

Search as you will, through all the series of overdrawn incidents, and you won't find what classifies as a plot. Perhaps none was intended. Perhaps the purpose was no more than to portray a tender snatch of life from everyday living; but even granting that to be the case, the criticism is: it's overextended. It's also sentimental, it's also more-than-sometimes-monotonous.

With all due appreciation of the script problem which confronted Director Vincente Minnelli, we say Preston Sturges could have handled the assignment far better; for he'd have improved the telling of the real-life tale by compromising naturalism with the high farce of sharp satire . . . which might have helped.

IT HAPPENED IN SPRINGFIELD (Warner Bros.), with Andrea King, Warren Douglas, Charles Drake, John Qualen, William Forrest and Arthur Hohl, is a special featurette based upon the famous Springfield plan.

And what's that? In Springfield, Mass., there's an organized fight for racial tolerance. Children are actually taught to live American democracy, at the Charles Brookings School in Springfield. There's adult education in democratic principles, too.

A 20-minute short which will start you thinking, and keep you thinking for a long time afterward!

THOSE ENDEARING YOUNG CHARMS (RKO-Radio), is a smart, modern romantic comedy based on the 1944 Broadway hit of the same name. Robert Young is the Air Corps Lt., described as "a smoothie," who attempts to steal a girl (Laraine Day) away from a former buddy. Falling in love with her wasn't according to plan, but it happened.

The place, New York City; the "others in the cast," Ann Harding, Bill Williams, Marc Cramer, Larry Tierney and Glenn Vernon.

PATRICK THE GREAT (Universal) was Donald O'Connor's last flicker before he changed his status from citizen to soldier. Pat Donahue, Sr. (Donald Cook) is an aging ham musical comedy actor, still playing juvenile roles. He's rightly proud of his young son, Pat, Jr. (Donald O'Connor), a brash young thing who runs a little theatre for the young 'uns, among 'em the irrepressible Peggy Ryan. Pat, Jr. gets to take over Pat Sr.'s part in a Broadway show; Frances Dee (here a writer of cook books) takes over the "old man," and the fun and frolic come to a happy, happy ending.

COLONEL EFFINGHAM'S RAID (20th Century-Fox)—Charles Coburn is the colonel and his "raid" is more civic-interest political than the title of the picture implies—but executed in a style and spirit that's "strictly regulation," becoming of an officer who, though retired from active duty, will always have the spit and polish of the service in his blood.

William Eythe is the colonel's second cousin, a bright young reporter on The Leader; Joan Bennett is the society editor of the same paper—in Fredericksville, Georgia, where all this takes place.

THE FIGHTING GUARDSMAN (Columbia) is a costume piece based on an Alexandre Dumas novel. Willard Parker is the young nobleman who joins forces with the peasants against the tyranny of Louis XVI (Lloyd Corrigan). His lovely lady (Anita Louise) is torn betwen loyalty to her royalist brother (George Macready) and her amour for the rebel Parker. A mild menace to the lovers is John Loder.

If you like duels, plumed hats and romance—this one is for you!

THE BULLFIGHTER (20th Century-Fox), returns Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy to the screen, in what threatens to be a quick and final finish for poor Stanley—because he looks enough like a certain Spanish matador to be his double, and that's the role he's forced to play.

Stan agrees to being a stand-in for the torrid toreador, having been assured that he'll never have to go into the ring—the real matador has been delayed in arriving as expected; they tell him; but don't worry, old boy, he'll be here in time.

The great day comes, however, and the matador doesn't—not until it's almost too late.

SUDAN (Universal) was originally titled "Queen of the Nile," and we wish somebody would give us one out of three good reasons for the switch!

'Tis about a King's daughter (Maria Montez) who vows to avenge her father's mysterious death, gets herself captured by slavers (all according to the betrayal plot laid by the bad men at court), and rescued . . . first, by a couple of friendly thieves (Jon Hall and Andy Devine); later, by Herua (Turhan Bey), legendary leader of a daring band of escaped slaves. And a lot more romantic, colorful nonsense which apparently presupposes that escape-seeking audiences are naively uncritical—which they'll have to be, if they go for this one!

La Montez, however, gives her all—and is always beautiful. She rides a horse, she dances, she jumps around like a female Douglas Fairbanks. Don't ask for anything more, and you'll not be disappointed.

HOTEL BERLIN (Warner Bros.), based on the Vicki Baum novel, is a story of the Underground at work in Nazi Berlin. If for no other reason—and don't be fooled by that timely setting of the theme—the picture is important and worth seeing, for introducing Andrea King. With Helmut Dantine, Raymond Massey, Faye Emerson, Peter Lorre, Alan Hale, George Coulouris and Henry Daniell (members of the usual Warner Club, we'll call them—because of having "had in common" so many previous pictures by assorted titles).

It's so too-easy, portraying all that's wrong with Germany and what should be done about it, just by collecting all the representative types under one Nazi roof. But Vicki Baum was evidently encouraged, by the success of "Grand Hotel," into thinking she'd devised a good formula, so why try a new one?

BELLS OF ROSARITA (Republic) If cowboys get you to the movies—this one will. They've all been rounded up in one fell swoop—Wild Bill Elliott, Allan Lane, Donald Barry, Robert Livingston, Sunset Carson—with Roy Rogers, the reigning King of 'em all, atop "what a horse!" Trigger.

The receipt for a ranch owned by Sue Farnum (Dale Evans) and held by William Ripley (Grant Withers) gives all the boys a chance to strut their stuff in an effort to prove that she's the rightful owner. George "Gabby" Hayes and Adele Mara make for the fun and fill out a fine cast for a Western.

HONEYMOON AHEAD (Universal) marks the return to the screen of Allan Jones. It's a slight story of cops and robbers chasing Orpheus (Allan Jones). The cops want him for a suspected bank robbery, which was really committed by one of his former cell mates in a ruse to get him back to prison so he can sing for the Blackmore Prison choir. Grace McDonald teams up with the singing sinner for the final kiss; and Jack Overman (Knuckles, to you) is the heel who commits the robbery in Orpheus' name.

BOSTON BLACKIE BOOKED ON SUSPICION (Columbia)—Chester Morris, in his efforts to uncover the mystery of the counterfeit rare edition owned by his book dealer friend (Lloyd Corrigan), gets tagged for the deed himself—wherefore the title. And thereby hangs the chase! Lynn Merrick turns out to be the girl murderer and Boston Blackie tracks her down—but good. George E. Stone skulks around as an underworld character, and Richard Lane is the dumb detective.

TELL IT TO A STAR (Republic) A swank Florida hotel is the setting for the nefarious chicanery of phony "Colonel" Ambrose Morgan (Alan Mowbray of the raised eyebrows). As the uncle of Carol Lambert (Ruth Terry), a cigarette girl, the enterprising "Colonel" hornswoggles the owner of the hotel (Isabel Randolph) into taking a shine to him and getting his niece a singing spot with the hotel orchestra. The leader of the band is unsuspecting Robert Livingston. And just as it was writ in the script—bandleader gets singer and Mowbray gets rich widow. Horace Lovelace (Franklin Pangborn) is a crooked gambler who gets sent up the river for being caught.

YOUR PROBLEM AND MINE

to give her another chance. I sincerely hope you are able to work this out, for I liked the tone of your letter so much, and am sending you all my best wishes for a happy outcome.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My problem is that I have to get along with my in-laws. My husband has been overseas for fifteen months, and every time I visit his parents, they start nagging me, until I have begun to hate them. My husband is an only son, and his mother is jealous of him. He is mine now and I feel I should be treated as his wife. They buy me nice things but there is something more than that that I want—it is for them to let us live our own life.

They live in a small town not far from here and come after me every week-end. I go because my husband wanted me to be with them whenever possible. Do you think I should let things ride as they are until he comes back?

Denise

Dear Denise:

I am afraid, from the tone of your letter, that the jealousy is not entirely confined to your in-laws. There seems to be quite a bit of it in you too. Am I right?

So long as your husband has asked you to be nice to his parents, I think you should try to overlook any unpleasantness for the time being, and do as he has asked you to do. You know, he is doing a lot of things that he doesn't particularly like either.

Try to see his parents' point-of-view, be grateful for the gifts they give you, and let the desire to live your own life wait until your husband returns—for then there will be the two of you to work that problem out successfully. If you determine to be sweet and courteous on your week-end visits, I am sure it will call forth similar treatment of you by his parents.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I am coming to you with a very difficult problem. The boy whom I loved so dearly has been reported killed in action. Since then I have been corresponding with a boy in the Navy, with whom I have had only one date, and he has asked me to marry him when he comes home.

But somehow I feel as if the boy who was reported killed will turn up some day. What do you think I should do?

Kay

Dear Kay:

I certainly do not think you should promise the boy in the Navy that you will marry him upon his return, for it is apparent that you do not love him at the present time. Why don't you write him that you want to continue being friends, but feel you should know him better before making such an important decision!

I am sorry about the boy whom you lost, and understand your feelings. It will take you some time to get adjusted to the situation, but I do not think you should shut yourself away from your friends and activities. Life must go on, you know, and you cannot refuse to face actuality by hiding from it. You are young, with a good life before you, so make the best of it.

Good luck,
Jane Wyman

HERE IS YOUR ERNIE PYLE

to be clean and neat. He's always trying to shave, always trying to clean his nails with some little gadget.

"John Steinbeck, who's up in northern California, saw Ernie just before he took off for the South Pacific, and John wrote me: 'Poor Ernie's off again. He has a bear by the tail and he can't let go, though it's cuffing him to death.' That's a perfect description of Pyle's attitude. He hates his job, but he can't quit till it's over.

"Incidentally, it was Steinbeck who paid Ernie a great compliment when he said, 'There are two kinds of war going on—the great ideological, global war we all know about; and then there's another war. There's Ernie Pyle's war.'

"They say Ernie worries about his health, whereas he worries about his health probably less than anybody in the world. Although he admits he has the damndest health, I never saw him taking a pill.

"When he came to Hollywood and would visit us at our house, the first thing I'd do was put him to bed for an hour to rest, so I could talk to him. He'd protest, but I'd make him lie down anyway. Paulette would throw a cover over him, and he'd say, 'Well, all right, but call me in ten minutes.' We'd promise, but of course never did. He'd sleep about an hour and then get up and say, kind of sheepishly, 'Guess I must have dropped off!' Ernie adores Paulette. They were always having a lot of fun, kidding around all the time."

As far as appearance goes, you might not have picked Meredith and Pyle as "look-alikes." But by the time the make-up department got through with Meredith, the resemblance was uncanny. They shaved the top of his head to give him that familiar bald pate, pasted a little fringe of white hair around the edge, and when a pipe and portable typewriter had been added, there was Ernie Pyle—or a reasonable facsimile thereof.

Meredith used to be famous for what people called "that crumpled look," which the Army has taken out of him. But he understands that careless-about-details way of wearing clothes which is characteristic of Pyle. He has that same informal, amiable manner, and even the quality of his voice is similar.

"The Story of G. I. Joe" is the first picture of this war about the foot soldier. Practically every other branch of the service has been honored on the screen, and this one fulfills General Eisenhower's request for "just a bit of glory for the infantry."

During the shooting of the picture, Ernie Pyle spent considerable time in Hollywood, often visiting the set, where he renewed acquaintance with many actors and soldiers he had known overseas.

Another welcome visitor to the set was Paulette Goddard. She always called her husband "Curly" on account of his bald head, and just to help along with the ribbing, the gang would make a point of calling Captain Meredith "Mr. Goddard" while she was around.

can always count on a gay evening. They're constantly kidding each other, always belittling, sometimes flirting. Yet there's such a strong undercurrent of good feeling and appreciation for each other's intelligence that the kidding never gets into bickering, as it so easily can with less generous people. You're always conscious of their deep comradeship beneath the surface of amusing banter. Each has a rare capacity for enjoying as well as creating humor, which is why they have so much fun together.

They first met four years ago, when both were in "Second Chorus" with Fred Astaire, and have been good friends ever since.

"I never could see why people were so surprised when we were married," says Meredith. "We had been friends for years. She even managed my farm back east for me while I was away. You have to be pretty good friends to do anything like that for somebody."

Mention of that farm naturally brought up the question of how seriously Meredith takes his farming. He has a slow, drawling way of leading up to a point, then suddenly springing some hilariously funny remark that makes you feel as though you had been tripped and thrown right on your face—but you love it.

"I like to farm," he explained soberly. "Yes, I work at it when I'm there. I raised some peas once that cost slightly less than fifty cents a pod! It was like eating refined gold."

"How about Miss Goddard?"

"Oh, she likes to farm," he said, with a wink and slow grimace. "Yes, she does." Then dropping the sarcasm, "Let me tell you, she's a worse farmer than I am, and you can say that I said it, too! Waldo Peirce, our neighbor back there, asked Paulette once, 'When are you coming back to stroke a colt?' That's all the farming she did."

The Merediths are fond of taking long strolls along the beach near their Santa Monica home. At least, Paulette is. Meredith says it's her idea, and insists it doesn't make an outdoors man of him. He just goes along for the company, as who wouldn't?

Amusing things are always happening to this pair when they go out. There was, for instance, the day when they went down to the amusement pier at the beach, and took along the five children of William Wellman

The newlywed James Dunns (nee Edna Rush, radio singer); they married in Philadelphia.

(who directed "G. I. Joe"). They were all having a grand time, when suddenly a stern looking woman recognized them and said sniffily, "Well! When did THIS happen???"

Happy as their life looks, however, it hasn't been entirely unclouded. The loss of their baby a few months ago was a bitter disappointment to both Paulette and Meredith. But they're not the kind of people who indulge in self-pity, no matter what happens, and they don't forget the many good things of life which they have to be thankful for, including Paulette's quick recovery of her health. Pretty philosophical people, these Merediths.

When asked if knowing and playing the part of Pyle had influenced him in any way, Meredith said, "I don't believe one person can change another basically. People don't change. As far as playing the part goes, if I'd been influenced by every part I've played, I'd have taken an awful beating!

"I don't believe that people influence you, as much as that you seek to be influenced by people. You trend toward what you want to be.

"The people who've always impressed me most are writers. Most of my best friends have been writers. Maxwell Anderson, who wrote four plays for me, is a great friend of mine; others are John Steinbeck, Harold Ross, editor of the New Yorker, John Patrick, who wrote 'The Hasty Heart,' now on Broadway. In my early days, before I was known at all, among my best friends were Carl Van Doren, Sam Hoffenstein, Charlie MacArthur, Ben Hecht.

"The artists Henry Varnum Poor and Waldo Peirce also are friends of mine. I seek the companionship of people who deal in ideas more than in reproductions. In fact, I think all artists—dancers, musicians, actors, etc.—are slightly frustrated writers or creators.

(Sounds like the makings of a good hot argument there.)

"I believe that an actor ought to try not to spend too much time with actors. Not that actors aren't as good company as anybody else, but because you're likely to become too self-conscious with actors.

"To illustrate what I mean—there was once a wise man, and to him a young person came and said, 'I want Betty is currently biting her nails because, while she was on U.S.O. Victory Committee tour throughout the South Pacific, she gave her home address to a great many attractive and courteous men, assuring them that if they ever got to Hollywood, she would be only too happy to see them again.

Now Betty has moved and she is worried for fear one of these men may return, find that the address is no longer correct, and conclude that he was the victim of a low trick.

Before jumping to any such conclusion, sir, get in touch with Paramount; Betty's studio will then get in touch with her, and the next thing you know, you'll be eating steaks—if Betty can amass the red points.

Can't Keep Grandma In Her Chair

She's as Lively as a Youngster— Now her Backache is better

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

to be an actor.' 'Oh, no! Never be that, my son. For you will never laugh but you will say, I am laughing. And you will never cry but you will say, I am crying.'"

Meredith delivers these opinions apparently in dead earnest, and still you somehow wait for that characteristic surprise finish with the humorous twist—but it doesn't come. He loves nothing better than gab sessions, and frequently gets off classic remarks that make history—like the time when he defined "oomph" as the fourth dimension in sex!

One of his favorite subjects is that nobody should take acting too seriously or stay at it too long. Hollywood's never been too sure whether he's serious, kidding in earnest, or just kidding.

Putting two and two together, from his own remarks, you don't have to be Mr. and Mrs. North to figure out that he wants to be a writer—that is, unless he's kidding. But if you ask him point blank whether that's his aim, he gives you that quizzical grin and says with a slightly mysterious air, "Well I have plans, when the war's over. But I don't like to talk about things until after I've done them. I'll tell you this much, though—I don't intend to be an actor forever."

One thing is certain, if Burgess Meredith ever does decide to become a writer, he'll never be at a loss for something to write about, for he has a wealth of experience, education, and ideas. He crammed more variety into the three years between 1927, when he left Amherst, and 1930, when he was admitted to Eva le Gallienne's Student Repertory Group, than most people get in a lifetime. His jobs have included reporting for newspapers, working in a haberdashery shop, selling vacuum cleaners, acting as a runner on Wall Street, serving in the complaint department of Saks Fifth Avenue, and finally shipping to South America as an ordinary seaman—to mention only the most spectacular.

Throughout his school years, he developed his talents for writing and acting. He took part in school dramatic productions, and also edited his school paper for one year.

In February, 1924, at the age of fifteen, he won the David Brooks Anglo-American Prize Essay Cup for an essay entitled: "The Benefit to Christian Civilization from a Complete Understanding and Friendly Relationship Between the United States of America and the British Empire," which was printed in pamphlet form and distributed to students in English schools. Sounds like a little opus that could be distributed to grown-ups in both countries right now, with considerable benefit to Christian civilization. It's an interesting coincidence, too, that while Captain Meredith was serving in England, he appeared in an Army orientation film called "Welcome to Britain" designed to promote British-Yank understanding.

One post-war plan which he's not so reticent to discuss is to do a picture in France. He and Paulette have been studying French like mad, and though he claims she can "parlez-vous français" much faster than he can, he has already made one picture in that language for the Army, called "Salute to France." He's also made partial arrangements to produce and direct a picture in England, starring Paulette.

GALLANT GENT

"I was saving that for Hollywood."

He worked in stock, including the lead in the Carnegie Players production of "Berkeley Square." Talent scouts picked up the scent, tested him, and asked if he'd like to go to Hollywood.

As it happened, a producer friend of his was leaving for the coast about the same time, for a big berth at Paramount—he thought. "Stick with me, Lee," the friend told him, "and we'll really go places together."

But the producer had a quarrel with the studio, and when Lee arrived he found that they were "really going places together," all right—"Right out on our ears!" he says. At least as far as his big chances were concerned.

He was cast in a couple of films—"Internes Can't Take Money" and "Last Train from Madrid"—and made a friend of an assistant director who got him a reading for "I Met Him in Paris." (They didn't even know that he was already under contract there.)

In eight years he did a staggering succession of films—nothing spectacular—starting from the bottom on nearly every lot in town. He was under contract to M-G-M when Columbia asked loan of him for the role in "Cover Girl"—which part, incidentally, he took against the advice of most everyone he knew. There wasn't even a finished script for him to read, when he accepted; but he had the utmost faith in Director Charles Vidor. And that faith paid off.

Lee's now happily under contract to Columbia, and his pals will tell you that Hollywood should be taking advantage of his singing and dancing abilities, that he should be starring in musicals as well as romancing in them. Lee himself would love to do a good mystery story, like "Laura"—and would, in fact, like to star in the mystery he's writing, if the plot weren't such a mystery to him.

He's been married for four years to exotic-looking Helene del Valle, Junior Leaguer and tennis expert, daughter of a pioneer motion picture family. Just as you'd expect of any guy who should come riding up on a white horse, theirs was a story-book romance.

He asked her for a date when they met at the fashionable Westside Tennis Club in Beverly Hills, at which time Lee was probably one of the world's worst tennis players and as Helene admits, "It was the best thing I did." It was no love game. She beat the heck out of him and Lee, thoroughly irked, was sorry he'd made the date. But they went to the Trocadero that night and had such fun dancing that a different kind of love game got underway.

For some peculiar reason—peculiar to Lee, that is—as their romance progressed Helen's tennis got worse, and apparently Lee began to play a whale of a game. But he did learn quickly, and as Mrs. Bowman herself proudly says, "I couldn't possibly beat him now."

After going together for two years, they quarreled and decided to break it all off. All was over between them. And Helene, feeling pretty blue, was going away to Honolulu to "forget" him. So Hoagy Carmichael, a good friend of theirs, thought it would be nice to have a going-away party for Helene and invite Lee just so they'd be together one last time.

At the party Lee and Helene weren't aware other guests were even there. They just sat and stared at each other. Finally he asked her if she'd marry him when she got back from forgetting him in Honolulu. That didn't seem to make sense. So he said, "What about marrying me tomorrow?" Then, a little later, "What about right now?"

Not wanting to break up the party, they threw their coats out the window and then casually eloped out the door after them. In a pouring rain, they headed for Tia Juana—only to find that there was a three-day marriage law there. But some little Mexican boy told them he had an uncle who was mayor of a nearby Mexican village. "My uncle will marry you, Senor," he said confidently.

Cold, wet, and disappointed, they drove on and were married by the uncle at about 4:30 that morning. The entire ceremony was in Spanish, and Helene says she kept saying "Si . . . Si" in all the wrong places. She still doesn't know what she promised Lee she'd do, but there wasn't a "No" in the lot.

And whatever it was, it's worked out plenty okay. Their marriage is indeed—oh, most definitely!—a heartening picture of Hollywood home life, founded on a warm mutual respect, consideration and a sense of humor.

They live just two blocks from the Pacific—in Santa Monica—in an old-fashioned dark brown shingle house with gables, an old weather vane on top, a bright cheery red front door.

It was decidedly a dismal-looking place, when they bought it. Wall paper hanging down in gobby masses, orange floors, and all done inside in sickly light colors that matched the cold fog which sweeps in from the ocean in the afternoons. But Lee loves to work around the house, and Helene is an expert interior decorator; so they plunged into the old place and came up with a warm, charming home that looks a lot like Lee's old home in Cincinnati.

Before they were married, Helene liked very old things and Lee the very new. Everything about him was streamlined, modernistic furnishings, man-about-townish. The Chromium Kid. But now he shares his wife's love of antiques and usually goes her a century better, poking around in antique shops and old junk stores and bringing back things for the house.

If you clang that brass knocker now you'll walk into a charming, colorful home that shows it sees a heap o' livin'. Rooms done in warm green woodwork with green or red print wallpaper, a green divan, and white curtains tied back by red ribbons. A cabinet which holds a rare collection of Delft china. Candles everywhere. Old kerosene lamps on the dining room table. An old English leather hatbox with Helene's knitting needles and yarns of all colors peeking out. An old spinning wheel that Lee's mother gave them. A backgammon board with two chairs pushed back at just the right angle, looking as if their owners might slide in and start rolling just any time.

In addition to the regular members already named, the Bowman family consists of "Mac," the baby's nurse, Herbert, their cook, and Chesapeake,

BRUSH AWAY GRAY HAIR

... AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly and easily tint telltale streaks of gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Used for 30 years by thousands of women (men, too)—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless. No skin test needed, active coloring agent is purely vegetable. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch as new gray appears. Easy to prove by tinting a test lock of your hair. 60c and $1.65 (5 times as much) at druggists on money-back guarantee. Get BROWNATONE now, or send for free test bottle. Mention natural color of your hair. Write today–BROWNATONE, Dept. 927, COVINGTON, KY.

the cat—one of an original eleven.

Baby "Beau," a chubby little fellow with big brown eyes and blond curls, will soon be the cause behind Lee's giving his most restrained performance, when comes the day he casually takes Beau into Beverly Hills to his own barber, Maury, to have those curls cut. They keep putting it off, though. "We can't have him growing up like Little Lord Fauntleroy," they both tell each other. Then, "Well . . . maybe just a little longer."

Living with Lee must be fun. As his wife says, "He's the most entertaining person in the world. He's a terrific raconteur and tells the most amusing stories you've ever heard."

He has decided tastes about clothes they both wear. Likes tweeds and wide belts for himself, and approves of extreme things for Helene. Dark nail polish, black gowns cut distinctively, unusual shoes (particularly fancy ankle-strap deals), turbans and extreme hats.

The Bowmans have taken up golf with the same passion they have for tennis, except that in this new sport they're both still mighty bad.

Every Sunday they have a standing golf date with Mr. and Mrs. La Motte Cohu, executive of the Northrop "Black Widow" plant, following which they go to one home or the other and take pot luck together. And until this day Mr. Cohu doesn't know that he's fraternizing with an employee in the parts department at his plant.

Lee has been on call for Northrop Aircraft since he first picked up the newspaper one morning and read that they needed men. He got in his car and went over to make an application, immediately.

"I hear you need help," he said. The personnel man looked up, didn't recognize Lee from any other good-looking guy, and asked in very business-like fashion, "What can you do?"

"Nothing technical," said Lee honestly. "But I can drive a truck. Or carry things. Anything manual. Anything you can do that takes strength and no skill."

"Well," said the man, "let's see . . . I guess you can go into the parts office. You can go over there now and start to work, if you like."

So Bowman rolled up his sleeves, took off his tweed coat and started, as he puts it, "handing out things."

He signed up for a four-hour Victory shift, and his role of hander-outer takes priority over any other he plays now. He's on regular call.

Working in the garden is something he enjoys, too. He's not, as he says, "the kind of gardener who lets his passion for petunias keep him home on Sundays to bury a flock of plants." But he and Helene do spend many hours that way—mostly raking and carrying leaves away.

But most of Lee's homework lately has been centered around his painting. Remember that family garage we said he was painting? Nobody, including Lee, knows why he picked that particular subject—what with oleanders, the blue Pacific, and majestically swaying palm trees at his very door.

But Lee was optimistic. "You'll see," he said. He could paint it. He could paint anything 'till he laid an egg in it.

Well, the picture's finished. And the oft-delayed egg has been laid. What's more, he bows to his wife and admits it. Like I was saying . . . he's a mighty gallant gent.

didn't need to know that person. In other words, I had my philosophy, my way of thinking of doing, and I thought it was the only way. It worked for me, so I didn't see why I should even attempt to look at the world from another's standpoint."

At a very early age, you see, Laraine was forcibly taught that she was somehow not the same as other people. It was a difference which stemmed principally from her religion.

Laraine is a Mormon. To be a Mormon, in Utah, is nothing new. But to be a Mormon in Long Beach, or in Hollywood, is to be marked as "different." It sets you apart, though no one has yet given a good reason why.

When Laraine was in the sixth grade, she heard the mother of a school friend tell her daughter that she wasn't to play with her . . . "because she is a Mormon." When Laraine first went to MGM, the publicity men played up the fact that she neither drank nor smoked, because of her faith, and consequently created in the public mind a somewhat dull girl, who was "not like other people." When she went to parties of Catholics and Jews and Presbyterians, she was the only Mormon present. No one paid any attention to the religions of the other people; they never forgot about Laraine's.

To this day, silly as it sounds, people wonder "what to do" with Laraine when they invite her to their homes. Other girls may not drink or smoke, either; but other girls are never worried about if they do or don't. Laraine is.

Now, she can laugh at it.

"My friends know that I can have as much fun at a party as anyone else. I can talk well and listen well, and I can dance without falling over my partner's feet. Gradually, hostesses have relaxed when I'm around."

Some of them did it for the sake of Ray Hendricks, Laraine's husband. They liked Ray, enough to want to know and like his wife. And they have discovered, once they stopped quivering when the drinks were passed of an evening, that Laraine is one mighty swell gal.

All of this would never have hap-

MAN'S CASTLE:

Do you, by chance, remember lovely, gifted Jane Bryan? When she married, she retired from the screen, and—aside from occasional visits from Bette Davis—she has lost all contact with Hollywood.

For the second time in less years than they like to remember, Warners are losing a valuable player. Joyce Reynolds, the delightful "Janie" around whom an entire series of pictures was planned, has decided to retire from the screen to be with her South Pacific Marine Corps veteran, Lt. Robert Lewis.

Joyce, like Jane Bryan, before her, believes that for her true happiness lies in the home she is keeping for her husband, and not in a career.

pened, to be sure, had Laraine stayed in or around Salt Lake. But she didn't. So, perforce, she began, even as a child, to be self-sufficient, to live within herself, in her own way, according to her own rules. And when she was an adult the habit was so strong, so well-developed that she never considered living any other way.

When she was first at MGM, her best friend told me, Laraine made a practice of doing a scene and then walking to her dressing room, closing the door and reading until she was called again. When she didn't have a date on a Saturday night, she stayed home. It didn't bother her. She wanted to go out with her kind of people, not just anyone, and her kind of people were hard to find. When she met a man, she measured him to her standards. If he didn't fit, bingo! into the discard.

Then she met Ray Hendricks. He was her kind, and yet he wasn't. He was a musician, for one thing, accustomed to being with people who fell into one of two classes: the music-makers, or the music-appreciators. In either case, not what you could really call a class or a kind of people, but proof of the sameness acquired by people for no other reason than that they have "something in common."

Ray was also accustomed to going to dives and listening endlessly to some character make with a piano or a clarinet. But he was successful, too; in his own way, he was as self-sufficient as Laraine. He didn't need her; he didn't think it was a favor when she said she would go out with him.

But Laraine wanted to go out with him. And that marked the beginning of the change. Instead of wanting everyone to give in to her, she began giving in herself, for once. And this is the way she tells it:

"I really didn't like people, up to then. They had to live by the pattern I set, not theirs. But, with Ray, I began meeting a lot of—well, characters. They were his friends and I found I wanted them to be mine. It wasn't always doing what I wanted, either; sometimes Ray wanted what he wanted—to go sit in a jive joint and listen to Coleman Hawkins, for instance; to hear hot music by the hour, hour after hour.

"I found I liked it. I liked the music, the people, and Ray. I decided maybe I'd been missing a great deal. I'd had the feeling of being in a little world by myself, everything was remote from me. Then I crossed over into Ray's world, the real world, let a little air in, and I knew that I'd been wrong—oh so wrong, and for longer than I cared to admit."

Cary Grant, too, was a contributor to this breaking down of the Day defenses. For Cary is the same off-screen as on—a light-hearted, friendly sort of guy. Working with him (in "Mr. Lucky"), it was impossible for Laraine to sit in her dressing room, with the door closed, between takes. Because Cary played games on the set. He sang and pounded an upright piano and pulled gags on people. He wouldn't let anyone be stand-offish, least of all the gal he was doing scenes with, and for the first time—Laraine became one of the gang!

She liked it; it was fun. And since then, pictures are to her more than a business; they're a delightful business full of nice joes. Now, no matter what lot she's on, she is part of the crew.

"Mr. Lucky" was important to her for another reason, too. Given a chance to wear clothes, she made good all that the Marty Martyn publicity had claimed without any takers. He'd been plugging her ability, her charm, her attractiveness. Nobody could see it. She was just a pretty girl who didn't drink, didn't smoke; a dull dish, a Mormon. After "Mr. Lucky" she had the whole town saying: "Where has she been? Why didn't anyone tell us?" And Marty and Laraine, having difficulty hiding their grins in their sleeves, muttered with justice: "We told you so!"

Laraine had one reason for going into "Dr. Wassell": DeMille wanted her, fought for her. And a few years ago, DeMille had been one to say that she would never amount to anything. He ate his words to the tune of a large check every Wednesday.

All of this had an effect on Laraine. "Assurance comes to anyone who really gets a break," she says. "I never was shy, but I never let people get near me. I didn't think they honestly wanted to be near me, to come to my house, to talk to me. And when the studios—who had seemed to want me least of all—started begging Marty to have me sign picture contracts, it couldn't help making me happy. Even though I was a Mormon!" she giggled. "They thought I had something!"

Laraine Day is serious about her religion; she thinks it's a great faith, an intelligent faith. And in many things, Mormonism, she points out, is more liberal than many of the other creeds. For instance, Laraine herself got her first training in a Little Theater sponsored by the church.

And anyway, she has a right to believe what she believes. And as I see it, religion is too personal a thing to be allowed to figure one way or another in a star's publicity.

But it has ceased to matter, really where Laraine is concerned. Because Day is on her way now—but good! And she's one of the happiest, grandest gals you'll ever know—with a delightful husband, a charming little house, and a career that is causing Mr. Morgenthau to beam brightly at all comers. She has changed her attitude towards Hollywood, and people in general; and Hollywood has changed its attitude toward her.

THE END

CUTEST COUPLE IN TOWN:

When he was in the army, Russ Randall wrote a fan letter to Bonita Granville, telling her how greatly he admired her, and asking her for a date "when I get out of the army." Bonita answered that if Mr. Randall ever happened to be in Hollywood, he should call on her, by all means.

A fast two months later, Russ Randall was discharged from the army, and promptly took Bonita up on her promise. After one date, she said, "I know someone you should meet," and introduced him to Jane Powell. She also arranged for him to be given a screen test.

Currently, Russ is working in "A Walk In The Sun" and squiring Jane everywhere. They make a very attractive twosome.

THIS IS MYSELF

of these days I'll buy one, learn to play it well and make a comprehensive study of music. Perhaps I'll compose a few things.

I ENVY

People who are always nonchalant.

Men who can wear vivid colors. Lloyd Bacon, who directed me in "Sunday Dinner For A Soldier," loves wild ties, brilliantly colored shirts, anything loud and gay. He can get away with them. We used to lay bets on the set as to what he'd wear next, and he got a great kick out of being kidded. I like that, but I'm a sober-hued bird myself.

IF I COULD LIVE OVER ONE DAY OF MY LIFE

It wouldn't be an exciting day. I was thrilled when I won my radio audition contest, when I got my radio contracts, when I knew I was to have my first screen test, when I came to Hollywood and the day I heard I was to do "Lifeboat." But there was so much worry mixed up with the elation of those things. How would I succeed? Could I get by? No, I'd choose one of the simple, happy days... Perhaps one of the Sundays when I lived in Chicago and shared an apartment with three other boys. We had friends in Elgin, Illinois, who had two children and three dogs. We used to go out there and play with the kids, walk the dogs, help around the house. There'd be one or two other guests and we'd all sit around and talk and just be congenial.

I'M GUILTY OF

Worrying;

Showing my feelings;

Getting all worked up over things, if I have time to think.

I'M A SPUR-OF-THE-MOMENT MAN

If I'm to be master of ceremonies, I like to be told about it two seconds before I go on. Then I don't get worked up, I'm at ease, I have no trouble improvising.

I HATE

Parties carefully planned.

Too much formality.

Talk about illness and operations.

Off-key singing.

Anything phony.

HOW TO IMPROVE YOUR CONVERSATION

by Grenville Kleiser

To say what you want to say and to say it well is a really practical aid toward achieving success in business and social life. Through this volume, the reader will receive practical suggestions for self-instruction in this accomplishment. The author gives you innumerable anecdotes and stories to illustrate and point up his advice. And after you have finished being entertained by this book, you will find that you know a lot more about how to handle your talk—and your silences — than you thought possible. SPECIAL $1.00

How To Write Good SOCIAL LETTERS

Everyone wants to write letters that are charming reflections of their own personality, letters that are suited to their purpose, gay and friendly, or sympathetic, or simply courteous and correct replies, as the case may be.

She gives complete and authentic information on the writing (and answering) of every type of communication, telegrams, cable messages, greeting cards, formal invitations and replies, formal letters, informal letters, and personal business letters. She tells you how to put warmth, character, distinction and charm into friendly letters. Besides the examples of the letters themselves, there are chapters on punctuation, capitalization and other points of grammatical form. One of the most interesting chapters of the book is that containing letters of famous people, noteworthy for their charm and expressiveness. SPECIAL $1.00

Includes suggestions for writing to "Your MAN in the Service."

You Too Can Have a BABY!

by Abner I. Weisman

Only those who actually suffer from a barren marriage, can really understand the frustration and heartaches. (In certain extreme cases, the marriage itself may be wrecked by this cause.) In "YOU, TOO CAN HAVE A BABY" Dr. Abner I. Weisman gives a detailed explanation of the factors that may prevent normal reproductive functioning; he offers simple and sound advice which oftentimes is all that is needed; also describes the methods medical science uses today to remove many of the obstacles to successful conception and childbirth. Other than in cases of actual physical incapability, this book should prove helpful. Also explains the anatomy and physiology of reproduction, how to test pregnancy, what constitutes sterility, how to test sterility of male and female, plan for parenthood, etc. Often barrenness is due to minor conditions which can easily be cleared away. Having a baby is truly life's greatest thrill. PRICE $1.98

HOW TO DECORATE YOUR OWN HOME

Every woman her own decorator; every home a dream home! It's easy if you follow the advice and ideas given in HOW TO BE YOUR OWN DECORATOR by Helen Koues (for many years head of home decorating division of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE). This brand-new book gives you hundreds of plans and suggestions on how to choose and buy, combine and arrange furniture and accessories for every room and nook in the house. Tells you what is good furniture and good taste (and why), what goes with what and how to get a full dollar's value for every dollar spent.

Explains how to recognize at a glance the traditional furniture types and periods; and how to live with them. Also contains a complete section devoted to Modern Furniture and Decoration replete with ideas on colors, light and space, unusual pieces, arrangements, etc.

Whether you just want to refurnish a room or two—or decorate a whole house from top to bottom—don't buy a piece of furniture or a yard of material until you get this book. Even if you are only thinking of new draperies, slip covers or bed-spreads (there's even instruction on making them yourself), or getting new tables, lamps, repainting, or new ideas for ceilings, panels, unusually shaped rooms—the author hasn't missed or omitted a trick. 128 pages of easy-to-follow advice and ideas—with over 200 photographs and illustrations of room arrangements and pieces, and an invaluable guide for color schemes. WHY BE SHY?

BY DR. L. E. BISCH

The first step is to make the reader find out just how shy he or she is. This is done through a carefully planned test of 50 Questions to determine the reader's Shyness Quotient. Then, with the SQ determined, the reader discovers how to conquer shyness at home; in business and in social life; how to banish over-consciousness of sex; the sure-fire rules of conquering shyness permanently; how to replace over-sensitiveness and a sense of inferiority with self-mastery; how to rid one's character of the evil effects of shyness; how to abolish artificiality in one's behavior and how to achieve naturalness; how to prevent shyness in children; how to exercise and retain one's new found poise and self-confidence. In addition to being helpful, it is enjoyable reading. It is written with humor and sympathy. And above all, it deals with the most fascinating of all subject — yourself! $2.00 SPECIAL

IT'S FUN TO BE FIT

An Illustrated Book of Common Sense and Exercises by Olga

Just reading this book will appear to make you younger looking, stronger feeling and better proportioned. Her method is to make exercise a part of one's daily living, to be performed while working, resting, playing or talking.

Olga promises you that you can—do away with double chins, a flaring fanny, rolls of fat around the top of your girdle, a bulging mid-section and other padded parts . . .

If you are thin, you can put on muscle and weight and build up stamina. The advice and exercises are honestly beneficial and can be done by the laziest, stiffest, most unwilling people. And besides, Olga's witty drawings (over 100) show clearly how to follow her methods. INVENTORY CLEARANCE. $1.00

I ENJOY

Card tricks—when other people do them.

Surprises—pleasant ones.

Reading . . . best sellers, history, biographies, autobiographies, mysteries, books about music.

Letters from home, no matter how they are put together.

I WANT

A police dog, a shepherd, just as soon as I have a place to keep him.

I'M PROUD OF

My family. I want them near me and hope to buy a house for them close to Hollywood where they can have some land and a few chickens —they'd never be happy unless they were busy. But—

THE TURNING POINT IN MY LIFE

Was the day I left home. I had a good job—a white-collar job—and my people didn't want me to give it up. I had practically no money. My family advised me earnestly not to go, but I felt I had to take a chance. I've always been thankful that it turned out well, when I could so easily have been wrong.

I'LL NEVER FORGET

The first of August. I call it my anniversary, because that was the day I left home and was on my own. It was also the day MGM first showed an interest in me. It was the second of August that we started shooting on "Lifeboat."

The first Christmas I was away from home. I love Christmas because I get a kick out of giving presents, and that year I could afford to send home some really fine gifts.

I NEVER REMEMBER

Fragrances. Whenever I say: "That's wonderful—what is it?" I'm likely to be told: "Why, that's the scent you said you liked last week, remember?" And all I can say is: "Oh!"

I LOVE

Food. When it's time to eat, I give it all my attention. I'm the kind of man who eats everything the waitress brings, and then, if I know my companion well, usually wind up eating most of what she brought the other fellow.

I HAVE NO USE FOR

The title of best-dressed man or woman. It belittles a person.

THE FIRST THING THAT INTERESTS ME

When I meet anyone is a certain sympathetic spark. I can't explain it, but I know instantly if I like or dislike a person. If I like him, he never disappoints me. However, if I'm indifferent to him on first meeting and later get to know him and like him, I can be disappointed.

MY IDEAL GIRL

Is honest and sincere and has great kindness. She would never be malicious. She'd have interests in common with me, but I think it would be fun if she enjoyed things I knew nothing about, so that I could learn to enjoy them with her. And I'd like to teach her to understand some of the things I love.

Needn't be glamorously beautiful. I'll think her lovely, anyway.

I GOT A KICK

Out of driving across the country on my first trip west of the Mississippi.

Out of my first trip to New York, eight months before MGM sent me there for my screen test. I had the inside of a week between radio commitments, and I devoted all my time to sightseeing. I saw everything I'd read about for years and found things like the Statue of Liberty, Chinatown, Broadway, Fifth Avenue, the views from tall buildings, the various spots where history was made, more thrilling than the books written about them.

Bill Bendix and daughter Stephanie Ann. "Don Juan Quilligan" is his next at 20th.

Winning a jackpot in a sleepy little fishing village in Wisconsin. Up to the moment I put in my coin, turned the handle and the shower of nickles came clattering out all over the place, I'd never even seen a jackpot.

I'M CRAZY ABOUT

Fishing; a battered old hat I wear on fishing trips; almost any kind of sport; children and dogs.

I WANT TO

Go to China after the war. I don't care to fly. I like to look at things and dream. An airplane whisks you along so fast, you've hardly noticed a thing before ssssst! —it's gone. No time to dream. I'd like to go by slow steamer and caravan, just loaf along.

Make pictures in South America, Russia and Alaska, with plenty of time to see the countries, get acquainted with the people and know and enjoy their music.

I BELIEVE

There are two kinds of Luck. One kind is the winning-a-jackpot luck, because that's pure chance. The other is the luck that comes because of certain basic dreams. You have held fast to your dream, slaved for it—suddenly it's yours. People say: "You lucky guy, things fall in your lap!" You grin, but you know better.

That "What is mine shall come to me". You can't plan life ahead. Too many things happen to spoil plans. But you can prepare. I knew I wanted to act, but I didn't say: "In so many years I'll be on the screen". When I saw a picture, I'd remember some of the lines; when I got home, I'd try them over, see what I could do with them. I never talked about it, but I kept my ambition in mind.

YET I DOUBT

If you can fight and fight for what you want and always hope to win. FATE has something to do with it . . . The TIME arrives, the GATE swings open, and if you are ready, you go in. . . .

THE END

No Matter What Your Age...

NO NEED NOW TO HAVE GRAY HAIR

End Gray Hair Handicaps... Look Years Younger... Far More Attractive...

Gray hair is risky. It screams: "You are getting old!" To end the business and social handicaps of gray hair, all you now have to do is comb it once a day for several days with a few drops of the new KOLOR-BAK sprinkled on your comb, and afterwards regularly only once or twice a week, to keep your hair looking nice. KOLOR-BAK is a solution for artificially coloring gray hair that imparts color and charm and abolishes gray hair worries. Grayness disappears within a week or two and users report the change is so gradual and so perfect that their friends forgot they ever had a gray hair and no one knew they did a thing to it. Decide, today, that you will no longer have gray hair. Get a bottle of the new KOLOR-BAK at your drug or department store without delay.

So Simple, Quick and Easy to Use!

KOLOR-BAK is wonderfully simple and easy to use. No muss; no fuss; no mixing. Takes only a few minutes time while you comb your hair in the regular way. Yes, it's as simple and easy as that, and results must delight you or the makers guarantee your money back.

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

This is a month when a lion goes to the dogs. The dogs being Lassie and Laddie, her canine offspring.

★ ★ ★ ★

Offspring and into a Summer to be made memorable by this attractive M-G-M film, "Son of Lassie".

Those who loved "Lassie Come Home" will respond to this one. The late Eric Knight is not the author, but the new story is based on some of his characters.

★ ★ ★ ★

The story and screen play of "Son of Lassie" were written by Jeanne Bartlett and directed by S. Sylvan Simon. It was produced by Samuel Marx.

★ ★ ★ ★

It has a distinguished cast—Peter Lawford, Donald Crisp, starring. Also June Lockhart, Nigel Bruce, William "Billy" Severn, Leon Ames, Donald Curtis, Nils Asther, Robert Lewis.

★ ★ ★ ★

It is in Technicolor.

★ ★ ★ ★

But the great star of the picture is that most exciting of all collies—the beautiful, the adorable, the perfect Lassie.

★ ★ ★ ★

We are offering an attractive 8" by 10" color portrait of Lassie to those who write to Lassie, Box ML, M-G-M, 1540 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. The painting was done by America's foremost painter of dogs—Paul Bransom.

To cover mailing costs, please send fifteen cents with your request. We suggest that you write fast; the shortage of paper limits the number of prints.

★ ★ ★ ★

As for the film—to paraphrase an old Scottish Song—"you'll love a Lassie"!

★ ★ ★ ★

Those who have seen "National Velvet" and "Meet Me in St. Louis", "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" and "Without Love", may like to know that there are many more M-G-M hits on the way.

★ ★ ★ ★

Watch for "The Valley of Decision", and three mighty Technicolor musicals: "Thrill of a Romance", "Ziegfeld Follies", and "Anchors Aweigh".

As for current events, it looks like a Metro-Goldwyn May.

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

By FREDDA DUDLEY

SPRING:

Shirley Temple was dressing to go to a luncheon at Westlake School For Girls. "If you're going to keep your engagement a secret until your 17th birthday," her mother said, "you'll have to leave your ring at home."

Shirley thought it over. She isn't superstitious, but she felt the usual reluctance of a girl in love to remove her engagement ring. "I'll wear my gloves and simply remove the right one only," she decided, thinking that would solve the problem. She should have known her classmates better.

They leapt on that gloved hand with its suspicious bulge, like bobby soxers on Sinatra. They demanded a full explanation and a glimpse of the jewelry.

The ring is a 2½-carat emerald cut diamond, and the donor is Sergeant John G. Agar of the Army Air Forces. Two years ago, when Shirley was 14 and John was 22, they met at a party given by Ann Gallery, daughter of Zasu Pitts, and a neighbor of the Temples. John promptly asked for a date—Shirley's first official date. They have been having dates ever since, when John was in the vicinity of Hollywood.

On the night of April 6, John and Shirley were driving out Sunset Boulevard around nine-thirty. "Look, Red," said John . . . and you may dream up your own proposal from that point because Shirley and John are keeping the precise words a secret.

They have promised not to marry for two years, but certain Hollywood wiseacres who remember that Shirley has made statements that she would like to be married before she is 18, are crocheting place mats with the initials ST and JA entwined.

THAT'S BACALL, BROTHER:

By the time you read this, Miss Bacall may well be Mrs. Bogart. Currently she is wearing, on the third finger of her left hand, a gorgeous moss green zircon, set in gold and surrounded by diamonds.

Aside from her romantic life, her great interest at present is in her new cocker spaniel puppy, the daughter of her original pooch. The name of the newcomer in the Bacall household—without further explanation—is "Puddles."

CRADLE ROLL:

It was recently revealed that Ann Rutherford and David May took a little girl last August, when she was but 18 hours old, and are rearing her as their own. This was the best-kept secret since what became of Charley Ross.

Captain Ronald Reagan and his pert brown-eyed wife, Jane, have taken a baby boy to be brought up as a brother to Maureen, their four-year-old daughter. Maureen, gazing upon this new member of the family for the first time, issued a cagent communique about the entire institution of infants. "Well, I guess a person gets used to a baby," she said.

Jack Carson and Kay St. Germain parented a nine-pound nine-ounce daughter to be named Germain. Jack took one long, comprehensive look at his new daughter and sighed. "She's got the same heavy lids that I have," he groaned. "She, and Jackaboy and I are going to have to go through life looking like four o'clock in the morning. I had hoped that this baby would look respectable—like her mother."

Veronica Lake and Andre de Toth announced happy expectations for November, 1945.

Here on secret mission, Jean P. Aumont visits Judy Garland on set of "The Harvey Girls."

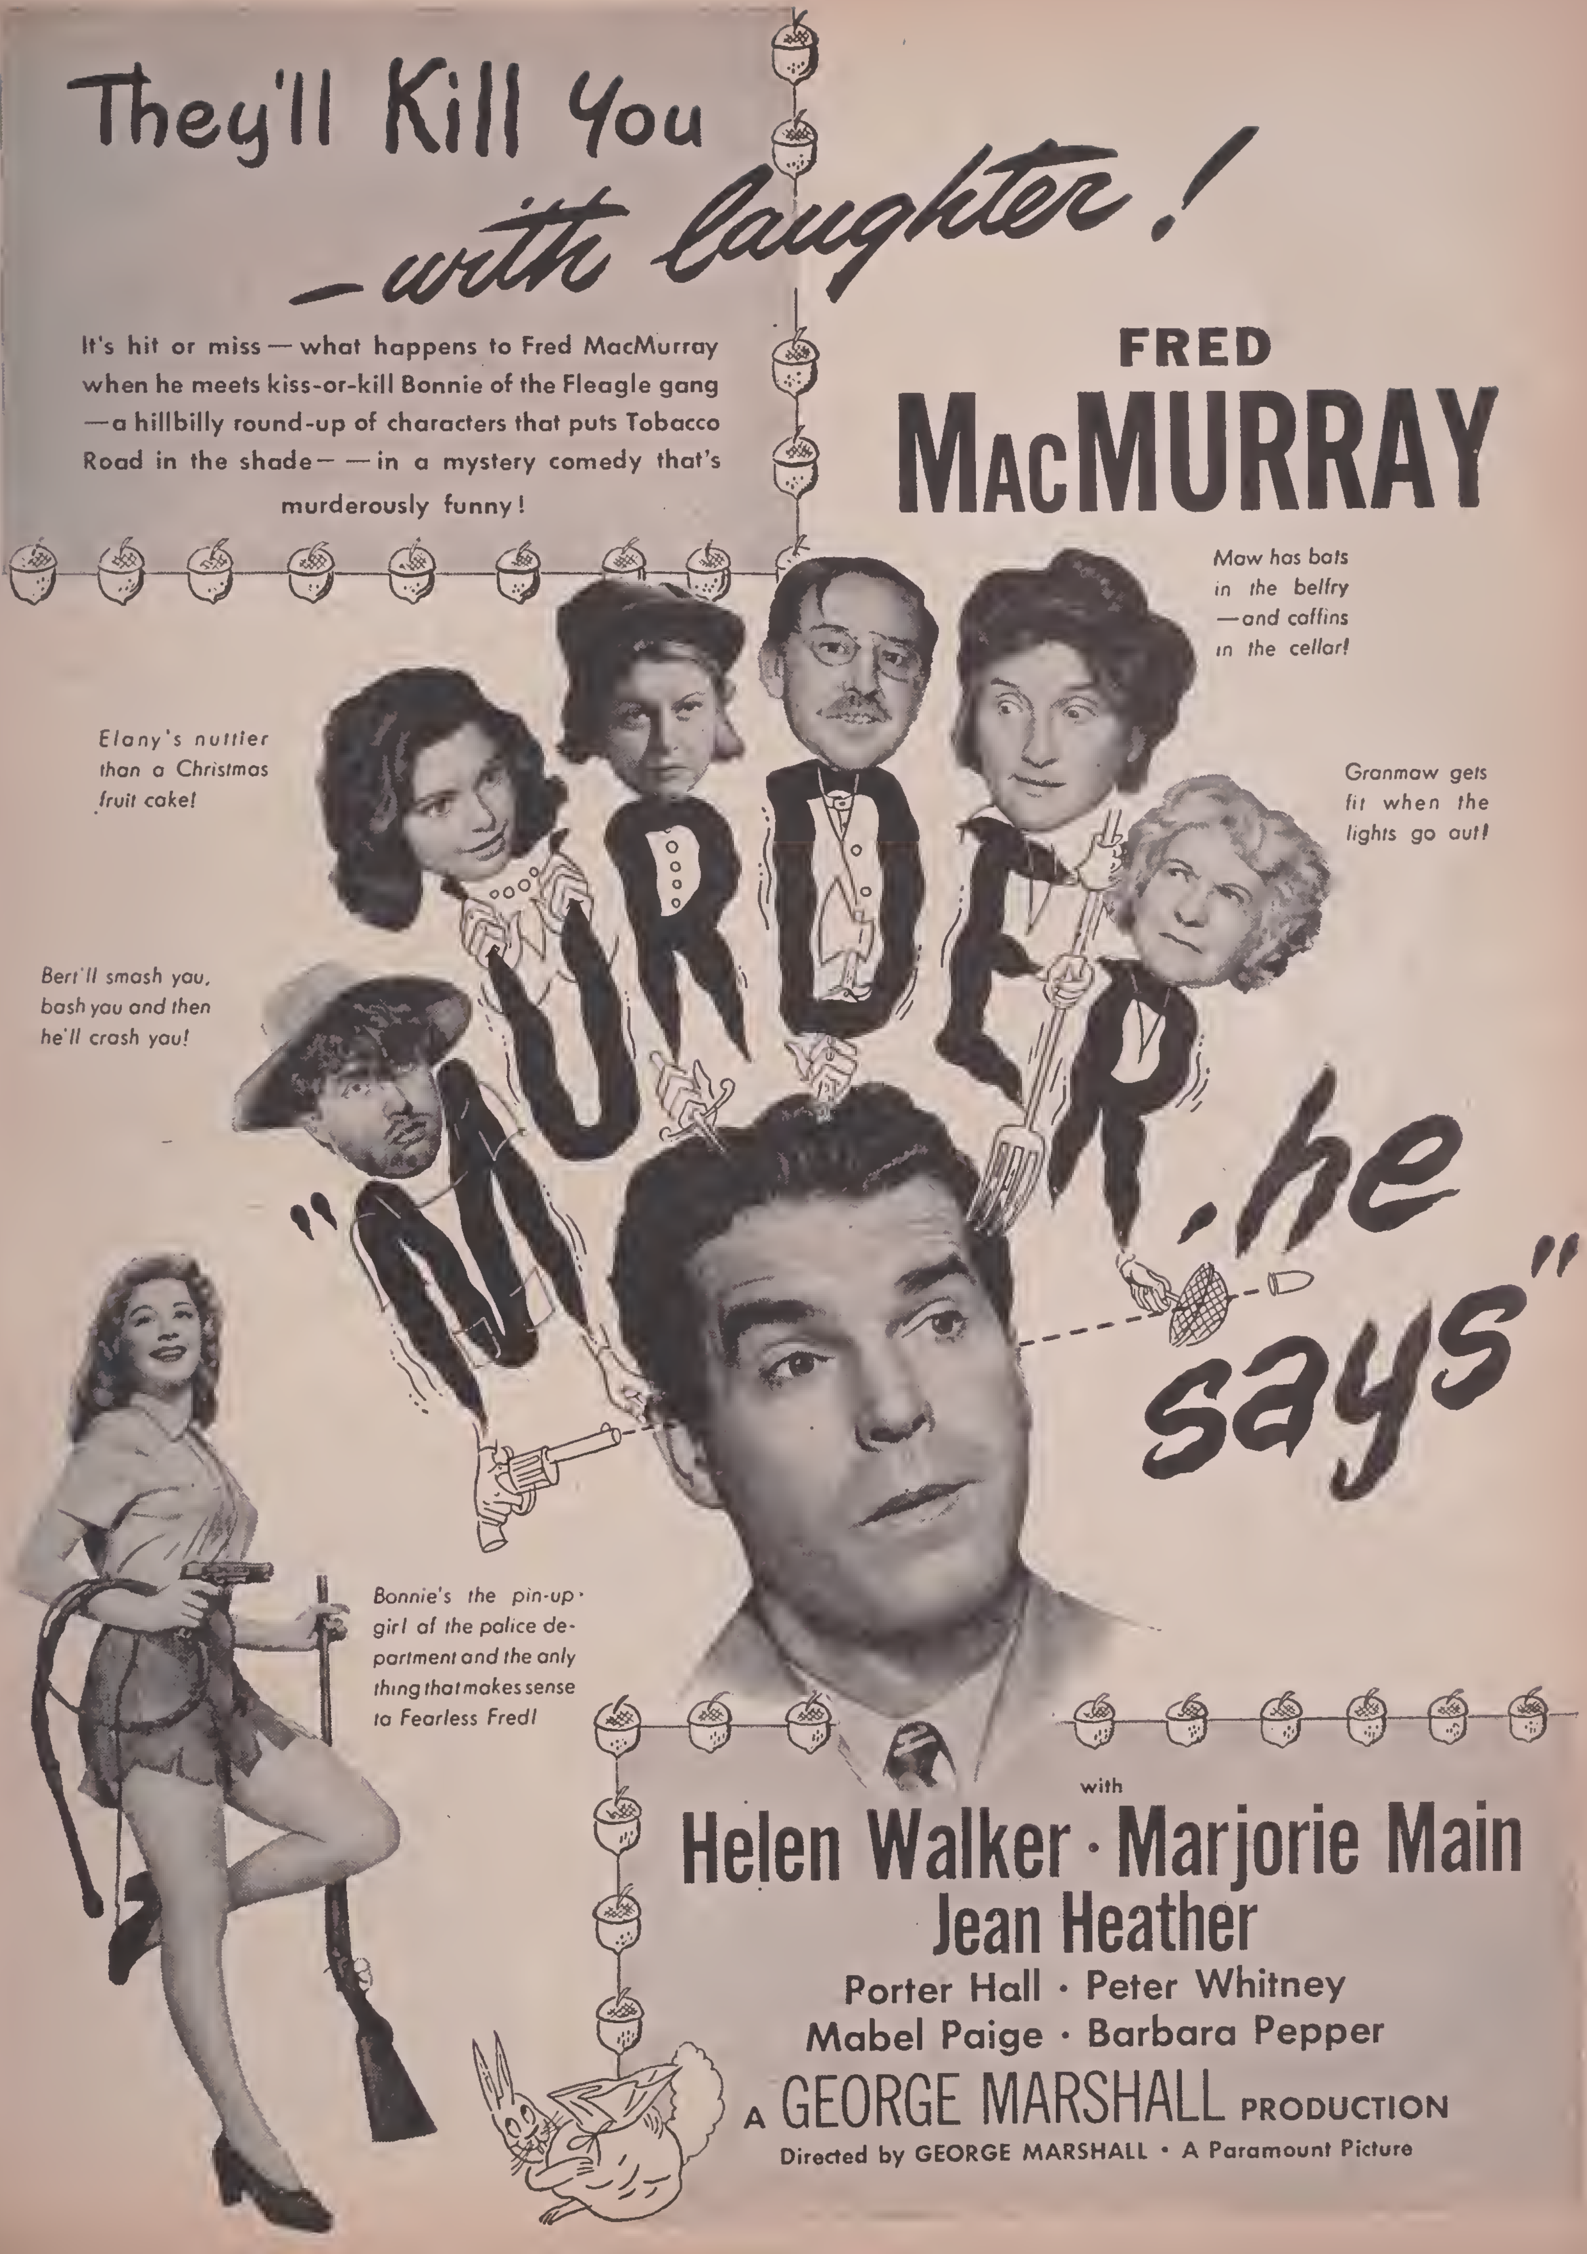
SPIRITED ADVENTURE:

Hurd Hatfield (his engagement to Virginia Hunter just officially announced) had a contribution to make to a recent discussion of the occult. Seems that when he first went to England, some eight years ago, the castle in which he and a group of earnest young players were to receive their dramatic training, was not far from an authentic haunted ruin. The ruin had, itself, once been a castle, but age and the financial reverses of its owners had reduced it to a mass of wings ending in rubble and towers standing alone against the moon. Yet from its airy corridors and stairways winding to the peopled sky, there were rumored to arise groans and shrieks, the rattling of chains and the howls of the damned.

The group to which Hurd belonged decided to investigate, one spring night. Approach to the vast pile of masonry was through a small woods or private park. Every bush rustled, every tree played tag

At Mocambo, femme fatale Andrea King "Shadow of a Woman" (W.B.) holds hands with hubby Lt. (J.G.) Nat Willis of Coast Guard.

Ethel Smith, Esther Williams and swoonster Van Johnson take time out for a jive session 'tween scenes of "Early to Wed" (M-G-M).



They'll Kill You — with laughter!

It's hit or miss — what happens to Fred MacMurray when he meets kiss-or-kill Bonnie of the Fleagle gang — a hillbilly round-up of characters that puts Tobacco Road in the shade — — in a mystery comedy that's murderously funny!

Vacation
anytime-of-the-month!
NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Be sure to take a supply of Tampax with you (Slip it in your purse)

Why not insure your vacation against all those belt-and-pin troubles and inconveniences that are so familiar? The Tampax form of monthly sanitary protection liberates you completely from belts, pins and external pads, and being worn internally, it can cause no chafing, no odor. Just imagine those advantages during hot summer days! You don't even need to use a sanitary deodorant!

WHILE TRAVELING you will appreciate the compactness of these neat, dainty Tampax, made of pure surgical cotton and each compressed into a patented individual applicator. A whole month's supply will slip into a purse . . . Tampax can be changed quickly and disposed of easily and inconspicuously.

WITH VARIOUS COSTUMES you will find Tampax a real comfort and a help to your morale. It causes no bulge or ridge under a sheer evening gown or a 1945 swim suit. You cannot feel Tampax when in place and you can wear it in shower, pool or ocean. Invented by a doctor. Sold at drug and notion counters. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

with its own shadow, furtive sounds grieved at the heels of the shivering ghost-breakers. They encountered no bona fide phantoms, no headless spectres, but their experience was not without a tag line.

The following day one of the students went to a nearby village and quite by accident overheard one villager complaining to the other, "Got precious little sleep last night, that I did, what with beatin' the bushes all night to maintain the bloomin' tradition."

KAPUT:

Cupid sustained his first black eye when Marsha Hunt announced her separation from Captain Jerry Hopper. Theirs had been a delicious romance, developed when Jerry met Marsha in 1937, when she was testing at Paramount.

The second blow to the orb of Eros was suffered when Mrs. Ray Milland announced a trial separation from Ray. However, everyone in Hollywood who knows the Millands well is determinedly anticipating a patching up of the trouble. Once before, in 1934, the Millands separated and went through interlocutory decree proceedings, but solved their difficulties, invalidated the first decree, and became parents of Master David in 1940.

Ray Milland is certainly not the easiest man on earth with whom to maintain a home, according to those who have worked with him. He is mercurial, impatient, moody, and a great and concentrated hobbyist. One year he was mad about planes, the next his great enthusiasm was boats. When war broke out and rationing imposed, Ray became the great chicken-raiser of San Fernando Valley. He bought scientific pens, read poultry journals, imported a rooster; the rooster made the morning hideous for Ray when he didn't have to arise early to work, so Ray tried to soundproof the coop. But he had to leave a small window for purposes of ventilation, so the rooster crowed through this window. Ray sold the rooster, gradually lost interest in fowl.

Then he became an enthusiast about all things Mexican. He bought silver, glassware, Mexican ceremonial garments, sent for posters of bull fights and had his dressing room decked out in a manner most South Of The Border.

Currently he is intensely taken with the subject of ballet dancing. The studio art department has prepared ballet posters and has substituted them for the deposed Mexican art. It is said that, while he was in New York, Mr. Milland took a more personal interest in the ballet.

But those who know and trust Ray are positive that he has never loved any woman excepting Mal, and that he never will. His friends believe that his interest in ballet will follow a trail blazed by discarded chickens and forgotten bull fighters.

NIGHT FRIGHT:

Gene Tierney recently moved back to her hillside-canyon home with her daughter, Daria, a nurse and a maid. Because the house seemed strange after the years Gene has been away from it, she trembled on the cliff-edge of sleep for several weeks. Climax came one night when she awakened with the positive persuasion that she had heard a prowler fumbling at one of the living room windows.

Trembling into a robe, she slipped cautiously to the kitchen and extracted a butcher knife from the cutlery drawer. As the sound was repeated in the living room, she screamed in a voice that would have disturbed the peace of Jove, "If you don't leave this instant, I'm going to shoot, and I'm go-

Pictures IN Production

(NOTE: One year ago at this time there were 46 pictures in production. This year, because of the strike, there are 30.)

AT COLUMBIA:

THE BANDIT OF SHERWOOD FOREST is the current title for a story previously called "The Son Of Robin Hood," starring Cornel Wilde, Anita Louise, Edgar Buchanan, George Macready, and Jill Esmond. A group of girls entered Brittingham's for luncheon one noon and one of them noticed Cornel at a nearby table. His hair was curled, he wore doublet and hose in the Sherwood Forest tradition, topped by a tweed coat of his own for purposes of being as inconspicuous as possible on the street. "Look," whispered the bright-eyed girl, "there's Chopin!"

"So it is," answered one of the other girls. "I didn't recognize him without his piano."

RUSTY stars Ted Donaldson, Conrad Nagel, and Margaret Lindsay. Margaret Lindsay is the pretty dark-eyed girl who tried to break into pictures at the height of the British vogue. She had no luck at all until she adopted an Oxford accent, learned to wear a monocle and tweeds, and announced her birthplace as the north of England. She was signed at once.

OUTLAWS OF THE ROCKIES is the new pistol-packing-package for Charles Starrett, Tex Harding, Carole Mathews, and George Chesbro.

AT PARAMOUNT:

OUR HEARTS WERE GROWING UP is in its second month of production, with Brian Donlevy, Gail Russell, Diana Lynn, James Brown, Bill Edwards, Bill Demarest and Byron Barr. It is a sequel to OUR HEARTS WERE YOUNG AND GAY, and elucidates the further adventures of Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kimbrough during the '20's when Greenwich Village was the lair of quaint characters and a bootlegger had to be a sideline printer to get variety into his line of wares.

THE BLUE DAHLIA is a murder mystery, with Alan Ladd, Veronica Lake, William Bendix, Howard da Silva and Doris Dowling.

AT MGM:

YOLANDA AND THE THIEF is now in its fourth month of shooting, thereby keeping out of mischief Fred Astaire, Lucille Bremer, Frank Morgan, Leon Ames, Mildred Natwick and Mary Nash.

THE HARVEY GIRLS is also in its fourth Technicolor month, with Judy Garland, Angela Lansbury, John Hodiak, Ray Bolger, Virginia O'Brien, Selena Royle, Marjorie Main, Preston Foster, and Shirley Patterson. Early reports indicate that Angela Lansbury is doing a bang-up job, to wit: the ease with which Margaret O'Brien steals a picture is celebrated in Hollywood, a fact that explains the crack made recently in the Metro commissary when Angela strolled in. "There," said this pundit, "goes the Margaret O'Brien of THE HARVEY GIRLS."

EARLY TO WED in Technicolor is now in its third month of production, with Lucille Ball, Van Johnson, Esther Williams, Keenan Wynn (who is recovered from his motorcycle accident), Carole Ramirez, Cecil Kellaway and Gladys Cooper.

FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE is a light comedy romance with Robert Walker, June Allyson, Audrey Totter, Hume Cronyn, and Eddie Anderson. As you probably know, each motion picture—while in production—is publicized by one person in the praise department. Dorothy Hass, well known

Movieland's New Picture Guide

THRILL OF A ROMANCE (M-G-M) classifies as "all this and Van Johnson, too"! And on the level, it's not disappointing in any department.

With Esther Williams turning in a smooth, finished dramatic performance as the pretty young bride left waiting at the honeymoon. Married to a "business before pleasure" rising executive (Carleton G. Young) who must dash off to complete an important big deal, she gives swimming lessons to war-hero Major Thomas Milvaine (Van Johnson, but of course). Comes love—and pleasant hours at a Technicolorful mountain resort where there's beautiful scenery, and sympathetic understanding and final solution cooperation from Mr. Nils Knudsen, opera singer (Lauritz Melchior).

On the musical side, it's a well-balanced menu of Tommy Dorsey, Melchior, and Jerry Scott—small boy with a voice that's big news and terrific! Selections range from operatic favorites to popular ballads, with the semi-classical sandwiched sometimes in between.

Fact is, this formula is fine and super-fine; as neat a job of combining music spots with a story situation as you've ever seen. And giving Frances Gifford a chance for coming into her screen-break own makes the whole thing just about perfect.

MURDER, HE SAYS (Paramount)—and here's one picture calculated to make you die—laughing. The setting: hillbilly. The action: reminiscent of the Keystone Cops days. Special effects: out of this world.

Fred MacMurray, as a Trotter Poll man (just one pace behind the Gallup) becomes embroiled with the Fleagle family and their efforts to locate a stolen bank cache. Grandma Fleagle, before passing on, gives the secret—in code—to Fred. He's to take it to Bonnie (temporarily detained in the State penitentiary), says Grandma, "because the money belongs to her. She stole it." But the rest of the Fleagle clan have other ideas, and by hook, crook, and a little softening up of the skull process try to wrestle the code from Fred.

Mysterious intruders, secret passageways, and a deadly poison that gives its victims a beautiful glow in the dark make the picture slapstick and corny—but really a riot of fun if you're in the right mood. Helen Walker, Marjorie Main, Jean Heather, Peter Whitney, and Mabel Paige deserve special mention. And of course, Fred MacMurray is the perfect befuddled, but win-through-against-all-odds Trotter man.

WONDER MAN (Samuel Goldwyn)—That man's here again! And this time he's twice as good—because he's twins.

Danny Kaye is Edwin Dingle, bookworm. He's also Buzzy Bellew, entertainer and twin brother of Dingle. But Bellew "knows too much" to live long. When he's murdered one night, he begins getting Dingle into difficulties by jumping in and out of his body, willy nilly. This causes no end of trouble with Virginia Mayo, Dingle's sweetheart, and Vera-Ellen, Bellew's fiancée. It also makes for a rather precarious existence for Dingle, since the villians (Allen Jenkins, Edward Brophy, and Steve Cochran) are still trying to bump off Bellew. Of course, he's Dingle, not Bellew. But how are they to know?

Danny doesn't have much opportunity to show off his dancing (possibly because he seriously injured his ankle on set during the first few days of shooting), but his songs and fast patter are as super as only Danny Kaye can make them. Vera-Ellen has a solo dance number in which she's shown to advantage, and Virginia Mayo is as lovely to look at as always.

VALLEY OF DECISION (M-G-M) brings a new Greer Garson to the screen as the young, intelligent, and utterly beguiling extra maid in Marcia Davenport's best-selling novel. No wrinkles and no gray haired wig this time—but a fresh and lively Greer Garson you've never seen before.

And starring with her is Gregory Peck, handling his role, as the eldest son in one of Pittsburgh's first families, sympathetically and with restrained emotion.

The picture, running two hours, gives us only a portion of the novel, but the screen play is well knit and complete. Excellently cast are Donald Crisp as Peck's father and owner of the town's largest steel mill, Lionel Barrymore as his embittered ex-

GREAT...

Because its story comes from the pen of the great John Steinbeck, in collaboration with Jack Wagner—Because its script was written by the man who helped put all the delightful, deep-down heart-appeal in "Going My Way"...Frank Butler—Because, like Barry Fitzgerald in "Going My Way," J. Summer Check-Up

By SHIRLEY COOK
BEAUTY EDITOR

How to stay sleek instead of sticky? Follow Mona Freeman's own summer charm chart.

BEAUTY on the beach should be unbleached. If, like starlet Mona Freeman, featured in Paramount's "Out of This World," your sun sorties are limited by a busy life, you must follow the rules for unroasted loveliness. Never venture out into the elements without protecting your sensitive skin with an application of suntan oil or lotion. Time your tanning and take it in small doses. Renew your sunburn preventive frequently—always after every dip. Supplement sunning preparations with nightly applications of soothing emollient skin creams.

WORKING all day in warm weather? That calls for special wiles. Keep your skin coated with fragrant talcum, says Mona. The perfect pick-up during the day is a dash of toilet water on wrists, forearms, and the nape of the neck. Make-up will last longer and look lovelier if you apply it over a powder base. When oil or moisture appear on the surface, blot them away with a cotton pad which has been wrung out of cooling skin freshener. This leaves the basic color of make-up undisturbed, ready for an added fluff of powder.

A DATE after dark? Then dress up with dazzle! Mona makes the most of her toast-toned tan and emphasizes it with deeper, darker powder. For the super sparkle that matches her sequins, she adds eye shadow and an extra coat of mascara. She makes magic with her mouth by brushing on a film of real red lipstick—a true red that stays bright under night lights. To set off barer, briefer dance frocks, she tends neck, arms and shoulders with tender care. Finally, she touches a favorite, flowery perfume behind her ears and back of her hairline.

Her eyes widened in loving wonder!

A dabbler in painting, writing and photography—can whistle, too!

John Dall

No flash in the pan here, but a steady serious young actor, who's after getting more meaty parts like the one Warners' gave him as the begrimed, untutored Morgan Evans in "The Corn Is Green." A native New Yorker, who studied engineering at Columbia Univ., his past includes six years of stock, the part of Quizz West in "Eve of St. Mark," which gave him his toehold for a Warner contract, the completely lovable soldier in "Dear Ruth"—and in the realm of things to come—back to Hollywood in a part in "Humoresque." He won't be typed because he's already proved he can be a Welsh miner and do a complete about-face with a harum-scarum role. On the statistical side: He's one inch over the 6 ft. mark, one year more than a quarter of a century old—and he's one young actor who's hit his stride in one picture.

Miss-Adventure BARI

IN THIS WORLD there are those who are born with poise, those who achieve poise, and some who have poise thrust upon them. There are others whose every move is poison.

Some there are who are fortune's darlings: hating oysters, yet being served with same at a banquet, do they get sick? They do not. They find a pearl. Having to go horseback riding at a house party, they are thrown from a horse. Do they suffer broken bones? They do not. They incur minor bruises, fall in love with the handsome doctor who attends them, and live happily ever after. Having lost a maid and thus being forced to do their own laundering, do they get dishpan hands? They do not. They think of a slogan for laundry soap and win a lifetime endowment.

Yes, there ARE individuals like that. But Miss Lynn Bari arises at this point to announce that she is not one of such. She is poisoned by oysters, kicked by horses, and skidded (Continued on page 63)

LATIN FROM MANHATTAN

Out N. Hollywood way—sportsman de Cordova's ranch is a reality!

Another Valentino? Arturo de Cordova says no!

BACK in 1917, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks sold bonds for World War I on the steps of the Public Library in New York. Assisting them as a minor salesman was a dark-haired, dark-eyed representative from Public School No. 9.

That was Arturo Garcia's first contact with Hollywood. Arturo Garcia is now Arturo de Cordova. And since his performance opposite Joan Fontaine in Paramount's "Frenchman's Creek," Arturo—with the assistance of the studio's publicity department—is being hailed as the latest of a long line of Latin screen lovers.

But be warned! The first guy who calls him that to his face is likely to get punched right in the nose. And Arturo packs a hefty wallop. He was, at one time, the leading intercollegiate heavyweight in the Argentine, with a bevy of professional managers pleading with him to turn his attention to the ring as a serious profession.

Arturo explained it all over a luncheon at his house in the San Fernando Valley. It was an odd lunch, to start with. There were no enchilladas, no frijoles, no Spanish rice or fried beans, despite Arturo's Mexican birth and ancestry. We had ham and eggs.

"It is," said Arturo with an amiable grin, "my favorite dish. I am a Mexican, and I am proud of it. We are a proud people. But also we can like ham and eggs, no?"

Yes, definitely. They were good ham and eggs, prepared by Arturo's own hands.

"It is this 'great lover' stuff that bothers me," said Arturo. He not only likes American dishes, he likes Americans and American slang. "Somebody says we should make de Cordova the 'great lover' in the Valentino tradition. I say how can I be the great lover, when the rules and regulations of the American screen prevent it? Someone is always saying you don't do this, you can't do that.

"They want that I should be another Valentino. Even if I could—I couldn't! I cannot do what Valentino did. Now, they have the laws, the Hayes Office."

Arturo's black eyes snapped and his tanned arms waved in voluble Latin-American gestures.

"In Mexico," he stated, "we are allowed more freedom to express ourselves. Too, each family has its own censor. It is the father. He goes to the theatre with his wife and his daughters, and if he thinks the picture is objectionable, or in bad taste, he gets them out.

"Not often is he forced to leave. They know proper love-making when they see it, and a kiss on the ear, the neck, the shoulders—it is perfectly decent and proper."

Arturo shook his head sadly. "Imagine! No kissing of the ears! People hear about me as the 'great lover' and go to the picture and say, 'For goodness sakes, who ever told that big ham he is the great lover?'

"It is not my fault," said Arturo. He really isn't upset because he wasn't allowed to kiss Miss Fontaine's lovely ear. It is only that he is a perfectionist at heart and wants everything to be perfect.

He was one of Europe's finest soccer players. He was one of the Argentine's best amateur heavyweight boxers. He was Mexico's top sports announcer before he became an actor. Everything he has done. (Continued on page 90)

BIG BAD DE WOLFE

He was Bill Jones in the Navy 18 mos.

Something new under the Hollywood sun! By name, he's Billy DeWolfe; by reputation, he's crazy like a fox—but by heck, he's got what it takes and it "takes good"

THE name is Billy DeWolfe—a young man with an engaging personality, an impish sense of humor, an extraordinary talent for doing devastating impressions of his fellow human beings, and a fine flare for freshly different screen comedy as proved in his one released picture, "Dixie."

In case you have forgotten "Dixie," you soon will have a chance to refresh your memory of Billy in "Miss Susie Slagle" and "Duffy's Tavern." He scores solidly in both.

The long lapse between "Dixie" and "Duffy's" is easily explained: he was working for Uncle Sam for $76 a month as a petty officer 3/c at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, during (Continued on page 59)

JUNE Allyson doesn't know what makes her a fine actress. Indeed, she doesn't even think she is a fine actress. "When I reach that point, producers will start saying: 'Oh, yes, June Allyson, but—' And people will begin staying away from my pictures in droves," June said, with that funny little smile which is already causing the hearts of G.I. Joes to turn over with the thump of an exploding mortar shell.

Perhaps it is this very unawareness of her own potentialities which is helping to send June skittering up to the rarefied atmosphere on the peaks where the stars burn most luminously. In some manner she has retained a round-eyed wonder that the gods should have tapped her on the shoulder in a race where so many are called but so few, so very few, are chosen. "It's like hearing a lovely song come out of the ether on my car radio," she said. "I still don't believe it."

But believing it or not, June isn't afraid of playing the hand which life has dealt her, and playing it for all it's worth. She doesn't know much about poker, but if she suddenly found herself in a high-stake game with four aces, her own hard inner core of common sense would indubitably tell (Continued on page 54)

THE Prince

DESPITE his name, William ("Destination Tokyo") Prince was a pauper for so long it almost became a habit. But with a morale-building gal behind him, and with his own stubborn pursuit of his goal, he finally made the grade, thereby satisfying his fans, his studio and, incidentally, himself.

It's always a pleasant kind of shock to meet Bill face to face. Tall, brown-haired, with a gentle look about his not-quite-handsome face, he still never fails to set you right back on your pretty pink heels when he lets that baritone voice of his boom out of his definitely tenor face.

But the boyish phizz is flagrantly misleading. For ten years Bill's been a benedict; and he loves it. He tells you all about his wife and hauls out snapshots of Jeremy (3½) and Liza Jane (8 months) at the slightest drop of a hint.

As a matter of record, if Dorothy (wife) Prince hadn't been around, Bill would have unhitched his wagon from that mess of stardust that surrounds every stage-struck guy, and might have wound up as an unsung and unloved (Continued on page 72)

PAL'S PUPPETOONS

Manipulation of stops on exact scale trumpet requires a helping hand from studio animator.

"J-A-S-P-E-R! Jasper! Come here at once!" It's Jasper's mammy calling, but Jasper doesn't hear. Already he's listening to that prevaricating Scarecrow who will undoubtedly lead him into a peck of trouble. His big brown eyes will roll round in his head, and his body quiver with fright, but George Pal will see to it that he gets back to his mammy unharmed.

For Jasper is George Pal's pet puppet—the studio star—and he must live for another picture. He's that lovable little urchin you saw in "Jasper's Paradise," "Hotlip Jasper," "Jasper Goes Hunting," and many other Technicolor puppetoons.

But if you've wondered, as we have, how these riots of color with the delightful musical backgrounds came to be, how they're actually made—then lend an ear, chillun, for here's the dope on Pal.

Puppetoons are just what the title suggests—performing puppets that look like cartoons, with the added reality of the third dimension.

To understand how Jasper came to be born, we have to go back to a city in Prague several years ago when George Pal demonstrated the old saying that "necessity is the mother of invention." Shortly before our Prague incident, Hungarian-born Pal had been living and working in Berlin, as the supervisor of animated production for UFA (largest cartoon company in Europe). The Gestapo, however, didn't like the unsympathetic look that flashed across Pal's face when the Nazi cause was mentioned, and gave him an animated invitation to leave the country.

This, George did, but quick. Arriving in Prague, he set himself up in the animated cartoon business. But in all Czechoslovakia, he couldn't find a cartoon camera. And a cartoonist without his camera is like a play without a cast.

Wandering through the Prague museum one day, he suddenly conceived the idea of using three-dimensional models instead of drawings, so that he could do his shooting with an ordinary camera. No sooner thought than done, George Pal went to work on his first models—cigarettes (they were plentiful then). Later, he began using wooden dummies. But by this time, the Nazis were feeling their wild oats and Pal began moving from country to country, just ahead of the German hordes. Thanks to Hitler, he finally came to Hollywood and Paramount Studios.

"Jasper Tell"—the Scarecrow and Jasper.

Pal's Puppetoons cost about $25,000 apiece to produce, and thousands of man-and-woman hours go into the making of each picture. A seven to ten-minute short requires around 9,000 individual wooden figures and some 12,000 exposures.

The first step in making a puppetoon is the sound track—the dialogue and musical background. When this is completed, the animation is fitted to the track.

The figure and clothing of a particular puppet are worked out on paper, then colored cartoons are made and filmed to test the flow of movement. When this is satisfactory, a corps of woodcarvers go to work.

"Jasper's Minstrels"—carving must be perfect.

Unlike a Punch and Judy show, Pal's figures are not manipulated on strings. Instead, the action is accomplished by carving a series of puppets in the different positions needed for a certain action, placing them one after another on a miniature set, and photographing the scenes at the rate of one a minute. Sometimes as many as twenty-four separate puppets are made to illustrate a single action. For instance, if you see Jasper taking a stroll, a different figure is carved for each movement of his body. In order to make the action flow smoothly, carving and coloring must be perfect.

Pal's studios are veritable Santa Claus workshops. Scores of men and women are busy at lathes and with carving tools, forming the little people, animals, automobiles, trucks, jeeps, and other figures. It is precision work, incredibly painstaking.

The "performers" work on actual miniature sets, complete to the last detail. About the studio are varied scenes, such as a Swiss Alpine village, a Bowery tenement district, London's Mulberry Street, a futuristic airport with a model of a huge rocket plane of eras to come, and an Egyptian oasis with a caravan crossing the desert.

"Hatful of Dreams"—arms are often detachable.

Musical backgrounds play an important part in the puppetoons. They range from symphony orchestras to pure, unadulterated corn as only Spike Jones and His City Slickers can dish out ("Cocktails for Two" being a mighty fine "for example").

Colors, too, are Pal's important assets—the brighter the better, and he uses them lavishly.

Spread of the puppets' popularity has jumped production to the point that now three pictures are simultaneously in production. Also in preparation is a world of tomorrow series in which inhabitants of other planets, stream-lined rocket ships, undersea cities, and other Jules Verne-like fantasies will be developed.

Who knows? The unpredictable Pal may some day create synthetic Lana Turners and Alan Ladds out of his ersatz material!

But the next something special—and this is really news (fact is, the idea is still only partially developed, and what we're telling you here is scooped up as advance information not actually ready to be announced)—a full-length Technicolor feature, combining puppetoons with "live action."

George Pal added third dimension to cartoons.

A simple blink may require fifteen heads.

Producer William LeBaron has been talking it all over with Pal, and they're planning a big $3,000,000 production—perhaps it will be "Babes in Toyland," with all the original Victor Herbert tunes. Selection of the story still isn't definite, but most any one would agree that nothing would more exactly suit the purpose—so let's go along under the assumption that that's it.

Meanwhile, too, there are casting choices to be made. Star players will be needed. in addition to the little characters with wooden heads; we happen to know that Claudette Colbert is under consideration for the lead role.

The production date tentatively set for this special feature is "sometime in September." Chances are, the picture won't be finished and ready for release until early next year. But puppetoon fans are tipped off to be on the lookout for it, and moviewise students of what's new and developing in the motion picture medium, this is for you too. Something new, something never before attempted!

NEW LEADING MAN FOR DEANNA

By DORA ALBERT

To David, the home is wonderful for having a stall shower, a fireplace.

Cynthia (Davey calls her Babe) looks like a movie gal; she was a professor.

In "Salome—Where She Danced," he has the male lead opposite Yvonne De Carlo.

David Bruce is the new "big hope" at Universal. You don't have to take anybody's word for it, just add up the assets—and gee, how can the guy miss!

REMEMBER the handsome blond lieutenant whom Deanna Durbin planned to marry in "Can't Help Singing?" That was David Bruce. He lost the girl in that picture—but Universal is making it up to him, all right, all right. In "Salome—Where She Danced" he wins Wottagirl Yvonne De Carlo, in competition with four other men. And as if that weren't enough, he has the inside track on Deanna Durbin's heart in her latest picture, "Lady on a Train."

When a fellow starts winning the girl in "A" pictures, it's a sure sign that he's ticketed as an important white hope at a studio. When the girl is the studio's most important feminine star (Deanna Durbin, in this case) you can bet money on it.

So it's time to stop, look at and listen to—David Bruce! That's no hardship. Dave is tall (6 feet 1½ inches) blonde and blue eyed. He has a wonderful sense of humor and an excellent disposition.

He was born Marden McBroom, in Kankakee, Ill., which is also the birthplace of Fred MacMurray. They never met in Kankakee, as Fred claims he spent only about six hours there after his birth. However, they've met since in Hollywood.

David was the second of four children. His father, manager of a restaurant, was (Continued on page 66)

WHEN did I first meet Katharine Hepburn? It was in 1932. Oh yes, I remember it well. Except that the incident I remember wasn't exactly an official introduction.

It was at RKO, on the set of "Bill of Divorcement."

"I should think you'd have better sense than to do a thing like that," I said disapprovingly to the young, red-headed girl who, to escape the stuffy stale-air of the sound stage, had strolled outside and was lying across the nearest grillwork, getting the full blast of the ventilating system.

She gave me a quick, wry smile—but said nothing—and I went on about my business, which was that of wardrobe researcher and supervisor.

In my professional capacity, I was on the set frequently after that first encounter. And one day Miss Hepburn asked a studio employe, "Who is that (Continued on page 56)

Mexico, the "Hollywood" of Latin America . . . so-called because to the film folk it's more than a land of guitars and story-book caballeros; it's their special retreat

By JAMES SCOTT

Here's a toast to the host! Jack Oakie at Ciro's, with A. C. Blumenthal

of the Stars...

BEFORE a certain little madman set all the world aflame, Hollywood's hard-working players thought nothing of running over to Paris for a few weeks of much-needed recreation and relaxation. But when that was no longer possible, they scouted around for playgrounds nearer home and made full use of Arrowhead Lake, Palm Springs, Santa Barbara and Del Monte. Though gayety at these places was at a minimum, and the acute gasoline shortage soon made even them inaccessible.

It remained for Jinx Falkenburg, however, to venture a little farther afield and rediscover the land of guitars, romance and manana. Her trips to Mexico increased in regularity and awakened the curiosity of other players. Gossip whispered that Jinx had found a heart interest on the other side of the Rio Grande. They completly overlooked the fact that below the border lay a fertile land rich in romance and music and beauty, lush in the enchantment of old world ways—an anaesthesia from the current strife of the world.

So pointed, isn't it! So who? George Brent.

Curiosity ran rampant in the movie capital. Jinx' frequent visits to our nearest Latin neighbors inspired others to follow suit. When Paulette Goddard made her widely heralded sojurn and came back with her portrait done by the great Rivera, the feeling of curiosity was definitely overcome. If Paulette, with her exacting standards, could find Mexico amusing, the place must be "all as advertised."

Errol Flynn became a regular commuter between California and Acapulco—lured by the swimming and fishing and boating, among other things. He discovered, too, that our Mexican neighbors are simple people; he liked their charm and warmth and graciousness.

Ann Sheridan found Mexico City a treasure-trove for shopping; that she could get a gown at Royer's Towne Shop which evoked "ah's" and "oh's" from the Adrians, the Rene Huberts and the Bonnie Cashins. She found silver trinkets that were skillfully executed by master craftsmen. She found that in Mexico there was still laughter and fun and a respectful admiration whenever her trim figure stepped out on the Paseo de la Reforma for a morning walk down the wide, tree-lined avenue punctuated by its imposing statues.

Joan Fontaine, relaxing from the strain of a severe schedule of picture-making, found the altitude to be like a warm anodyne. But she also discovered a hat designer who could concoct a striking creation from a dust feather and a wisp of veiling. She learned that Henri de Chatillon, well-known in Paris before the Nazis marched in, was borrowing from native Mexican arts for his business of smart hat-making. It was this gifted young man who got the idea of smartly adapting the lowly sombrero for the well-groomed woman.

The steady stream of visiting stars accumulated to greater and greater numbers. It seemed incredible, but Hollywood had discovered a playground—a second Paris—practically in its own backyard. With vacations becoming a matter of necessity, during these difficult times, a player can now leave Hollywood in the morning and be in Mexico the same evening.

When Rita Hayworth made her first trip to the other side of the Rio Grande, she found a new world waiting and welcome cheerfully written on the faces of (Continued on page 62)

● Robert Alda is no overnight actor who drove trucks or washed windows until a talent scout happened by. His story is refreshing, inspiring—not of success alone, but of his devotion to things beyond the material world. He tells that story, with sincerity, humility and conviction

By LOU ANN GARRETT

MY FAITH IS MY FORTUNE

"SURE, I realize what a big break I got—being introduced on the screen in a $3,000,000 picture, and playing the lead at that! It is certainly the realization of my dreams, after twelve years in show business—in everything from burlesque to night-club routines—but it's not the most important thing that has ever happened to me and I can't pretend that it is!"

This is Robert Alda speaking, the actor who was chosen to play the coveted role of George Gershwin in the Warner Brothers' all-out musical picture of the year, "Rhapsody in Blue." This tall, dark and handsome newcomer to Hollywood who, at first glance, will remind you of Cary Grant, but after five minutes of his sure-fire personality and special brand of easy Latin charm will remind you of no one except Robert Alda.

He was attempting to explain his nonchalant attitude toward Hollywood, which many deemed completely unsuited to a newcomer. You may think that his attitude about this "plum" that was dropped into his lap (a part over which many a top actor spent sleepless nights) is casual, to (Continued on page 81)

Cass tried to hide buck teeth at first public appearance, but an good advice changed her mind.

. . . . YOU, TOO,

Here's Cass Daley's story, proving

YOU saw her in five Paramount pictures: "The Fleet's In," "Ridin' High," "Star Spangled Rhythm," "Out Of This World," and "Duffy's Tavern." Any Thursday night that you dial the Maxwell House Coffee Time, you will hear her exchanging banter with Frank Morgan, and bringing down the house with her songs.

She is important to every ambitious girl in the world because CASS DALEY proves conclusively that to win a high and lasting place in the entertainment field, a girl must have just three things: talent, a consuming determination to win, and ONE person who believes wholeheartedly in her ability.

You have handicaps, you say? Tell that to Cass. She has buck teeth which she has converted into a comedy asset. She nearly lost a leg because of a sledding accident, and to this day she carries frightening scars. Cass ignores them. She was so financially strait-jacketed at the beginning of her career that she worked in stocking mills, knitting mills, et cetera.

But today she is not only an internationally famous entertainer, but one of the sweetest, most delightful girls in the world. The story goes like this:

Cass was born Catherine Daley, in Philadelphia, the daughter of Bill Daley, who—after 41 years of service—is still working as a street-car conductor. He will undoubtedly carry this magazine around with him on his route and show it to everyone who pays fare or proffers a pass. As a matter of fact, there are currently a good many local individuals who take Bill's car unnecessarily, simply because they like to quiz Bill about one of Philly's more famous citizens.

Cass grew up thin, wiry, and dark-haired. She discovered, as soon as adolescence brought mirrors into her life, that she was no beauty. Greatest handicap was her teeth, which—although small and square—protruded and were widely spaced. She tried to conceal this beauty bane by (Continued on page 82)

"Whenever friends of mine come to Paramount Studios to make tests, I buzz along and try to tell them what I've learned. My name isn't so big that what I have to say seems awfully important, and maybe some of them think I have a nerve to open my mouth—but I can't shut up.

" 'Look,' I say, 'everything depends on your first screen test. Maybe you won't get a second chance, so make the most of this one. Work hard. Don't slide over any scene thinking: "Oh well, (Continued on page 69)

GONE WITH THE GLAMOUR

Joan as you remember her from previous roles. Right, as a mother; with Christine, 5.

FOR some years, the Joan Crawford you saw on the screen was a sultry beauty with heavy lashes, luscious lips and broad Adrian shoulders, a glamorous creature wearing expensive garments and moving with a panther's grace. A little earlier, the screen Joan had seemed a restless, reckless, dancing daughter, a younger, swifter-moving, more flamboyant edition of the woman she was to become.

When she signed with Warner Brothers, producers who did not know her personally expected to meet the Joan they remembered from her films.

"We're bringing Miss Crawford to see you," read a memorandum on office desks. Producer Jerry Wald glanced at the memo and pushed it aside. "So what?" was his mental attitude. Wald doesn't care for what he terms the fluffy type of picture and takes no interest in glamour girls. But when a studio envoy ushered the star through his doorway, he did a double-take. The quiet, business-like young woman who came in, met him and left without wasting his time or hers, took hold of his imagination. He began to search for stories for her, for the actress-Joan he felt that no one really knew.

"Years ago," he told me, "I had read James Cain's story, 'Double Indemnity,' saw possibilities in it, but couldn't get anyone else interested. After Paramount made a hit with that picture, I began to campaign for Cain's 'Mildred Pierce'; again no one agreed with me and I dropped it."

Joan as Mildred Pierce intrigued him, and when he heard she was having difficulty finding a suitable story, he called on her.

"I have a book for you, Joan," he said. "Nobody likes it—the Hays' Office won't pass it—I stand alone in caring for it, but I see a great character there. I don't want you to bother reading the book unless you think you could have confidence in me, because you'll have to believe in me before you can do it."

Joan had read hundreds of scripts in her increasingly desperate hunt for a picture. When she turned to page one, she wasn't especially hopeful. But as she read on she became absorbed, and before she reached the last page she knew her search was ended.

To play the role, they agreed, Joan must dispense with the false eyelashes, (Continued on page 74)

Words of Music

Irving Berlin gives Frankie a few tips on traveling overseas. Sinatra is hoping to make a USO tour soon.

HI, BOYS AND GIRLS! In spite of June being the romance month, I trust you're not too busy with Cupid to devote a little attention to music news. And there's lots of it this time.

We're going to be minus the talents of some of our music makers for the summer months while they trek overseas to entertain the G.I.'s.

Bing Crosby is planning a second U.S.O. tour, this time to the South Pacific. Dinah Shore will probably take The Groaner's place on the Kraft Music Hall for a few weeks. Frank Sinatra is also going to take his special brand of croon to the fighting fronts; in fact he may be overseas by the time you read this. (Can't you just see the WACS sighing and swooning?)

Dick Haymes is another who wants to make the jump. And Martha Tilton will do a repeat with the Jack Benny troupe, probably to the European area. Jack especially requested Martha because she made such a hit with the troops in the Pacific last summer.

HOLLYWOOD STUFF:

Alice Faye is finally going to make a picture for Twentieth Century-Fox. Alice didn't want to do any more musicals and held out for a good dramatic role. She'll be starred in "Fallen Angel," and won't warble a single note in the picture. Bruce Cabot will be her leading man.

Bob Haymes has changed his name to Bob Stanton, in order not to be confused with brother Dick. Columbia loaned Bob to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the singing lead in "Abbott and Costello

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

By Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Dear Jane:

I have a problem which I would like for you to solve for me if you can. My wife says that the allotment which she gets from me while in the service is not enough to support her from one month to another. What must I do, give her a divorce, or still continue to love her, or what?

Harold

Dear Harold:

You have me a bit concerned by giving me the responsibility of telling you whether you should continue to love your wife or to give her a divorce. I did not know that love could be turned on and off like water in a faucet by someone merely telling you whether to love or not. But seriously, there are many wives in the same situation as yours, and they have obtained a position to make the extra money they need. There is such a scarcity of women workers in the war industries that I should think your wife would get a position, and in that way, she would be helping the war effort as well as helping herself. Why don't you suggest that to her?

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I've been married for 8 years, I married when I was 15 and my husband was 29. He is settled down now and has been for a long time. But I'm not satisfied with his way of life. I'm still young and would like to have a little fun out of life. I go anywhere I please, but my husband doesn't go along. I don't love my husband enough to be contented just sitting at home. He comes in at five, eats supper, bathes and shaves, then listens to the radio. If I try to get a word in, it's just like talking to my two cats. I hope you can help me.

Lottie

Dear Lottie:

Your husband may be settled down, but it isn't, I am sure, from age, as you intimate, for he is only 37 years old. It is probably because he is tired from a hard day's work, and needs the quiet and peace of home. Why don't you have a talk with him, and see if you cannot reach an agreement to go out some place once a week or so. In the meantime, you have your days in which you can visit your friends, go to parties and picture shows for relaxation. You might also invite friends in to dinner every once in a while. That would start social contacts and bring return invitations which your husband would probably enjoy. Might I also add that if you would store up some interesting things each day to tell your husband, you might be competition for that radio? It often happens that wives want to pour out their troubles of the day on their husbands when they come home, and that isn't particularly interesting—so find some entertaining news to talk about and see if that doesn't work.

Yours truly,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am sixteen and my mother thinks I am a bad girl. Mother let me go out very often but I didn't seem able to come back at the time she set for me to be back. She let me get away with it for a while and I thought I was smart. Then she caught up with me, and put me on trial, but that didn't bring me to my senses. Now she has stopped letting me go out at all, or having boys call on me. I do very well in my dancing and mother tries to encourage me to study, but I have dropped it just to get back at her. My stepfather tells me I am not hurting anyone but myself. What shall I do?

Harriett

Dear Harriett:

Deep down in your heart, don't you think you deserve the treatment your mother is giving you? You certainly took advantage of her, and I think she was more than fair to allow you privileges as long as she did. Your best bet now is to show her that you are trying to restore her confidence in you, and certainly your attitude of wanting "to get back at her" as you say, will be no help in accomplishing this. Your stepfather is perfectly right, for it has been proved that when we act out of spite, we hurt ourselves more than anyone else. Try putting yourself in your mother's place, and you will realize how unfairly you are acting.

Yours truly,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane Wyman:

I am in my second term at High School, and study three or four hours a night, and then on tests, I pass with a 75 or 80. I dread going back to school on Mondays, not that I don't like school, but I hate the feeling that I am going to fail that week. Lately I went to see a picture, "National Velvet," and sat through it three times, just thinking how nice it would be to live as they did in the picture. When I walked out, I felt I was going back to a boring life.

Please write and tell me that nobody really lives as they lived in the picture, and that everybody has their struggles in this dizzy world. In that way I could feel that it was just a dream, and everyone lives the same as I do.

Harold

Dear Harold:

I agree with you that in "National Velvet," Velvet's family was a very unusual family. However, you want to remember that it is the unusual that makes good story and play material. But aren't you a bit mixed up over that family not having its struggles? I saw plenty of it in the picture, but the mother had such a grand sense of humor and such a wonderful philosophy, that she was able to work them out more successfully than the average. And take the struggle of training Pie for the races—it was work, real work—a grinding job day after day. But never for one moment, did Velvet do as you do—start the week with a foreboding sense of defeat. She always knew that her horse was going to succeed, and was willing to give every ounce of her strength in training it to that end. Instead of feeling discouraged because your life seems boring compared to that in the picture, why don't you take the lesson that it gave. Have faith in yourself and know that you are going to succeed in your studies. It is within yourself to make your life interesting or boring. You are not training horses, but you are training yourself in the race of life, and it takes work, faith in yourself and a happy outlook to be successful.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am nineteen and a half years of age, and the last time I was home was the first time I had seen my girl while in Navy uniform. Well—I popped the question, and we were married. We spent a couple of precious weeks together, then I was shipped out to combat area.

When I received liberty in good liberty towns, I did not even talk with a girl, I was so much in love with my wife. She wrote me frequently and told me faithfully that she was not going out with anyone. But! A month ago, I received a letter stating that we were going to have a baby.

I was happy at first, then it finally dawned upon me that it was quite impossible, as I had not been home in eighteen months. Now I am at a standstill as to what to do. Please advise me.

Joe

Dear Joe:

I have read your letter over several times, trying to make up my mind whether you are trying to pull my leg, or whether it is your wife who is pulling yours!

The day of miracles is past, and surely no wife would seriously write such a letter under the circumstances. I think you had better find out more of the details before you get upset about the matter, for it sounds to me like a rib of some sort.

Sincerely,
Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I am working in a factory, as most young girls are these days, and the girls seem to talk about me quite a lot. Well, it all started around Christmas. We were all having a good time, and everyone was kissing each other, so they dared me to kiss our boss, whom they had already kissed. So I did—and now they say we are in love with each other.

This is not true, for I have a boy friend overseas and my boss has a girl friend. It is true that I tease him a lot and talk to him, but I don't see any harm in that. Someone has told my boy friend's mother that I am going out with my boss, and if she writes to my boy friend, I know it will make trouble. Please tell me what I should do.

Elaine

Dear Elaine:

I find it amazing how often the old sayings apply to the problems I receive. In your case, I would say that the adage —"To avoid evil talk, avoid all appearance of evil"—fits pretty well. Kissing your boss as a joke and teasing him may have been done by you with no thought of wrong, but it is just the sort of conduct that would give rise to talk. I would advise you to act in a dignified manner hereafter—be friendly, but stop short of familiarities which might be construed as constituting more than a mere boss-employee relationship.

And it might be well for you to write your boy friend a letter, putting no important emphasis on the matter, but just treating it as a joke, so that he will be forewarned in case anyone else writes him.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a war wife with a problem. I am 27 years of age and have a little girl 10 years old. I have been married twice and both my first and second husbands are in the service, my second husband being overseas.

Those Glamorous NEWCOMERS

Oculens ground and polished sunglasses are eye savers with style. Like regular specs, you can choose them to suit your type. Continental is a heavy tortoise frame that's fine for the fragile, thin-faced girl. The round-faced sunworshiper might choose Captivators, saucy upturned lenses that cut plump lines. Aviatrix is designed for the square or oblong face, while a lucky lass with an oval outline might take to the Sportser. From $2 up.

A liquid diet to delight the skin! Krashé Facial Oil No. 89 is a rich and fragrant cleanser, a light but active lubricant or powder base. $1.25.

From technicolor to you! That's the story of Westmore's new Overglo shade, Peach Bluff. If your skin is darker than average, a little too sallow or a little too ruddy, this is the tint that can tone it up or down a bit and give a peaches and cream coloring. Four dots, spread evenly, will do a fine cover-up job for freckles and tiny blemishes. $1.50.

Campana now has a lipstick. And this Solitair lipstick has a new and different twist in its shiny black metal case. The point is—the point is lip-shaped, planned that way because so many women wear their lipsticks down to one side in a smoothly slanting curve. In six clear shades, it's $1.

With all the pinks prevailing, Tayton offers Pink Dynamite, a brilliant fuchsia-full shade that acts as an accent for tanned or pale-toned skin. This pretty pink is far from pastel. Instead, it's a deep and glowing color that keeps its courage under bright sunlight or gala nightlight. The all-metal container is $1.

For beauty on the bronze side, there's a new Yardley face powder. Rose Tan, they tell us, is something different in suntan shades. It is blended to light a sunkissed skin with warmth and radiance—without leaving any dark and telltale streaks. $1.

A neat, new cold wave kit has just been introduced. It's Beauty Time, complete and compact, holding all you need for a home permanent. 74c.

Pond's points with pride to a new cake foundation, Make-up Pat. This base was formulated to solve several basic problems so it's a sheer filmy veiling that goes on easily and lasts lingeringly.

Latest product of the Ogilvie Sisters is Communique. This fragrance is a boon that banishes cooking odors or peps up a perspiring scalp. $1.25.

I am very much in love with my first husband—true, we had a misunderstanding and separated, and then just for spite, I married my second husband. Now my first husband wants me to come back to him. He is my child's father, and I feel we could raise my daughter to much better advantage if we were together again.

My second husband is going with his cousin, and I don't like it. I am expecting trouble when he comes back, so please tell me what you think I should do.

Martha

Dear Martha:

You certainly have yourself in a bad situation, the usual result of acting out of spite. If your second husband were a good husband to you and a kind father to your little girl, I would say —even though you did marry him out of spite—that you should stick to your bargain and be a good wife to him.

But, if, as you say, he is being untrue to you, the important thing to consider is the welfare of your child. You should do what is to her best interest. Again I say—and I want you to be very sure that you are right about your second husband's unfaithfulness—if he is untrue to you, you might write him telling him you know of his actions with his cousin. Point out to him that you feel, under these circumstances, a home with him would be no place in which to rear your daughter, and that you want a separation.

To ask for a separation from a man overseas fighting for his country, purely for your own selfish ends, is a cruel thing to do. But if things are as you represent them to be, he may be as glad as you to have a parting of the ways. The welfare of your little girl, and your own conscience, should guide you in this matter.

Best wishes,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am almost fifteen and so miserable—for I have two broken, twisted fingers on my right hand. I rarely show them, especially when there are boys around. Although I am not bad looking, I am so afraid of showing them. Should I be?

Millicent

Dear Millicent:

When one is self-conscious of a handicap such as yours, and makes an effort to hide it, usually it results in attracting even more attention to it. Those fingers do no detract one bit from your personality or character, and I am sure that the friends who know and love you do not even notice them.

Do not let this assume such an importance in your eyes that it will mar your happiness. Just act natural about it, and if it will make you feel more comfortable, keep your right hand loosely clasped, but do not make an issue of "trying to hide."

Wonderful results are being accomplished by plastic surgery. Perhaps if you consult a good surgeon, something could be done to straighten the fingers.

Best of luck,
Jane Wyman

WORDS OF MUSIC

in Hollywood," and when he returns to his home lot they have big plans for him.

The cutting room gossip at R.K.O. has it that Gene Krupa is sensational in "George White's Scandals." George White wants Gene for a Broadway musical next fall, but Krupa's Chicago draft board has placed him in 1A, and he may get the call even before he has a chance to play his Capitol Theatre date in New York.

Lots of studios have been bidding for Johnnie Johnston, including Paramount, where he was once on the payroll. Johnnie has signed his name to a Metro contract, and his first picture is scheduled to be "You Are Beautiful," with Gloria De Haven, June Allyson and Jimmie Durante. The picture will probably not start until Fall, and in the meantime, Johnnie will do his Capitol theatre date in June and possibly a few more personal appearances.

I've had many letters asking why musical pictures which were made ages ago haven't been released—films like "Rhapsody in Blue," "Thrill Of A Romance," "Incendiary Blonde," "Out Of This World," etc. The explanation is simply that the studios have been releasing their war films first. But most of these movies should be shown very soon now. And incidentally, don't miss "Out Of This World." I saw a preview of this one a few weeks ago, and it's really very amusing. Eddie Bracken plays a Sinatra-type crooner, but when he sings it's Bing Crosby's voice you hear. One of the funniest scenes in the picture shows the four Crosby children listening to Bracken with puzzled expressions on their faces. One of the kids turns to the others and says, "I think I've heard that voice before." Speaking of voices, when you hear Diana Lynn sing (she plays opposite Bracken) and you think you recognize the voice as belonging to someone else—you'll be right. It's actually Liz Tilton, former Jan Garber band vocalist. But don't tell Paramount I told you.

ON THE BEAM:

Judy Garland was all ready to sign a contract for her own radio show this fall, but M-G-M nixed the deal. Now the same sponsor is trying to tie up Betty Grable and Harry James and his orchestra for a half-hour program. Harry is set to take over the reins on the Pabst Blue Ribbon show for the summer, starting on June 9. The program will probably originate from New York, at least while Harry plays his Astor Hotel date. James has been turning down all theatre offers, because he doesn't want to travel—which doesn't make Betty unhappy. She has arranged her picture schedule so that she can accompany her favorite trumpet player east for his Astor engagement.

Spike Jones and Frances Langford will be the stars of the Chase and Sanborn summer program. Spike will lead a large band, probably twenty-five men; and of course the City Slickers will be present and accounted for. The broadcast will come from a different service hospital each week. Incidentally, Frances may not return to the Bob Hope program in the fall. She wants to have her own show.

Monica Lewis has had her option lifted by Chesterfield. Keep your eye on this kid. She's pretty as a picture and I bet the movies will grab her before long.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

NOTE: Because of war-time transportation difficulties, packing and shipping problems, etc., release dates occur at different times in different parts of the country. Some of the following records may already be in your music store, and some of them may not arrive for a few weeks.

CAPITOL:

Here's a Johnnie Johnston platter that's sure to make his fans jump with Joy—the sensational tune, "Laura," backed up by the beautiful new ballad, "There Must Be A Way," with Paul Baron's orchestra and arrangements. Baron has done a masterful arranging job on both tunes, especially with strings, and I don't think Johnnie has ever sung better.

Peggy Lee makes her debut as a single on the Capitol label with "You Was Right, Baby," and "What More Can A Woman Do?" accompanied by Dave Barbour's small combination. (In private life, Peggy is Mrs. Barbour.) She does a swell job on both sides, and incidentally, Peggy wrote the music and lyrics for both tunes.

"Songs By The Dinning Sisters." That's the name of a four-record album which has been waxed by the well-known radio sisters. The tunes are all old favorites: "Just The Way You Look Tonight," "Brazil," "Sentimental Gentleman From Georgia," "Aunt Hagar's Blues," and others.

VICTOR:

Georgia Gibbs makes her bow on the Victor label with two tunes from the Twentieth Century-Fox film, DIAMOND HORSESHOE: "In Acapulco" and "The More I See You." Her nibs, Miss Gibbs, has built a big following for herself on the Gary Moore-Jimmy Durante air show, and is scheduled to star on the Philco program this summer.

If you laughed at Spike Jones' rendition of "Cocktails For Two," you'll roar at his new one, "Chloe." It's the same arrangement he used in the picture, "Bring On The Girls." On the reverse side we find a touching little ballad entitled "Serenade To A Jerk." Judy Manners does the serenading and Red Ingle is the "jerk."

Freddy Martin accompanies the King Sisters on "Yah-Ta-Ta, Yah-Ta-Ta" (Talk, Talk, Talk) and "Take Me In Your Arms." This is the first of Victor's two-in-one records. They plan to double up different singers and bands for some special discs. One combination will be Lena Horne and Duke Ellington, which ought to be terrific. Just as long as they don't have Spike Jones play for Perry Como.

Speaking of Como, he has waxed "Temptation" and "I'll Always Be With You." Ted Steele, who conducts the orchestra on Perry's radio show, handles the music. I think you'll agree with me that "Temptation" is absolutely the best record Perry has ever made.

Fred Waring (did you know he played at Carnegie Hall?), in a Gin game with Jill.

Erskine Hawkins has a very solid platter in "Caldonia" and "I Hope To Die" (If I Told A Lie). Ace Harris sings "Caldonia," and Carol Tucker dittoes on "I Hope To," etc.

"A Friend Of Yours" and "There's No You" are done well by Tommy Dorsey and the band. "Friend" is the hit song from the movie, "The Great John L," and is sung by Dorsey's new vocalist, Stuart Foster. Billy Usher sings "There's No You."

The old favorite "I'll See You In My Dreams" is coupled with "I Walked In," for Vaughn Monroe's latest release. Vaughn sings the first side alone and teams with the Norton Sisters on the flipover.

Tony Pastor and his boys are represented with "Five Salted Peanuts" and "Bell Bottom Trousers." Tony does the vocal on "Peanuts," and he and Ruth McCullough share the honors on the sailor song.

Carson Robison, one of Victor's folk singers, has an amusing new record. The first side is "Hirohito's Letter To Hitler," and on the back is "Hitler's Last Letter To Hirohito."

Betty Jane Bonney makes her solo platter debut with two ballads, "How Little We Know" and "Memphis In June." Betty used to sing with Les Brown and Frankie Carle.

"The Sweetest Trumpet In The World," alias Charlie Spivak, is front and center with "You Belong To My Heart" and "There Must Be A Way." Jimmy Saunders does a fine vocal job on both tunes.

COLUMBIA:

Benny Goodman and his new band have waxed "Sweetheart Of All My Dreams," with lyrics by Bob Hayden, and "Ev'ry Time," the Gordon Jenkins composition, which is sung by Jane Harvey.

The Charioteers, the quartet whom you've heard on Bing's air show, appear on record for the first time since the ban. They do "Don't You Notice Anything New?" and "It Doesn't Cost You Anything To Dream," one of the songs from UP IN CENTRAL PARK.

Here's an album by Rise Stevens. She does eight of the most popular Jerome Kern compositions, including "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," and "All The Things You Are."

Xavier Cugat offers two new sambas, "Good, Good, Good," sung by Del Camp and "Toca-Tu Samba," with a vocal by Nestor Amaral.

Two old standards have been chosen by Ginny Simms for her newest release—"Cuddle Up A Little Closer" and Hoagy Carmichael's immortal "Stardust."

Count Basie has added some strings and a new vocalist, Lynne Sherman, for his waxing of "This Heart Of Mine" and "That Old Feeling."

Harry James has picked two of the DIAMOND HORSESHOE tunes, "I Wish I Knew," sung by Kitty Kallen, and "The More I See You," with a Buddy Di Vito lyric.

The Modernaires make their first appearance on the Columbia label with "You Belong To My Heart" and "There! I've Said It Again." Mitchell Ayres directs the orchestra.

And last, but certainly not least, Columbia gives us two releases by Frank Sinatra. The first is the oldie, "When Your Lover Has Gone" and "I Should Care," which was written by Axel Stordahl, Sammy Cahn and Paul Weston. The second is the Johnny Mercer tune, "Dream," backed up by "There's No You." Axel's orchestra and arrangements as usual.

DECCA:

Dick Haymes is well represented this month with three releases. First he sings two of the numbers he does in his new picture, "The More I See You" and "I Wish I Knew," with Victor Young's orchestra. Then he and Victor get together on "Laura" and "The Night Is Young and You're So Beautiful." And for his third platter he and The Andrews Sisters, with Vic Schoen's orchestra, give out with "Great Day" and "Smile, Smile, Smile!"

Dick's singing partner on his radio program, Helen Forrest, is her usual melodic self on "He's Home For A Little While" and "Ev'ry Time."

Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians and his Glee Club do "Sweetheart Of All My Dreams" and "Let Us All Sing Auld Lang Syne." Gordon Goodman is the soloist on "Sweetheart."

If it's jazz you like, don't miss Lionel Hampton's "Loose Wig" and "Overtime." Hamp plays a wonderful vibraharp solo on the "Wig" side.

Jimmy is in for two discs. The first is "El Rancho Vegas," with vocal duties divided between Teddy Walters and Patti Palmer, and "Oh, What A Beautiful Mornin'," done as an instrumental. The second has Teddy Walters singing the lyrics to "Dream" and "There! I've Said It Again."

Louis Jordan and His Tympany Five are socko on "Caldonia" and an old blues, "Somebody Done Changed The Lock On My Door." Louis sings both sides.

Skip Nelson pops up as the vocalist with Glen Gray on the newest Casa Loma record. The tunes are "I Walked In" and "I Don't Care Who Knows It," both from the movie NOB HILL.

Burl Ives, one of America's greatest interpreters of folk songs, sings "Rodger Young," the Frank Loesser musical tribute to the famous war hero. On the back side is "Foggy, Foggy Dew."

Carmen Cavallaro's piano and orchestra are present and accounted for with "The More I See You," with a Gloria Foster vocal, and "In Acapulco," with lyrics by The Andy Love Four.

Bing Crosby and Judy Garland have made their first double record, and it's a goodie. The tunes are "Yah-Ta-Ta, Yah-Ta-Ta" and "You've Got Me Where You Want Me." Joseph Lilley's orchestra.

Then Bing and Xavier Cugat join forces to do a sensational job on the two hit tunes from THE THREE CABALLEROS, "You Belong To My Heart" and "Baia."

Here's a new one by the Mills Brothers, "Put Another Chair At The Table" and "I Wish." This is the boys' first disc since their big hit, "You Always Hurt The One You Love."

UP IN CENTRAL PARK is Decca's newest show album. The wonderful tunes from the musical comedy success are sung by Eileen Farrell, Celeste Holm and two of the members of the original cast, Wilbur Evans and Betty Bruce.

Another album, CAN'T HELP SINGING, finds Deanna Durbin doing the numbers from her picture—"More and More," "Californ-I-Ay," etc. Robert Paige, who played with her in the picture, helps out on the lyrics.

JAM NOTES:

"Major Glenn Miller Day" will be observed nationally in leading motion picture theatres on June 5, in conjunction with the Seventh War Loan Drive. Still no news from Glenn, but everyone is hoping. Jimmy Dorsey's new vocalist is Jean Cromwell. Though this is her first job with a name band, Jean has worked with various orchestras through the South. Jimmy also has hired Nita Rosa to sing Latin American tunes. Buddy Schutz has left the band because of illness. His doctor ordered him to take a long rest. Marion Hutton will forego movies for a while in favor of radio. She landed the singing spot on the "Romance, Rhythm and Ripley" program over C.B.S. . . . Bud Freeman, famous tenor saxophonist, is touring the Aleutian Islands with an all G.I. musical show . . . Anita Ellis has taken a vacation from her Mutual Network show to spend two months in Texas with her husband, who has returned to the States after twenty-one months overseas. Randy Brooks is very happy over the success of his new band. Randy, former Les Brown trumpet star, underwrote the initial cost of organizing himself. Les had planned to back him, but felt that Randy should wait until the war was over . . . Lionel Hampton's Carnegie Hall Jazz concert in April was really something. His band is one of the most exciting I've ever heard, and they just about tore the place apart. Sully Mason has broken up his band and may go on a theatre tour as a single . . . Since Connie Haines had her tonsils removed she can sing one note higher and two notes lower . . . When Sammy Kaye first started reading poetry on his "Sunday Serenade" program over the Blue Network, all his pals laughed at him and predicted he'd be a flop at it. But Sammy has the last laugh. So many requests were received for copies of the poems, that Kaye published a book of them—and to date it has sold over fifty thousand copies. Helen Forrest has been signed for a vocal spot in the new Paramount film, YOU CAME ALONG . . . When Tommy Dorsey signed to emcee the "Music America Loves Best" air show, he was kept busy denying rumors that he was breaking up his band. T.D. is on a theatre tour, but will return to New York each Sunday for the program. Margaret O'Brien was recently contracted by Capitol Records to wax a series of albums. She will do dramatic skits and special material aimed at the sub-bobby-sox age. The baby Bernhardt is sporting a charm bracelet which was given to her by her boy friend, Frank Sinatra. The bracelet is inscribed, "To A Lovely Little Girl And A Fine Actress."

Well, that's it for this time. Thanks for all your swell letters. And remember, if you have any particular questions on musical subjects, send them along and I'll try my best to answer you. But please, not too many questions, and don't forget to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. Just write to Jill Warren, MOVIELAND MAGAZINE, 1476 Broadway, New York City 18, New York.

BETTY HUTTON
STARRING IN PARAMOUNT'S "INCENDIARY BLONDE"

There are 65 million females in the United States. But only one of them sings like Betty Hutton. No one paid any attention to her, as a recording artist, until Capitol anticipated her talents and went out on the limb to present her—for the first time—on wax.

Capitol RECORDS

CAPITOL RECORDS • SUNSET AND VINE • HOLLYWOOD 28

Most spectacular results in this field recently have been racked up by Capitol Records. This young company is only 3 years old. Yet it has lined up more new talent than all other record companies combined. Andy Russell (left) and Paul Weston are just two in addition to Hutton. Others below.

One of the reasons for Capitol's success is the fact that the company is located in Hollywood—talent pool of the world. But even more important is the musical intuition of Johnny Mercer, Capitol's president, and Buddy De Sylva, chairman of the board. These two have an uncanny knack for spotting talent and matching it with proper tunes.

Third reason is the technical skill of Capitol's recording engineers. You can demonstrate this yourself by playing several different makes of records at the same volume on a phonograph. The Capitol records will sound stronger and clearer.

Proof of the pudding: Capitol has turned out 23 smash hits in 3 short years and skyrocketed right up among the old, established leaders in the popular record field.

JUNE MOODS

her what to do with them. For beneath June's naive young-girl exterior there is a cool little mind that knows exactly what it wants—with a pretty good inkling of how to get it. June is no fluttering moth desiring the stars. She's a honey-haired sky rocket with tremendous soaring capacity.

It is this very ability to keep her young blue eyes steadily fixed on the main chance that put a sharp period to my querulous question when I called the other day at her apartment on Wilshire Boulevard. She was sitting cross-legged on a davenport wearing pajamas and a dressing gown. Her hair was drawn back tightly and tied in a knot at the nape of her neck, and her nose was shiny. She crinkled her eyes at me and said in that husky, curiously pleasing voice: "Have some coffee?"

I said I would and then turned to her sternly: "Is this glamour?"

She grinned impishly and said: "There's a young Naval Lieutenant coming to see me after I get through talking to you. And if you'll stay till he gets here you won't have any complaints."

See what I mean?

Shrewdly designing? No, I don't think so. Not any more than you or I. She simply knows what she wants and goes toward it by the most direct path.

Talking to her I kept remembering the first time I had ever seen this confident young woman. She was racing across the patio of the pseudo-hotel in which she was living, to answer a whirring telephone in a public booth. She told me afterward that she always left the door of her apartment open for fear someone at M.G.M. might call her. "If M.G.M. had been running a circus in those days, I'd have carried water to the elephants," she said, "just for the chance to show them I was the best little water carrier in the business. And," she added, frowning soberly, "I could still do it if I had to. Life has taught me that much. I can take it."

But being able to "take it" inevitably leaves its mark. It has touched June's appealing young face and, in moments of repose, made it a little sad. She knows now that nothing for which you fight with all your heart and every atom of your strength ever turns out to be as headily intoxicating as you dreamed it would be. She came up the hard way and she harbors no delusions that it may not get hard again. "There's always a hill," she says. "When you've climbed it there's one more, higher than any of the others, just ahead. And how do I know that I won't start up a hill some day that I can't quite manage? How do I know there will always be something inside me that will take me over? Oh, I'm not tired now. Gosh, no. But have you ever seen the little look of drained weariness that sometimes comes into the eyes of an actress? I'm just beginning to understand what that look means and to wonder about it. Maybe an artistic success isn't worth what it costs. Maybe a woman's normal life, being married and having children, is better. I don't know."

"All right," I said, "make up your mind. What do you really want?"

"What do I want?" she asked musingly. "I want to do a piece with passionate sincerity and utter conviction. I want to interpret a character with such intensity that I'll break my own heart doing it." She stood up suddenly and stretched her arms above her head. "That's what I want. That's what I want more than anything in the world."

I laughed. "You don't have to put on an act for me, kid. After all—in that bathrobe and those pajamas—"

She flopped down on the couch and said sulkily: "Darn you, why do you have to spoil everything?"

But it wasn't an act. She meant it with all the strength of her single-track young mind. She thinks about other channels into which her talents might have been directed, but she always comes back to her present burning desire—to be the best actress in Hollywood.

Talking to June when she is happy—which is nearly always—and hearing her laughter spill into the room like bright, golden coins, one is tempted to believe that behind that incredibly expressive, pixyish little face there lives no memory of the hard road over which she has traveled. But that would be a mistake. "See those checks?" she said, indicating a scatter of yellow printed forms lying on a low table. "Each one of them is signed with my heart's blood. Oh, it isn't that I'm a dollar-snatcher. I like to spend money and give beautiful presents to people I love. And nothing gives me quite the feeling of a warm, inner glow as when I have helped someone when the going is rough. But I can look back to the time when a dollar bill was as big as a three sheet poster—and believe me, there wasn't anything warm or comforting in those times. And they could come again. I suppose that everyone who didn't have a fairy godmother leading the way over the first steep pitches of a career, has the same memories. Look at him." She picked up a copy of the New Yorker and pointed to a profile article about Somerset Maugham. "Life certainly wasn't a bowl of cherries for Maugham. Not many people in the world are strong enough to pay the price he paid."

If paying the price is a through-ticket on the success highway, June Allyson is already well along on her journey. She is dedicated to the belief that if you want something, all you have to do is look at the price tag and then make up your mind whether the article is worth it. Good times, lovely clothes, interesting friends, all have the cost plainly attached.

"Yes," I said. "But are you happy in paying for these things?"

"Happy?" she asked wonderingly. "Who is happy . . . really happy? I think they are only the very young or the very old. They haven't learned to care yet or are beyond caring. I can honestly say that the only time I'm happy is when I'm terribly unhappy about something." She grinned elfishly. "Sounds like the story of the flea-bitten dog, doesn't it? What I mean is that I've got to have something driving me. Every time I look at one of my pictures I think: 'Oh, you could have done better—lots better.' If I ever reach the point where I can look at my work complacently then I'll know producers are about ready to lift their eyebrows when my name comes up. And I don't want that to happen."

I had, it appeared, found June in a serious mood, a facet of that mercurial young lady's character that she rarely permits a visitor to see. It has often been said that the ability to laugh is a gift bestowed upon Man by a benign providence to help him bear the burdens which might otherwise become insupportable. If this is true, June has been singularly blessed. Laughter with her is usually as spontaneous and illuminating as a bursting star-shell. It geysers up from within her and comes out a husky, warm, infectious sound that would start a grin on the face of Anthony Comstock himself. It spills into the room and fills it with light and color. She loves zany stories and the eager, anticipatory expressions which flit across her mobile young face would make a first rate raconteur of the dullest fellow. Her response to humor is as instantaneous as an electric current when a switch is thrown. And by a blessed grace, she can laugh best at herself.

"Once when I was posing for fashion pictures," she said, "I fell into a pool and ruined my career as a model. It served me right, too, because I'd been looking at my reflection in the water and thinking I was beautiful. Oh, what a mess I was!" She laughed ruefully as the picture flooded back into her mind. Then she added soberly: "It might be a good idea if I'd keep on falling into figurative pools, if I ever get to thinking I'm too important."

Laughter with June is as necessary as the California sunshine which she has come to love. She laughs with the grips or the waitress in the commissary or with Joe Pasternak, her producer. But she never laughs at anyone. She remembers too clearly the old times in New York when for days on end she didn't have the courage to smile. It is this memory which now and again, as she talks, prints a certain somberness on her young face.

Having compassion for others less fortunate than she, June is able to look at life realistically. Knowing that existence in her world is a battle, she has acquired a fine and discriminating feeling of drama. Early in her career, she made up her mind that if she was to achieve her goal it must be through the interpretation of human emotions. In New York she had sung in small parts, but she knew even then that her voice would never win the laurels she coveted. "I made a try at singing in 'Two Girls and a Sailor,'" she said, "but I felt pretty sure in my own mind that it didn't come off very well. Oh, I can put a song over—but my voice will never be anything to cheer about. So, when 'Music for Millions' came along I really went to work. Please don't think I'm conceited enough to believe I exhausted the possibilities of the part. I know I didn't. But I gave it the best I had at that time. If I were to do it over again now I think I could do a better job. That's the one hopeful thing I keep before my eyes all the time—the thought that some day I really may become a good actress."

Currently June is working in a picture called "Her Highness and the Bellboy." After that will come "Brighton Beach," and then either "Peg O' My Heart" or another "Two Girls and a Sailor" thing. In between times, she's soaking up everything of Maugham's she can get her hands on. "I like Maugham," she says, "because he hasn't any illusions and because he handles women with a scalpel. He knows all our weaknesses and portrays them pitilessly. He's a pretty good warning. The thing to do is to try to be the kind of girl he doesn't seem to know."

What worries June more than anything at the moment is time in its flight. "Here I am twenty-one," she said tragically, "and I've only got my feet started on the journey I've got to travel. Pretty soon I'll be an old woman and my work not half done."

"Do you think you can wedge in a little date at the altar somewhere along the way?" I asked.

"Maybe—sometime," she said dreamily. "Just now it doesn't seem too important."

A few moments later the buzzer sounded and the Naval Lieutenant came in. He was very spit and polish, and very handsome. June fled—but in twenty minutes she was back, and I gathered a quick impression that if the Navy is pretty important so also is June Allyson, especially to the Navy.

THE HEPBURN I KNOW

woman with the blonde hair?"

Then, having learned my name, she made it a point to speak to me each time she saw me, and later asked that I be permanently assigned to her picture.

Forgive me for beginning this story with a personal experience, but the incident serves perfectly to illustrate an important side of Katharine's character: she likes and respects people who speak their minds honestly, forthrightly and on the moment. There are two things that she cannot abide: shilly-shallying and artificiality.

I know that Katharine had a good deal of adverse publicity when she first came to Hollywood, yet I think the causes may be easily explained. She is a terse, straightforward person; she says what she thinks in the swiftest possible manner. This habit, which is purely the result of concise thinking and definite tastes, is sometimes construed as abruptness. During those early days a hairdresser once completed what she felt was a beautiful coiffeur, then turned Katharine to the mirror to view the handiwork.

Katharine took in the full effect on the instant. "It won't do," she said. "I don't like it."

The girl was accustomed to the temporizing answer of "Well, that may be a very lovely arrangement on someone else, but somehow on me it seems—well, I don't just know, but I think that if we recomb this strand . . ." Which is the manner of many actresses, but Katharine would have considered that time-wasting. She said what she thought and waited for a constructive suggestion. Instead, the girl burst into tears and rushed from the dressing room. She asked to be removed from the picture, a wish that was granted. When the affair was reported to Katharine, upon the arrival of a new hairdresser, she was amazed. She had intended no offense and was completely nonplussed that offense had been taken.

A writer, anxious to do an analytical story on Katharine, once asked me to remember every witchy thing Katharine had ever done. I tried to think of something really disagreeable, because I agree with Katharine that an immaculate character is likely to be pretty dull; however, I could think of no deliberately malicious thing she has ever done since I have been closely associated with her.

Contrariwise, I can think of dozens of charming things of which Katharine can be accused. One year I had made reservations to go home to England to visit my relatives. I had made my arrangements with Katharine, thinking that she would be between pictures (I had become her secretary by that time) so she wouldn't need me as much as she does while making a film. Please don't think me presumptuous when I say that an actress' secretary can be very useful, indeed, during the time a picture is in production. There are dozens of things that need to be done.

It happened that the time for the picture's start was postponed again and again. And it became apparent, finally, that I would have to be away during production, or I would have to cancel my trip home. "I'll give it up and go next year," I said.

"But your family will be terribly disappointed, won't they?" Katharine asked.

I admitted that they would, because I had not been home for nine years, and added that another year's delay would make little more difference, I supposed. She closed the matter. "You're going, and that's settled," she announced in her positive way. "And I'm going to give you your traveling suit. You have it tailored at once."

This, of course, is a minor incident that I have a right to tell because it belongs in my own experience. I could fill this entire magazine with stories about the kindnesses she has done other persons in New York and Hollywood, but if I did that, Katharine would never forgive me. She feels—and I agree with her—that most good deeds somehow lose their lustre when exposed to the public light.

At present she rather shuns publicity because of her ingrained humility. When she was told at the studio that a writer wanted to interview her for a magazine story, she was astonished. "But there's nothing interesting about me. I'm not important. If I were driving a truck in France—then I'd have a story to tell. Then I'd be worth writing about," she insisted. She has a very strong sense of values, does Miss Hepburn.

If I were asked to state Katharine's outstanding characteristic, aside from her great dramatic talent and craftsmanship, I would say instantly that it is her love of walking. How that girl loves to walk! Her admiration for the art of placing one foot ahead of the other is so great that she will gladly scissor off miles at any time, any place, or in any sort of weather. I think that, in some previous incarnation, she was a wandering troubadour, so in her soul there is a conviction that acting goes with striding the countryside. As we do things differently now, she travels between commitments in conventional ways, but keeps faith with that ancient tradition by scurrying up and down hillsides in her spare time.

One fall, when we were trying out a play in an eastern city, Katharine had her chauffeur drive us out into the country. From the highway, she and I set off cross-country at electric speed. This was fine, for her, because she was wearing her customary slacks. But I was wearing a suit skirt. Even so, we got along well enough, until we came to a woven wire fence, topped by several strands of barbed wire. We had been striding along the crest of a rather high hill, and the fence marked the railroad right-of-way. Katharine climbed the wire and swung her long legs over without the least trouble, while I stood on the opposite side, wailing that I'd never be able to make it.

"Don't be silly, I'll get you over," she said, all business. She gave me instructions, so I hauled myself up. Just as I straddled the top wires, catching the barbs nicely in my lingerie lace, a local passenger train came puffing up the grade. It was moving slowly enough to afford the delighted passengers an excellent view of the countryside, including me clinging to both Katharine's hands while the fence clung to all of me. Katharine laughed so hard that she was powerless to do much. All I could think of was, "Little do those passengers realize that they are watching Miss Hepburn playing one of her best comedy scenes."

One day, while Katharine was working in "Dragon Seed" at MGM, she and I were spending Sunday investigating Bel Air on foot. Many of the estates in this hilly locality seek privacy with the device of an eight to ten foot wall. I am the sort of person who accepts these restrictions with philosophy. Not Katharine. "I wonder what sort of house and gardens are on the other side of this wall?" she asked. And she shinnied up the wall with the agility of a Tom Sawyer. At the top she sat and observed the establishment, calling down descriptions to me.

Emboldened by this initial human fly trick, she did it repeatedly when her imagination was piqued. So far she has never scaled a wall to look into the red eyes of a Great Dane. But I'll be surprised at nothing!

Speaking of dogs, while Katharine and I were touring in the East with "The Philadelphia Story," she and I and her three dogs went for a long walk one day. It was warm, so the dogs began to need a drink. As we rounded a hillside we found a low faucet, but no container of any sort was visible for miles. Katharine glanced around, gave it up, and spontaneously hit upon an adequate substitute. Removing one of her shoes, she filled it with water and offered it to the poodle. When he had finished drinking, she filled the shoe a second time for one cocker spaniel, then for the other. Then she shook the shoe briskly and returned it to her foot.

I've read occasionally about persons who made a practice of walking in the rain, and I must admit that I have given something less than credence to some of the reports. But I can say with great authority that Katharine is a devoted companion of Jupiter Pluvius. The reason I am so positive is that I, too, get involved in these damp excursions. We wear boots and slickers over warm clothing, including warm neck scarves, but we wear nothing on our heads. I make it a point to grumble. I say, "This is the craziest thing I have ever caught us doing; we should be inside before a crackling fire. What possesses people who walk in the rain!"

Katharine laughs. If the rain has stopped, by some shocking misfortune, she walks under bushes or low trees, tips her head back, and shakes the raindrops from the boughs onto her face. I have also known this admirer of the elements to awaken on a brisk morning back East, don a bathing suit, take a warm shower, then leap into a pool upon which a skiff of ice has formed during the night. After having swum the length and back again, she will return to the hot shower. This fact should be vouchsafed those who think they can exhaust Katharine at tennis.

Athletic as she is, she doesn't expect an equal virtuosity of those around her, and she always keeps in mind the handicaps of a person with whom she is associated. When her sister's baby was born, Katharine telephoned me (I was in New York and she, of course, in Hartford at the time) saying that she had made arrangements for me to fly up in the plane owned by the private pilot who had taught her to fly.

I went out to the airport and climbed, with two pilots, into a light four-seater plane. A 65-mile-an-hour wind had sprung up, and to judge by our antics, we sprang right back at it.

There was no flat air that day; it consisted entirely of up drafts and down drafts modified by typhoons and whirlwinds. Since that day I have never been able to look at a shuttlecock without acute fellow feeling. Contrary to my conviction, we reached Hartford; I viewed the new member of a most fetching family, had luncheon, then learned that Katharine and I were to return to New York in the selfsame plane I had ridden that morning. Not being given to discussion of that sort of trip, I said nothing to Katharine about air conditions.

If I thought the trip was rough going north, it was only because I had never taken the same trip southbound. Katharine, in the front seat, kept glancing from the window to me, in the back seat, and demanding, "Are you all right?"

With my eyes tightly closed I assured her that I was fine. I never get airsick, but I knew from Katharine's voice that, whereas I was saved by closing my eyes, if she had closed hers all would have been lost.

You've undoubtedly guessed that we reached New York without mishap. As we bounced to our lucky landing (the landing gear had frozen in place and the pilots, by opening the windows on alternate sides and kicking violently, had freed it), Katharine glanced back at me with a hazy smile. "All the time we were over Long Island Sound," she confided, "I kept looking at that expanse of water and thinking, 'Poor Emmie, she can't swim.' "

As this will indicate, she has an excellent sense of humor, perfectly timed. Not only does she say funny things, but she has an amusing way of accepting direction. Of this, she appears to be blissfully unconscious. I remember that when she was working in "Bringing Up Baby," a comedy with Cary Grant, she was required to lose a heel from one shoe and get tossed in jail. Concurrently, she was supposed to try to convince one of the officers that she was a desperate character. She asked the comedian working in the picture to show her how to walk lopsided in a laughable way. He gave her about five minutes' instruction and she picked it up with such perfection that everyone on the set was laughing. Even though she was deadly serious about the whole thing, her burlesque was so good that the technicians were holding their sides.

She didn't see why the thing she was doing seemed funny to bystanders. She refused to see the rushes of that day's shooting because she felt that the scene would be painful. Yet, in the finished picture, it was a tremendous laugh-getter.

I will never forget her rushing into the wings on the opening night for "Philadelphia Story," wide-eyed, at the end of the first act, and gasping to me, "Good golly, the audience thinks this is a comedy!"

Apparently she had expected this very funny play to be considered romantic drama. There is a line that occurs after her admirers have all met at the same place at the same time that goes, "Well, why didn't you sell tickets?"

During rehearsal, Katharine tossed the line away. She didn't consider it particularly funny. But there was something about the way she said it that brought down the house, opening night—to her intense astonishment. It continued to delight audiences during the play's run, but Katharine could never agree that it merited such laughter. She didn't seem to realize that it was her delivery that gave the line such impact.

Poised as Katharine is, there are times when she—like the rest of us—struggles hopelessly in search of the right word, the right gesture. She was with me when I received word that my only son was on his way to Fort Dix. I realize, of course, that there are millions of women who have faced this same moment, but somehow when tragedy happens to one, it seems utterly unique. I trembled there with the telegram in one hand, and thought that I was going to wail aloud.

Katharine stood on one foot, then the other. She rested an arm around my shoulder and her face was a rare potpourri of mingled emotions. Obviously she didn't know whether to comfort me, to be impersonal, or to be tough about it. I said, "It's all right, Katharine. No one ever knows what to say—don't even try."

She went away disconsolately. But that night as I made my entrance (I was working with her in "Without Love") I thought I was going to go to pieces. For ten full seconds I was up in my lines, then I blinked away my tears to meet Katharine's gaze. She was looking at me with the solicitude of a mother, but there was also something comradely, and just a touch of teasing small-boyishness. If the look could have spoken it would have said, "Come on, old dear, you're in a tough spot, even though it's not new. But we have a play to do—remember? Come on, let's get into it and give the customers a good show."

I was all right on the instant. I have told this to illustrate a point I want to make: many persons have drawn strength from Katharine, sometimes without her being clearly aware of it. She has this great, and I think unconscious, gift.

I believe that this quality, combined with her typical feminine sweetness—a characteristic that hasn't been notable in most of her pictures—shines forth in "Without Love." Personally, I like it the best of any picture she has ever made. I think all her fans will, too.

THE END

BILLY DE WOLFE

that interim; a job he was forced to forfeit last May when the Navy medicoes said a firm "Out!" However much their verdict disappointed Billy, though, it was good news both to Hollywood and the nurses at the hospital where he spent the last five months of his service; his irrepressible antics undoubtedly were good for the morale of his fellow patients, but they played havoc on the nerves of the hospital staff.

There was the night, for example, when one of the middle-aged and primly proper nurses came walking down the dimly-lit ward where Billy was housed. Rounding a turn, she came face to face with a monstrous creature, arms upraised and face contorted in a horrible grimace. Her blood-curdling screams, as she raced for the door, could have been heard in far-off Chicago!

The "monster," of course, was Billy, who had donned his peajacket back to front and was playing Frankenstein for the boys.

Upsetting things and people obviously is a habit with Billy. He upset tradition when he bounced into the swank Rainbow Room, mecca for night club entertainers as the Palace Theater used to be for vaudevillians, after his debut as an utterly unknown quantity at one other New York night spot, the small Raleigh Room at the Warwick. He upset Navy doctors no end when he failed to mention he had spinal arthritis when enlisting, a painful secret he kept for 18 months of service. He upset Sonny Tufts by aping his unconscious gestures of pushing back his hair over one ear and clearing his throat with a loud "Harrumph!" just before a take; now everyone in the studio is doing it as a gag. And he certainly upset all the fine plans made for him when he first arrived in Hollywood, back in 1942. It's quite a story, and typically DeWolfe.

I suppose it could be said that it was all his mother's fault. Prenatal influence, you know. Mrs. Jones—Billy's name actually is Bill Jones, a fact he forgot with such embarrassing frequency in the Navy that a commander one day finally yelled in exasperation "Good lord, man, don't you even know your own name?" to which Billy replied, "No, sir, I do not."—was movie-mad. While Billy was on the way, and when he was a babe in arms, Mrs. Jones sat day after day in the movies, avidly devouring the heroics of Louise Glaum, Nita Naldi, Bessie Barriscale and other sirens of the early silent days.

"You might almost say I was born in the theater," Billy said. "I still don't know how mother happened to stay home that day."

Actually the event took place in the family home in Quincy, an industrial suburb of Boston, Mass. Nine weeks later the family returned to the father's native Pwhelli (pronounced P-thw-elli), Wales. Nine years later they came back to America, where the future of Mr. Jones' trade of bookbinding seemed brighter. Both parents became citizens at the first opportunity; Billy, of course, was an American by birth.

Apparently inheriting his mother's interest in the theater, Billy got a job as usher and sweeper-outer at the local vaudeville-movie theater in his spare time after school for 50 cents an hour. For actual services rendered, he was overpaid; patrons had to find their own seats while he watched the show, and invariably he was in the wings watching rehearsals when he should have been pushing a broom in the lobby. By watching the acrobatic dancing acts in particular, and imitating their routines on the mat in the school gymnasium, he soon had worked out an eccentric dance routine of his own.

About this time, too, he began to take an active interest in the Methodist church near his home. When he became the leader of the church's Christian Endeavor society, Mr. and Mrs. Jones were sure he was headed for the ministry.

"Frankly, it was only the ham coming out in me," Billy now admits. "I loved to stand up there on the rostrum with everybody watching me and give out with the gestures. The other fellows used to read their speeches, but I always memorized mine so I could strut up and down like a young Hamlet!"

He was practising his dance routine at the theater one Sunday when he was spotted by the manager of one of the acts, Jimmy Connor's Band, who mistook him for one of the acts on the coming week's bill. Reluctantly Billy confessed he was only an usher. The band signed him anyway, and $7.50 a week Bill Jones became $50 a week Billy DeWolfe. The new name was donated by the theater manager, who saw no future for an actor called Bill Jones.

When the band completed its tour in New York, Billy organized a dancing trio with two girls which was billed as DeWolfe, Metcalf, and Ford. The act played the New York Hippodrome and was seen there by a famous vaudeville impressario from England, who offered them four weeks billing in London. The four weeks stretched into five years for Billy. He was making a hit, and more important to him, he was having fun; so when the girls became homesick and insisted upon returning to the United States, Billy revamped the act into a single and continued on his way.

"I like to have fun, no matter what I'm doing," Billy explains. "In fact, I've got to have fun or I don't do it. There's no point in it." Fun to Billy, however, doesn't necessarily mean laughs; it means personal enjoyment of his work, and a certain gay spirit which has kept him from taking himself too seriously. He has less conceit, in proportion to his talent, than I would have dreamed possible, and the only malicious caricatures he draws in his impersonations are those he does on himself.

In revamping his act Billy switched gradually from his former dance routines to his hilarious "impressions" of famous people and familiar types. Originally he had done them only for the amusement backstage of his fellow actors, but incorporated into his act, they soon became the talk of all Europe. Still the most popular is "Mrs. Murgatroyd," the august leader of the W. C. T. U., who wanders into a bar out of righteous curiosity and proceeds to get gloriously swacked!

Many people still believe that Billy is an accomplished linguist, probably because the chatter part of his impressions always was given in the native tongue of whatever country he was playing at the time. In France he spoke French, German in Berlin, Austrian in Vienna, and Hungarian in Budapest. The truth is that he speaks no foreign language, other than a little Welsh, but laboriously learned the necessary phrases by writing them out phonetically and then memorizing them. Only once did he blunder.

Mr. Bones, suh! May I have the next dance? Part of Billy DeWolfe's act at Rainbow Room.

That engagement was scheduled for Oslo, Norway, and so he carefully mastered his lines in that tricky language by the same phonetic method. It was a tough job, as he remembers, and he was set back on his heels, therefore, when the theater manager assured him it would not be necessary for him to speak Norwegian while doing his act.

"But how will the audience know what I'm talking about?" he said. "The chatter is important to the act." The theater manager lifted one eyebrow.

"My dear fellow," he said. "Everyone who comes to the theater knows English. We learn it, you know, along with arithmetic and spelling."

When he returned to New York in 1938 Billy intended to make only a brief visit and then go back to London. Instead he spent the next two years shuttling between Toronto, Montreal, Boston and Philadelphia night clubs, where he was in great demand as a master of ceremonies. Next came a winter in Miami Beach and thence to New York. His first engagement at the Raleigh Room paid him peanuts; the manager gave him a try-out only as a favor to a friend. Three weeks later the Raleigh Room had to be roped off to keep back the crowds! Finally came the Rainbow Room at Radio City and $1,500 a week—the highest salary ever paid a single act at that spot.

Visiting Hollywood big-wigs from Paramount, M-G-M, and 20th Century-Fox took one gander at the sensational young entertainer and promptly offered him screen tests. Disinterested at first because he didn't (and still doesn't!) think he was the "Hollywood type," Billy finally made a test for 20th-Fox, the first company to have approached him.

The test—long since disappeared and probably into somebody's private film library—was a riot. Believing he didn't stand a dog's chance in the movies, Billy proceeded to kid the pants off Hollywood, its people and its customs, in a deliriously funny and informal monologue.

"Making a test is silly anyway," he chattered on. "Why waste all this time and money when it will be stuck away on some shelf and no one will look at it, maybe for years, maybe forever? Everybody knows what happens to Hollywood tests." And unfunnily enough, he was right—for that's usually how it is.

Rather than make their own expensive test of him, Paramount borrowed the 20th-Fox test for a quick look-see, and then burned up the wires getting in touch with Billy's agent.

"Has Fox signed DeWolfe yet?" they asked.

"Nope," the agent answered.

"But are you sure he isn't under contract to them?" Paramount persisted.

"Sure I'm sure!" the agent answered. "They haven't even looked at the test yet!"

Billy signed with Paramount.

That was in 1941. Under the terms of the contract Billy's agent had the right to approve or refuse roles for him. For 18 months the studio submitted little numbers like "Are You a Mason," and for 18 months the agent fired them back.

Meanwhile Billy continued to make financial hay at the Rainbow Room. Finally the role of Mr. Bones, the minstrel man partner of Crosby in "Dixie," was offered, and Billy called it a deal. Enroute to Hollywood, however, he stopped in Chicago to fulfill a committment at the Empire Room in the famous Palmer House.

Greeting him in Hollywood, Paramount's boss man, B. G. DeSylva, immediately launched into an enthusiastic account of the studio's plans for one Billy DeWolfe. The second lead in "Dixie," and after that, bigger and better things.

"In fact," said DeSylva, "we're really going to shoot the works on you! Already have a lot of things under way. Yes sir, the works!"

Billy gulped. "I guess I better tell you then that I'm in the Navy," he stammered.

"In the Navy?" DeSylva screamed. "When? I thought you were 1B. How did it happen?"

"I'm in right now," Billy confessed. "I enlisted while I was in Chicago, and I have to report as soon as I've finished 'Dixie'."

He had gone down to the postoffice to buy some stamps and mail a letter, it seems. Somehow he found himself in a line of men waiting to sign up for the Navy (the recruiting office was in the postoffice) and decided he wanted "in" too. So he stayed in line.

When the Navy said "Out!" last May, Billy took a month's rest in Maine, played a couple of night club engagements to pick up a little quick change (he hadn't exactly fattened on $76 a month in lieu of $1500 a week), and journeyed once more to Hollywood to continue on his Paramount contract. Now that he has finished a comedy role in "Susie Slagle" and a spot in "Duffy's Tavern," he is slated to do a comedy part in "Our Hearts Were Growing Up." Offered his choice of two roles in the

The look every mother knows

The look that says plain as day, "Ah, food—bring it on!" Mothers who serve Gerber's get to know that look very well. Because, Gerber's is famous for: (1) Extra good taste. (2) Cooked the Gerber way by steam to better retain precious minerals and vitamins. (3) Uniform, smooth texture. (4) Every step in the making laboratory-checked. Do as thousands of mothers do—get Gerber's, with "America's Best-Known Baby" on every package!

What's this—iron for babies?

Many babies, your doctor will tell you, need extra iron after the age of three months or more. Both Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal have generous amounts of added iron and Vitamin B_1. Serve both cereals—variety helps baby eat better. Both cereals are precooked—just add milk or formula, hot or cold, and serve.

picture, Billy chose the smaller one, because he liked the character's name—Roland de Bricabrac, a Greenwich Village painter with a nose for beer.

At that, Hollywood almost didn't get Billy this time. Brock Pemberton, the Broadway producer, approached him about a play when he was picking up some of that quick change at the Embassy Room in Washington, D. C. Billy explained he was expected momentarily in Hollywood. How long, Pemberton asked, before DeWolfe would be free?

"I don't know," he said honestly. "I've only got them for six months but they've got me for seven years—if they want me."

Pemberton shook his head. "Too bad," he said. "You would have been perfect for the lead in this play."

The play turned out to be "Harvey"—the sensational smash hit now wowing Broadway.

Billy probably never won a Beautiful Baby contest, and he's no killer-diller for looks now. Close to six feet tall, he weighs a solid 180 pounds, which he is trying to shave to around 170. Rather round of face, he has sharp brown eyes, a black mustache, and black hair.

Handsome or no, however, he has a world of charm, an eager, friendly manner, and a great knack for droll conversation which invariably makes him the center of attention in a crowd. Home is a bachelor apartment in which there is no telephone (he's hoping, of course, like everyone else) and he drives a light green convertible coupe. His heart currently (and for the past two years) belongs to Amy Arnell, an actress-singer, and he may be married by the time you read this. Then again, he may not. Past romances in London, Paris, Budapest et al proved him none too reliable in this department.

"The trouble was, I was always traveling," he explains it, "and I'd lose touch because I never write letters."

Simple, what? When he does marry, however, I'll bet it will be for keeps.

In payment for some of the jolts he has handed out, Hollywood has rocked Billy a couple of times, he admits. It staggered him, for instance, when he discovered that a recent studio order that everyone on the lot must take dancing lessons every week definitely included him, despite his background of dancing fame. And he still is shaking his head over last Christmas eve.

Enroute home rather late from a Christmas party with Dorothy Lamour (whom he calls the swellest gal in Hollywood for good and sufficient reasons, including her friendly and perspicacious help when he was a greenhorn on "Dixie") and her husband, their car ran out of gas. The three stood on the street, discussing what to do and how to move the car, when suddenly a window was raised to the house across the way.

"Merry Christmas!" a woman called out.

Billy was amazed. "How charming, how perfectly lovely," he called back. "Where else in the world would you find a complete stranger calling 'Merry Christmas!' at this time of night? Truly, Hollywood is an extraordinary place!"

"And SHUT UP!" the woman added with a window bang.

As Billy said, can you imagine?

PLAYGROUND OF THE STARS

the natives. A spirit of fun, frivolity and freedom from worry made a marked impression on her, to such an extent that she and Orson Welles recently returned there. After the shock of losing her mother, and then having to go through the ordeal of motherhood, Rita selected Mexico as the ideal spot for a rest. Orson Welles, with his understanding and feeling of "simpatico" for our friendly neighbors, was interested in the conference of Pan American nations which took place there.

Two of the most popular younger Hollywood players to visit Mexico were Deanna Durbin and Van Johnson. Their arrival was marked by endless festivities and celebrations and is still fondly remembered by the natives. Their presence at the bullfights, which take place at four in the afternoon on Sundays, attracted almost as much attention as that of the matadors themselves. And in keeping with the traditions of the ring, the matadors tossed their caps up to the Hollywood visitors and bestowed upon them the signal compliment of dedicating the bulls in their honor.

The usual procedure for American film stars is to make their headquarters in Mexico City, stopping at the cosmopolitan Hotel Reforma or at the elegant Hotel Geneve. At either of these places one is apt to see Dolores Del Rio, Claudette Colbert, Linda Darnell, Mary Anderson, or a host of other Hollywood celebrities.

Many of the stars at the first bienvenida are amazed at the size and beauty of Mexico City. Some of the most beautiful buildings in the world line the broad modern streets and avenues there, and the people filling those streets range from smartly groomed millionaires to poor peons lugging huge crates and cargoes on their backs. But in the evening, the tempo of the city is relaxed. Everyone strolls leisurely past the shop windows filled with merchandise unobtainable (or nearly so) in the States. Cigarettes, cigarette lighters, fountain pens and cameras are plentiful. The restaurants are stocked with steaks and butter and all the erstwhile delicacies. Electrical equipment, cars, radios, toasters can be had for the price.

I asked A. C. Blumenthal, Mexico City's authority on social life, how the stars amuse themselves when they come there. Mr. Blumenthal, owner-proprietor of Ciro's, was sitting on the broad terrace outside his penthouse atop the Reforma Hotel. He stretched a well-tanned arm in a semi-circle, indicating the surrounding mountains bathed in a blue-gray haze.

"First, they all want to rest. The climate is the best you can get—it's spring all year round. Naturally, it makes people relax when they first get here. Claudette Colbert likes to catch up on her sleep before seeing the sights. But Ann Sheridan and Mary Anderson were anxious to go shopping. Linda Darnell danced one rhumba after another."

It's only three years since Ciro's was established, and Ciro's changed the whole night life of Mexico City. Of course, there are other places—

Minuit, Sans Souci, El Patio, Casanova and Morocco—but Ciro's is still the social gathering spot of Mexico.

It is open twenty-four hours a day, and no curfew. Before Ciro's, entertainment was always confined to the home. Now one can see Mexico's aristocracy, the political figures and Hollywood's stars, directors, and producers rubbing shoulders in the beige room of Ciro's—the room decorated with huge white vases of calla lilies, carrying out the motif of the now world-famous Rivera murals.

When Ciro's successfully brought the Mexican women out of the concealment of their drawing rooms, other night spots sprang up and began to flourish. Smart restaurants opened up—such as La Vie Parisienne, Ambassadeurs and Rossignol. Night life really starts at midnight and often continues into the broad hours of dawn.

Fifty miles outside of Mexico City is the delightful resort town of Cuernavaca, where the stars spend their week-ends. Here one can see Countess di Frasso driving through the quaint narrow streets in her glittering Rolls-Royce. In spacious homes replete with swimming pools and beautiful grounds, there is a social life reminiscent of Cannes, the Riviera and Palm Beach. Here, you might turn a corner and bump into Hedy Lamarr dressed in a dirndl (the native costume of the town) with a straw bag slung over her shoulder, shopping for the native-made play shoes. Or you might run into Sally Blaine, who has, for the time being, adopted Mexico as her permanent home.

Two hours drive along twisting mountain roads and through the most breathtakingly beautiful country imaginable, lies the picturesque town of Taxco, rich in silver but static in change. Here, in the sight of an imposing cathedral, Hollywood's actresses come to shop for the silver earrings, bracelets and necklaces turned out by the village craftsmen. Here, too, is the world-famous shop of the Tillett's, where Salvador Conde originates personal prints for the stars. In the charming little shop, where Hedy Lamarr, Deanna Durbin, Jinx Falkenburg and countless other actresses talked to Conde while he was studying them for inspiration, are woolens, silks and cotton prints that until now were available only to the royal families of Europe. But with the establishment of Tilletts in Taxco, Hollywood actresses can now have personal prints made up for their exclusive use.

A hundred miles further west is the seaside town of Acapulco, where Cary Grant and Barbara Hutton used to go to swim and fish and marvel at the views. The sun is always warm at Acapulco and the weather tropical. It's a spot comparable in every way with the Lido and the Riviera and Capri. Here at Hollywood's backdoor is a land of leisurely enchantment with singers serenading the ladies far into the hours of the night.

Taken literally, as lovely Mary Anderson explained one evening as she sat in Ciro's, wearing a Chatillon hat made of gray vulture feathers, "This is really the land of manana—in more ways than one. After the war, it will be seven and a half hours from Hollywood by plane. It will be the place where people from east and west will come to relax and play. It will really be the land of tomorrow."

MISS-ADVENTURE BARI

ignominiously across bathroom floors by innocent cakes of soap.

It all began when Lynn was too small to recognize the malicious hand of a practical-joking Fate, busily setting booby traps for her embarrassment.

At age six, she was scheduled to wear paper wings and a long white dress at a Christmas program. So accoutered, she was to sing "O Little Town Of Bethlehem" in front of the curtain, thus introducing the Sunday School pageant. The day before her debut as a featured singer, Miss Bari shed both her central incisors (front teeth to youse who haven't seen your dentist twice a year). As the letter "s" and the diphthong "th" are most difficult to pronounce under such a circumstance, and as "Town of Bethlehem" is noted for the two lines reading, "How still we see thee lie, Above thy deep and dreamless sleep, the silent stars go by," Miss Bari had her linguistic problems.

However, fortified by the snowiness of her robes and the impressive wing-spread of her shoulder gear, she marched out on the platform and thang her thong with thweetneth and thintherity. Thlowly—er, that is—slowly the curtain began to roll up as it was cranked by an eager Christmas worker in the rear. And as it rolled, it caught the hem of Lynn's angelic robe and inexorably wound it, too. As her clothing began to creep upward, Lynn crossed one foot over the other, exerted hand pressure on the fleeting garment to hold it down about her gradually-being-revealed form, and continued to thing luthtily. A horrified Sunday School teacher, watching from the wings, managed to halt the ascent of the curtain just as it was threatening to twirl a levitated Miss Bari heavenward in the most spectacular aerial stunt since Little Eva was wafted to Heaven, two performances a day. Ingratiated by the thunderous laughter and applause that arose as she finished her song, lithping Lynn bowed again and again. At length, retiring into the wings, Miss Bari told a contemporary, "That'th funny. I ththill don't think I thing tho very well."

Years later, she was still of the opinion—despite her very handsome set of permanent teeth—when she was asked one day to appear on a radio program in behalf of the Naval Aid Auxiliary. All she had to do, she was assured, was to wear her blue uniform, arrive at the broadcasting station at the proper time, deliver a plea for funds and depart with a sensation of having fulfilled a patriotic duty. Miss Lynn, happy to be of assistance, followed all directions. But when she walked upon the stage—beyond which sat a huge and eager audience—she learned that her appeal was to be delivered just before a quiz program. "And," jubilated the announcer triumphantly, "Miss Bari will be our final contestant."

Miss Bari secretly prayed to be seized with something as dire as it was temporary. She thought of fainting, of developing an attack of galloping hiccoughs. But before she could perfect any subterfuge, she found herself before a microphone. "We are going to play three musical selections, Miss Bari," went on her tormentor. "If you can identify one of them you will win a sum of money that will be contributed to your cause."

So the orchestra whipped through a number. Miss Bari had never heard it before, although the tumult from the audience informed her that hers was the only blank score in the house. Swallowing hard, she asked for the second song. There was something vaguely familiar about the melody of that one, but the words, the title, even the picture in which it had been introduced were as vague to her as the face of your waiter, at the spot where you had New Year's Eve dinner, is to you.

"The third and last song," said the Announcer, grinning helpfully at Miss Wish-There-Was-a-Hole-in-The-Floor Bari.

But she was saved. The song was—ah, example of erudition and savoir faire—"Mairzy Doats." She fairly screamed the title. And then she was asked to sing the first four lines. She did, but at what cost to her nervous system no one will ever know. Some of her best friends happened to hear the program, so there is a nasty rumor throughout Hollywood that Lynn will never be allowed to forget "Mairzy Doats." She hears occasional snatches of the song on the set, but can never locate the singer; she answers the telephone rather regularly to hear a few lyrical bars. Her resulting mental state may justly be labeled Quiz Combat Fatigue.

Lynn Bari finished her High School work in the 20th Century-Fox schoolroom, closely supervised. So when she was sent on her first Personal Appearance tour she positively percolated. Making her original stop at Albany in connection with the release of "Drums Along The Mohawk," she was met by the city dignitaries, reporters, photographers, and mobs of clamoring public. She was presented with a massive bouquet of roses, and—slightly moonstruck for all this adulation—walked off the top step of a flight of stairs and fell the full length of the cement ascent.

People ran down, exclaiming. Photographers had an unexpected field day. Miss Bari's agent, furiously thinking that it was all a publicity stunt—oh, publicity should come so hard—muttered angrily, "Get up. You should be ashamed to create such a scene."

Lynn, her complexion a weary Camembert, arose dizzily. Her arm was broken.

Not quite so tragic was the event that took place in one of the Chicago stations when Lynn was returning from Washington in early 1943, after having attended the President's Birthday Ball at the end of a hospital tour.

The weather was bitterly cold and her train had been two hours late. Consequently she had missed the westbound train on which her original reservations had been made. Travel conditions weren't quite as fearful at that time as they are now, but the celebrated tortoise was making time equivalent to that chalked by most transcontinental passengers because of delays, shortage of reservations, et cetera, et cetera.

Lynn got in touch with certain 20th Century-Fox officials in the station in which she had arrived, and was told to transfer at once to another station. You know how the Chicago Transportation system is set up—by an expert in mystic mazes. Lynn finally found a porter and a cab, and whizzed to the proper terminal.

All this time she had been carrying, in addition to her heavy handbag, her gloves, and three magazines, a twelve-ounce bottle of imported cologne. The scent had been a gift from an admirer who had brought it out of France. A gift both priceless and irreplaceable.

As Lynn leaped through the depot, the announcer called her train for the last time. Miss Bari moved her personal throttle forward, ducked her head, and made a tank charge for the grilled-iron gate. There was a fellow traveler—male—with precisely the same idea. The next sounds heard were the cracking of skulls, and the shattering of a twelve-ounce bottle of magnificent cologne upon the concrete floor. Lynn uttered a cry of anguish, but did not slacken her speed. Both she and a frantically apologizing gentleman made the train . . . but the conductor assured the man that his reservations were for the following day.

Then there was the Curious Case of the Hotel Fire. In Washington, D. C., Miss Bari and her roommate, a fellow employee of 20th Century-Fox, were awakened at a brittle five A. M. by the unmistakable odor of smoke. Miss Bari leaped out of bed, slipped into her robe and opened the corridor door. At right angles to her suite was another, at the corner of the building, and standing in the open door was a gentleman who was marinated to the marrow.

"Your room's on fire," Lynn pointed out.

"'Shall ri'—jush a lil ole fire—not a thing to get ex-ex-excited about!" And he waved a nonchalant hand toward flaming draperies.

Lynn grabbed her fur coat, called the desk, and awakened her companion simultaneously. Together they scorched down eight flights of stairs to the lobby. Each of the girls was wearing her tomorrow's curls in bobby pins; neither face could be suspected of one iota of assistant coloring; their nighties, showing beneath fur coats, trembled with nervousness and morning chill.

When the fire was extinguished, along with the high spirits of its kindler, Lynn's roommate casually took the elevator back to the eighth floor. But Lynn, a public figure, didn't dare to be seen in her pioneer state. She had to climb the eight flights of service stairs to remain inconspicuous. When she reached her room, her bunk mate was already asleep again. Muttering something about the absurdity of prominence, she pulled the covers over her spiked head.

The average girl, living in Kansas City or Kankakee, sometimes finds herself attending The Party of The Season in exactly the same dress as her husband's tiresome second cousin. At such times she thinks fervently: If I were an actress I could have everything I owned exclusively mine, no duplications.

Be comforted by the experience of Miss Bari. Luckily she happened to be deeply fond of the Other Girl in the case. Lynn was invited to a very swank affair, so decided to select a trig afternoon suit from one of the most famous of Hollywood coutourières. Although this particular shop offers a patron her choice from a group of similar designs, at least the patron's choice of color is likely to be distinctly her own. Secure in this thought, Lynn selected an exceedingly smart outfit.

Several days later, she and one of her best friends—Virginia Gilmore—went shopping for hats. Each had a swatch of material from the suit she was planning to wear to the fete. But, since each dealt with a different person in the same millinery, neither saw the swatch the other was attempting to match.

Came the day of the affair, and Lynn joined Virginia to attend. They were gowned exactly alike. Same material, same design, same color scheme. Only their hats were different—yet they, too, conformed to the general color scheme.

Laughing, the girls went to the party as twins, telling all inquiring guests that individualism in dress was passé; the new trend was regimentation.

Some months later the girls met in New York for luncheon—each still wearing her celebrated suit. By that time, however, Lynn had decided that she didn't much like her hat—that the style Virginia had chosen would have been better. Virginia, ditto. So they swapped hats.

Nearly everyone has a story to tell about his encounter with a stubborn waiter. Lynn is no exception. She and her husband, Sid Luft, were having dinner at Chez Roland (a small club on Roosevelt Highway) one evening when Lynn decided that she wanted to play the juke box, a formidable affair at this particular spot. She cadged a fistful of nickels from her husband and assailed the juke. After tinkering with it for a few moments, she came to the conclusion that it needed a master hand to mesh the gears; so she stopped a passing waiter. "Can you play this for me?" she asked, sweetly, appealingly.

"What you want to play?" demanded the man.

"Accentuate The Positive," reported Miss Bari.

The waiter shook his head sorrowfully. "You not want that seely stuff," he protested. "You play something nice like 'Viennese Waltz.' So!" And taking the nickel from Miss Bari's hand, the waiter pressed the lever of his choice, touched a secret throttle somewhere in the back of the machine, and out swept—the 'Viennese Waltz!'

Somewhat nonplussed, Lynn sat down. "I thought you were going to play . . ." Sid started to say.

"Next time," promised Lynn, not caring to go into the matter.

The next time she approached the box, the same waiter came to her assistance. "This time, 'Frenesi,'" he nodded, snatching Lynn's nickel and repeating his previous manipulations.

During the hour she was there, Lynn didn't play 'Accentuate The Positive.' She did play—by proxy—every sweet selection on the card.

But however weird her luck in other things has been, Lynn Bari's career is leaping forward on rabbits' feet. She is currently working in "Captain Eddie," the story of Eddie Rickenbacker. She portrays Mrs. Rickenbacker, a plum part, to be followed by even juicier roles. Of course this doesn't mean that Lynn has permanently shed her gremlins. They are merely having a sabbatical leave. As soon as they return to the job, we'll report to you.

really a frustrated lawyer. For that reason he didn't try to make David follow in his footsteps and become a restaurant proprietor.

"Running a restaurant," he said categorically, "is the silliest business in the world. The trouble is that the customers take away what you sell them. A good business is one in which your customers don't take anything away. Like a roller-skating rink—you lend them skates, charge them 35 cents, and at the end of the evening you get your skates back."

Mr. McBroom also approved of law as a profession. If you're a lawyer, you don't give anything away—not even advice. Mr. McBroom, need we add, is Scotch.

David himself had other ambitions. While he was attending high school he dreamed of being an orchestra leader. He played violin and led the high school band. His idol was Herbie Kaye, and he thought that traveling around with a band all over the country, as Herbie did, was wonderful.

"But I've discovered since," says David, "that being a band leader is no cinch. It's really full of hard work and plenty of headaches."

By the time Dave was ready for college, he had more than a sneaking suspicion that he wanted to act. His father was still bound and determined that David was to become a lawyer. But David enrolled at the Northwestern School of Speech.

"Why a school of speech?" his father wanted to know. "Why not law school?"

"Every lawyer," argued David, "must be able to make a good speech." And so he pulled the wool over his dad's eyes . . . for a while.

By the time he was in his senior year, he was acting in so many plays, and was so busy in the dramatic society, that the wool slipped from papa's eyes. However, one day when Mr. McBroom, David and the minister of the Methodist Church had dinner together, Mr. McBroom became reconciled to the fact that David was headed for a career as an actor. The Methodist minister had seen some of David's performances.

"You and I, my boy," he said, "are each accomplishing some good, each in our own way. You are making people laugh and I am trying to save their souls. Both jobs are important."

Another important event happened in David's senior year—although at the time he didn't realize how important it was. He met the girl who was later to be his inspiration, his wife, his everything.

"The dramatic director at college was casting Henry IV and I was helping him out. I'd already been chosen to play Hotspur. He was testing girls for Kate. Several girls tried out . . . and then in came Cynthia. She has brown hair and blazing blue eyes. She has small, charming features. She has a figure that looks well in anything; she weighs 102 pounds today. She was definitely the prettiest girl who tried out for the part.

"So she played Kate to my Hotspur. And we became good friends. Occasionally we went to dances together. But we didn't think at all about romance. We were both too busy, I with my plays, Cynthia with post-graduate work.

"We did think it was an odd coincidence that we were both born on the same day, January 6th. But even that discovery didn't give us any romantic ideas. At the end of the play we exchanged pictures. Under my picture I wrote, 'To Cynthia, the grandest wife I ever had', little dreaming that one day she was really going to be my wife. Actually, it was six years before we were married."

When David left school, he and Cynthia parted. He began traveling all over the country with stock companies, and Cynthia traveled everywhere, teaching school. Each year they exchanged birthday cards. But they thought of each other just casually, as friends do, not romantically, as sweethearts do.

Shortly after his graduation, David went to New York to try to get on the stage. He started with a capital of $65, and his fare. In New York he rented a room on Sixth Avenue for $3.50 a week. He saw every agent and theatrical producer in town. But actors were a dime a dozen then—particularly actors whose experience was limited to college plays. None of the producers was impressed. Finally, David was down to his last nickel.

"What followed," he says, "sounds like the phoniest of stories, but strangely enough it's the truth. I had a slight cough, so I spent my last nickel for cough drops, and lived on those for three days. This was just a few days before Thanksgiving. At the end of three days, a Railway Express bundle arrived from my mother, containing roast duck, corned beef hash, candy and other Thanksgiving delicacies. I feasted on my mother's cooking, and got a new lease on life. Then I got a job playing the piano for my dinners, in a restaurant on Sixth Avenue."

Shortly after that, David began to work as a page boy at NBC for the magnificent sum of $15 a week. And then came a letter from Paramount. While he had still been at college, Oliver Hinsdell, then a talent scout with Paramount, had seen him act in a college play, and had sent his photograph and an enthusiastic report to the studio. But studios are sometimes notoriously slow about making up their minds. So time had been a-wastin' and a-wastin', while Paramount was deciding whether or not to do anything about this young college find. The letter said if he would come to Hollywood for a movie test, the studio would pay for the trip.

Since David had nothing to lose but a $15 a week job, plus those free dinners for playing the piano, he accepted the offer, took the test and was signed to a seven-year contract. But if you're a wise baby, you know that a seven year contract doesn't necessarily mean you'll ever get your face in front of a camera.

So it happened for David. He was under contract, but nothing happened. "At the end of six months, I was very unhappy and I asked for my release. The studio agreed to pay my way back to New York."

So New York again, and again David didn't get nearer Broadway than running the elevator in the Nora Bayes theatre. He did whatever work he could to keep body and soul alive. He even sold fertilizer on Long Island.

But in New York there was a young, lovely girl named Phyllis Isley. She, too, had acting ambitions. She told David she was starting a stock company in Oklahoma and asked him, "Will you be my leading man?"

Of course he said yes . . . even today, who can refuse Jennifer Jones? (Oh yes—didn't you remember? Phyllis Isley is Jennifer's real name.)

"We toured all summer in Oklahoma," David explains, "and everything happened on that tour. Once the villain was supposed to shoot, with me as the target, and Phyllis was supposed to rush in to protect me. Naturally, when the gun goes off, the gal gets shot. We had to find some way to make it look as if blood had spurted from Phyllis' arm. 'What'll I use to make it look that way?' she asked me. I got some rouge and cold cream and placed them where they'd be handy when needed, so that she could quickly apply the rouge to her arm. After the shot was fired, the blood would appear to spread from the wound.

"But one day the cylinder fell out of the villain's gun and it wouldn't go off. Jennifer already had the rouge on her arm, and when she came out, apparently bleeding, the audience howled."

On the company's closing night in Tulsa, David had chills and fever. When the curtain rang down on the third act, he passed out. The doctor diagnosed it as malaria.

For several weeks he was very ill. Then he received an invitation to join the Peninsula Players, a company in Wisconsin which he had helped found during his college days. Although the salary was only $20 a week plus his food and board (he'd received about $45 a week with Jennifer Jones' company) he accepted the offer. When he arrived in Wisconsin, he heard that a Hollywood actress was going to join the company.

"She'll probably be a stinker," the other actors said. "You know the way those Hollywood people are. She'll probably upstage all of us."

But came the day. Came the girl, Jacqueline Wells (now known as Julie Bishop). She didn't upstage anyone. She was swell. Came friendship. She was David's leading lady in "The Circle." Convinced that he could act, she said so. She also added, "Why don't you try Hollywood?"

Came the reply, "Yuk, yuk, yuk, I've been there! No thanks!"

"Well, anyway," said Jacqueline, "why don't you come to Hollywood to visit me? And if you wish, while you're there I'll introduce you to my agent."

So David went out to Hollywood again—only this time, he had to pay his own fare. Consequently he traveled by bus. "There's an art to traveling comfortably on a Greyhound bus," he says. "There is only one seat in a bus you can lie down in, and I appropriated that seat. Of course on a crowded bus in wartime, my little plan wouldn't work. You'd be lucky to get any seat. But in those days there were plenty of empty seats, so no one minded my luggage and coat on the back seat—which by a not so odd coincidence is the one you can lie down in."

Incidentally, there was very little luggage. For David's wardrobe was down to almost nothing at all. When he learned that he had an appointment with Henry Willson at Zeppo Marx's agency, he was frantic. He had no suit to wear, since the only business suit he had was a threadbare blue serge, decidedly on the shiny side.

But David is a resourceful guy. Wearing an old pair of white trousers and a pair of tennis shoes, and carrying a borrowed tennis racket, he arrived to see Henry Willson. "I'm sorry," he said. "I didn't have time to change. Just off the tennis court, you know, when I got word that you wanted to see me." Actually, of course, he hadn't been anywhere near a tennis court!

In spite of the white trousers, however—the tennis shoes and the borrowed racket—the Zeppo Marx agency signed him. He tested at Warner Brothers and was put under contract. He was at Warner's two years, during which he made 17 pictures . . . "Usually just behind Errol Flynn or out of focus. Once I played a lead with Brenda Marshall in 'Singapore Woman'. I got the role because Jeffrey Lynn had turned down the script. Smart boy, Jeffrey Lynn."

When war came along, it made David Bruce's cavortings in front of the camera seem pretty unimportant to him. He asked Warners' to release him so he could enlist in the Navy Air Corps.

He was accepted. Before he went into the Navy, he had a week in which to wind up his private business or take a vacation. He took the vacation, and decided to spend it in Palm Springs.

On the way there he passed Claremont, California, where Cynthia was teaching at Scripps College. He knew her address because of those birthday cards they were always exchanging, and he decided to pay a call. This was the first time in a couple of years that he had seen her. And Cynthia was lovelier than ever. But David didn't know love was just around the corner. So he said hail and farewell and went on to Palm Springs.

Now Palm Springs is one of the gayest resorts in California. Few places have brighter sunshine or more beautiful girls. But to David, for some unaccountable reason, the place seemed unbearably dull.

Odd, how he hankered to see Cynthia. So he turned up in Claremont again, found Cynthia at a dance, left her escort on the dance floor looking rather bewildered about the whole thing and whisked the pretty maid away. They went on a moonlight ride.

During the rest of that week, Cynthia and David went everywhere together.

Then he went into the service, and Cynthia came to St. Mary's Pre-Flight School to see David.

David began to take it for granted that some day he and Cynthia would get married. In his letters he kept saying, "After we're married, we'll do thus and so." Finally Cynthia wrote, "You keep writing about what we'll do after we're married. Well, I'm from the South and kind of old-fashioned. What do you mean . . . after we're married? Do you realize you've never asked me to marry you?"

This was a matter that had to be remedied right away, so David took Cynthia to a little club in Orinda, California, bought a bottle of champagne and popped the question.

He didn't know it, but an honorable discharge from the Navy was even then just around the corner.

When David had enlisted, he had forgotten to mention that he had a chronic mastoid condition. Six months later a routine physical check-up disclosed same, and as David says, "The Navy refused to take up my option. I tried the Army and the Marine Corps, but they wouldn't have me either. Then I tried Universal—and they let me in."

Meanwhile, he and Cynthia had married. At first she continued teaching at Scripps College; and when David had some free time he would drive to Claremont, when she had some free time she would drive to Hollywood.

But such an arrangement is never more than temporarily satisfactory, so last December Cynthia resigned.

When they were first married, Cynthia knew very little about cooking. At her wedding, a friend called her into a private room and said, "I have a wonderful wedding gift for you. It's the finest one you'll ever get. It's a family recipe and you must memorize it. Repeat after me. . ."

So Cynthia memorized the recipe for Chicken Rosemary—chicken fried and smothered in a secret rosemary sauce, and even David doesn't know how it's made. He is the salad man in the Bruce kitchen. He makes wonderful salads.

But don't get the idea he isn't rugged. Because he is. And now he's more handsome than ever. When he finished "Christmas Holiday," David weighed 185 pounds. Now he weighs 170—and he's solid, Jackson, solid!

He lost fifteen pounds for the sake of "Salome, Where She Danced." At first Wanger tested him for the role of the heavy, the Prussian officer Von Bohlen (later played by Albert Dekker). David took out a book on dialects and studied Prussian diligently. After he had taken his test in that role, Wanger got the idea of casting him as a young American, instead.

But Wanger was worried. "You're supposed to be a kid of 19 in this, and you look 105. You've got too much stuff around the chin, too much extra. Can you lose 15 pounds in two weeks?"

"I can do it in ten days," said Dave. And believe it or not, he did.

Cynthia was very pleased. When she saw him in his Confederate uniform for "Salome," she was even more pleased, for her heart is still that of a normal Southern girl. She had some color pictures of David taken in his Confederate uniform and sent them to her mother, to show her what a handsome Southerner David might have made—if he'd been born in the South instead of in Illinois.

"Yes," says David happily, "we're both nuts. We occasionally fight the Civil War all over again. We also argue over whether it's possible for two people, both of whom have blue eyes, to have offspring with eyes that are any other color. I say that our children will have to be blue eyed. Cynthia disagrees. There's just one way to settle the argument. And you can bet on it—we will!"

LUCKY JIM

they'll make allowances. We have to test without the right wardrobe or the right sets, with some stooge reading the other parts—they can't expect a lot." They do expect a lot and they don't make allowances. They think it's pretty darn white of them to give you your chance—and it is!'"

The man who taught Jim, that is Bill Russell, now directing "Our Hearts Were Growing Up," in which the quartet of young players who gained fame in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" are repeating their former roles.

Mr. Russell was Paramount coach at the time, and he had two days in which to get Jim ready for his first test. According to Jim, his contract was all Bill Russell's doing. The young Texan entered the coach's studio, tense and worried. In no time flat he'd learned to work on his role in such easy fashion that the result on the screen, though attained the hard way, seemed gay and spontaneous.

"He taught me to like acting," confided Jim. "Anyone can do a better job if he likes what he's doing. When I was a kid, my father wanted me to learn a trade and get a job, the quicker the better. But any job I knew about looked deadly dull. My father's idea was that I should go into the oil business—Texas is full of opportunities in the oil fields—and he thought I was wasting time in high school playing football and swinging a tennis racquet. Fortunately, my mother encouraged me to keep playing. I loved tennis. It took me through two years of military school at Schreiner Institute in Kerrville, Texas, and two years at Baylor University in Waco, Texas. Normally that would have cost $1000 a year, and my mother could never have afforded so much. My parents had separated and my mother was supporting three children."

That seemingly idle racquet-swinging also brought Jim to Hollywood, in 1941. His southpaw service and smashing backhand drive had brought him fame in tennis circles, and as Lefty Brown he had a string of tennis titles to his credit. The Pacific Southwest Tennis Tournament, one of the nation's top meets, is staged annually in Los Angeles, and "just for fun" as he says, Jim put his name on the board.

As he waited to take his place on the courts, he noticed an earnest young man, immaculately dressed, hands folded on an English-looking cane, eyeing him intently from a seat in the bleachers above. The bleacher-sitter's gaze followed the bronzed young Texan through the games, and when in the fourth round Jim was eliminated, the earnest young man put away his cane and came to the dressing rooms.

"Ever thought of trying the movies?"

Jim laughed, thinking it was a gag, and said he rather planned to tour with Garwood Van's orchestra as first vocalist. (He had already filled engagements with the band in Oklahoma City and Houston.)

"I am Henry Willson, agent. I can arrange a screen test for you."

"This is what LOSING 65 POUNDS has meant to me!"

—says Mrs. Dorothy Waters of Pitman, New Jersey

"HAVE YOU any idea what it means to be 65 pounds lighter? To me it means a freedom from worry and weariness such as I hadn't known in years. It means buying a size 14 dress instead of a 44—with a wider selection, smarter styles, lower prices and no alterations. It means hearing my husband say it's a thrill just to walk down the street with me. It means that my housework, a tedious burden before, is now done easily and quickly.

"As soon as I started my DuBarry Success Course at home, things began to happen. The first week I lost 7 pounds, then 3 pounds every week until I had gone from 187 to 122.

"Friends remark on the improved appearance of my skin, the styling of my hair, my skill in make-up. My doctor approved the plan and was amazed at my progress each time I went for a check-up. He tells me that I now have a school-girl figure.

"Yes, this is what the DuBarry Success Course has meant to me. I'd gladly have paid five times its cost."

NUM-ZIT TEETHING LOTION

Jim can't remember what he replied to that, but he tried to explain that he had never acted in his life, that there wasn't the remotest chance of his being any good. Besides, he had promised to go back to Baylor for another term, motive tennis.

The agent pointed out that the screen offers greater opportunities than come from singing with a band or playing in tennis tournaments. Imperturbably, he demolished all Jim's arguments, and next thing he knew the young athlete found himself engaged to make a test for Paramount.

That was when he met Bill Russell. The studio liked the test. Jim was signed to a contract and given leave to return to Baylor for a short term.

"Go in for dramatics while you're down there," advised his agent. "You need experience and anything you do will help."

Jim said: "Okay!" and promptly forgot the advice given. No one at Baylor thought of Lefty Brown as an actor. Then one evening the girl of the moment suggested that he come to the auditorium with her while she tested for a part in the college play. As Lefty lounged in the front row, half asleep, the director called: "You—down there! Want to read a part?"

Jim took his feet off the chair arm, gasped and returned a startled "Not me!" But ten minutes later, when the girl came up on the stage for her test, the director said: "Let's have a little co-operation around here. You come up and read the man's part while this young lady tests." Jim came up, obligingly, and read the long scene through.

"Okay, you're in!" said the director. "Rehearsal eight o'clock tomorrow night."

"Hey—not me!" cried the bewildered Jim.

"Yes, you—you're in," repeated the director. And he was.

"It was a period play," recalled the actor. "I had to wear sideburns and a little moustache and get off the most frightful lines. The only way I could imagine doing it was to 'ham it up', and I did. We didn't rehearse with scenery or costumes, and on opening night I found myself wearing a high collar so tight I couldn't turn my head, a pair of tight pants that made it dangerous to bend, and an enormous high hat. In our elopement scene, I had to pop up out of a cellarway that was made for a fellow half my size. When I made my first entrance for this scene, the cellarway wouldn't admit all of me; I caught my pants on something and felt the seat go, so I tried to keep back view away from the audience. It all struck me as being so comical that I couldn't get my face straight. Besides that, my big hat hit an obstruction and crushed down on my nose. I never expected to live to the curtain."

Next day, Texas' gift to Hollywood read the newspaper notices. "As an actor, Lefty Brown is still a fine tennis player," was the consensus of opinion.

The episode served to teach Jim that he wasn't ready for stardom. He sweated through a few roles without setting the Hollywoods on fire. He hadn't been at Paramount very long, however, before coming to the attention of John Farrow, then getting ready to make "Wake Island." The director stopped at Jim's table one noon. "Think I can use you," he said. "Get your hair cut like mine, very short, and report to my assistant."

Jim rushed to the barber, who practically shaved off his waving brown locks. The young actor was appalled at the result; his shorn head, never too large, looked pitifully small atop his long, lean six-foot-two. "That part I'm getting," he told his reflection, "had better be worth it!" He wasn't important enough to ask to read the script. Anyway, all they had at that date was twenty pages. The story was written as they went along.

The company assembled on a desert spot near Indio, California, where sand storms blew night and day, dust and grit was in the food, the beds and everything they touched. Jim sat and sat, and sat some more. "No lines for you yet," the assistant answered his daily query. After two weeks, Jim went to Mr. Farrow and asked if he could go home now.

"Oh yes, you!" said Mr. Farrow, as if he'd just remembered there was such a person. "Sure, go home . . . Or you can do a one-line speech tomorrow, if you like."

Jim went home, feeling as if a particularly brilliant bubble had burst.

"I was disappointed, inclined to grouch about this experience and think myself abused," he confessed with a grin. "Which just shows you there's a reason for everything, if you have the patience to wait. Time went on, my hair grew out in a regular Texas thatch, standing up thick and dark and stiff. Henry Willson looked at it one night and said in his quiet way: 'Warners are looking for a guy with hair like that for "Air Force".' And the next thing I knew I was in that picture!"

It was Jim's performance as Tex in "Air Force" that set the maiden heart of America to throbbing. He continued the process in "Corvette K-225." But by that time the heartbeats of one girl were all that mattered.

While he was dashing about tennis courts, winning honors and earning his way through school, Jim had not been blind to the charms of girls, especially nice ones. He liked to take them out, kid with them and have fun. All the time, though, he had a Dream Girl. He knew how she would look, how she would walk and even how she would smile. And suddenly, one day as he sat in the studio commissary, his Dream Girl walked in, flesh and blood, and beautiful—yes, just like that.

"I was shy then," he recalled. "So shy that I went out with a girl fifty times before I even tried to hold her hand. I met Verna (her name was Verna Knopf) and almost at once I was trying to put my arm around her! I just couldn't understand myself. I was in such a tizzy over Verna I couldn't breathe right until I'd asked her to marry me. We were married in three weeks . . . I didn't know such things happened, except in stories!"

Verna had been a Cover Girl. She was under contract to Howard Hughes when Jim met her, but in spite of two years' training had never appeared on the screen.

"She saw Hughes only twice in all that time," marveled Jim. "He paid for her lessons, as he paid for all those of the girls under contract to him, but he never got around to assigning a part. Anyway, I owe him thanks for bringing Verna out to me."

Now there are two tiny daughters in the Brown nursery: Beverly Jean, aged two years and three months, and Baby Carol Ann, aged eight months.

"We called Beverly Jean 'Windy' when she was very little, but the name got changed to 'Wendy' somehow. She was my baby from the minute she was born. I took care of her, played with her, taught her to talk and walk, couldn't wait to get home to her," confessed her father. "Carol Ann and I are just beginning to get friendly. We've been more or less formal up to now, but the ice is breaking. I can see it melting a bit more every day."

Jim takes parenthood the hard way. If his daughters fall down, cry, or even give out with a slight cough, his mental eyes see them with broken necks, frightful cuts or double-pneumonia. He can hardly bear it until he's sure they are safe and all right again.

Yet he's had his share of accidents. When he was playing football at school, he was kicked back of one ear. It hurt considerably and he complained of earache when he got home, but all he did about it was put a little oil on cotton in the offending member. Presently he played another game and came out with a cracked knee and broken ear drum. As soon as he was patched up, out he went to the field again.

"It got so that when I was struck during a game, I couldn't get my bearings," he recalled. "I'd run into the ground. So I had to stop playing football and go in for tennis. In that game, the ear bothered me only when it was hurting, when an echo developed that made it difficult to tell when to expect the ball. I took up trumpet-playing, also, but the air used to come out of the bad ear so I had to give that up."

It was a great disappointment to him when he discovered that the bad ear would keep him from being a pilot, a boyhood dream very close to his heart. As a youngster, he had built model planes, hung around flying fields, picked up all he could learn about aircraft. He was turned down when he tried to join the Air Forces, and even had to give up the notion of becoming part of a ground crew. He's inclined to envy his younger brother, Billy Joe, who is on his way overseas.

"Talking about earache," Jim remarked, over his third cup of coffee, "when we were making 'Objective Burma', I had a bout of it. Roderick Redwing, an Indian actor, said he'd show me a cure. He took a piece of cotton, wound it on a small stick, lit it with a sulphur match, let it burn briefly, blew out the flame, and thrust the charred cotton into my ear. The warmth entered the aching ear and the pain left. Indian magic, they call it!"

The young actor declares he's as lazy as the next Texan, but no one would gather so from his lively program. He's working in "Our Hearts Were Growing Up," helping Verna with household problems, spending hours with his young daughters, playing tennis when he can find a spare moment, and preparing earnestly for the future. Right now the latter activity takes the form of making song records.

"These Boy-Meets-Girl pictures are all right," he explained. "No film schedule would be good without them, and I'm delighted to play my share of light stuff. But I'd also like to get my teeth into some tough roles—Alan Ladd parts—and take a fling at musical pictures. I can hardly go around slugging people to prove I'm tough, but I can get set for parts in films with music.

"My mother and father used to sing a lot when they were young—not professionally, of course—and my sister Ruth, Billy Joe and I were always taking voice or giving out with a melody. I was just about to go with a band when Paramount signed me. The records I'm making are a little bulwark for Old Lady Luck. In case a chance comes along with a male singer—and Bing's busy—I'll have a variety of records on hand to offer producers who want to know if I can sing.

"One of these days television will suddenly sweep our surprised country. I'm going to be prepared for that, too.

"If Luck has any keys to opportunity for me, I hope I'll be all set to use them!"

THE PRINCE WAS A PAUPER

photographer back in Nicholas (pop. 500), New York, where he was born some thirty years ago.

But Dorothy was around, and whenever the Princes' luck got fouled up behind the 8 ball, Dorothy sold a little more of her inherited stock to tide them over the too-frequent meatless Tuesdays, or Wednesdays, or Thursdays.

The whole thing started way back in Bill's high school days, when glamour was brought into his erstwhile dullish life via the rantings of Walter Roberts, his public-speaking teacher. Roberts had trod the boards back in 1917 as a soldier entertainer with Elsie Janis, and he'd been through the labor pains of vaudeville. His stories made good listening and, in Bill's case anyway, good inspiration.

Bill put his stage yearnings on the inactive list for a few years, and continued his grind as a Grade-A student. He survived three years of Cornell University before he gave in completely and had his name added to the roster of those other actors-temporarily-between-jobs on the WPA theatre group. He did what he lovingly calls the subway circuit as Lucentio in "The Taming of the Shrew."

Finally quitting theatrics on the semi-pro time, Bill joined the Ed (now "Archy") Gardner troupe at Whitestone, Flushing, New York. Bill "paid" for his bit by doubling-in-ulcers as assistant stage manager.

When this play folded its third-act curtain not-too-silently, Bill, in pursuit of happiness via regular eating habits, grabbed off a two-week job in the statistical department of a radio network. ("I couldn't even spell it," Bill says). When the temporary status stretched into what looked like a full-time job, Bill took his future into both hands, gulped a couple of times, and asked Dorothy Hvass, a Manhattan publicist, to marry him. The ink was barely dry on the marriage certificate when the job came to an abrupt halt and the Prince became a pauper again.

For a while Bill and Dorothy lived on laughs. Bill's shoes wore through their original soles and a couple of half-sole jobs, and the rut he was wearing in and out of disinterested producers' offices began assuming abysmal proportions, when Dorothy finally convinced him that he ought to do a season at Virginia's Barter Theatre—just to keep his ham in, as it were.

He had been studying with the Russian coach and actress, Daykarhanova, but Russia was never like this... at the Barter Theatre Bill worked for room, board and cigarette (remember?) money. He ate turnip greens three times a day and it came up jaundice. After a season of yellowed cheek and jaundiced eye, Bill trudged wearily back to Broadway and became one of ninety extras in the Max Reinhardt spectacle, "The Eternal Road."

"It was a terrific experience," Bill says. "I wore body make-up every night and had to remove it with ice water. No heat at all. I had twelve changes of costume and played everything from one of the children being led out of the wilderness to an Egyptian slave lugging an obelisk. I've never worked so hard for fifteen dollars a week in my life."

When "The Road" closed because of a topheavy budget, Bill wrangled an appointment with Maurice Evans and read for him (the stage equivalent of a screen test). While the Shakespearian actor-producer mulled over Bill's debits and credits, the Prince invaded the jaundice belt again for another Barter Theatre season.

Back in New York the pontifical Shakespearian stamp of approval was put on his talent, and he did a season of the Bard in New York and another on the road, being alternately a gravedigger and understudy to actor Arthur Kennedy.

Dorothy, weary of being a part-time wife, and determined to keep Bill by her side—for a few months, anyway—hocked some more stock and bought two third-class tickets to Europe on the Bremen.

It was 1939. A hectic year at the outset. A year that saw Americans divided into factions: those who boycotted German goods willy-nilly, those who ostriched and screamed "no foreign entanglements for us!" and those who just shrugged off the whole thing.

And yet slowly but surely the Fates, or whatever you want to call them, were guiding the nations' destinies toward a holocaust that for sheer horror was to make World War I look like a sand-lot sham battle.

But Dorothy and Bill Prince were in no mood for signs of the times, and were off for a fling in an Old World that was fast crumbling.

The Bremen flew the Nazi flag. She was Germany-bound with a capacity load of German-born American citizens who, according to them, were on a holiday trip to the Fatherland. The long arm of coincidence, they would have Bill believe, had beckoned them all at the same instant, until this floating palace of the Fatherland resembled a pleasure boat on the Rhine. Bill knows now that their Fuehrer had called them home for Der Tag!

The third day out was the Fourth of July, and the "American citizenry" had gathered in the Bremen's dining saloon to pay homage to Uncle Sam. They stood silently while the band whipped through the Star-Spangled Banner like Sea Biscuit pounding in toward the finish line. Then, without missing a beat, the orchestra swung into Deutschland Uber Alles, while the crowd instantly snapped its arms into the proper "heil" position.

"It was a numbing shock," Bill says, "to realize that a couple of thousand 'loyal' citizens were living with you aboard ship, practically sharpening their swastikas under your nose. It was a frightening experience."

In England they experienced their first-air-raid practice, felt the electric current of war panic, although Chamberlain was even then in Munich bargaining with Hitler. They went on to Flensburg in Schleswig-Holstein, in Germany, to visit Dorothy's great-aunts, and there met and lived with the first real Nazi they ever met on home-ground. And they could have done without him very nicely, thanks. They visited Cologne and got an even better idea of how viciously the Nazi poison philosophy works.

And about their trip to Nuremberg . . . "On the train," Bill says, "we learned that Hitler's annual speech and troop review on 'Party Day' was scheduled for the day of our arrival. We really looked forward to seeing the little 'big' man in person. The reviewing stand was built, to show the Nazis' contempt, on the site of a razed Hebrew Temple, and the streets were lined with Nazi flags.

"But as we stepped off the train the long-faced porter greeted us with: 'Der Fuehrer's speech has been cancelled, and you have just missed Herr Von Ribbentrop! He left just ten minutes ago!'

"'Where did he go?' I asked.

"'He is flying to Russia,' the porter answered.

"In Munich, a couple of days later, we witnessed a party of Nazi officers toast the signing of the new non-aggression pact with Russia."

In Switzerland, Bill and Dorothy met a charming Swiss woman named Helen Ikle. Through her they learned that the French-German border had been closed that morning, and that communications between England and Germany had been cut off. The war drums were rolling in earnest. The American consul at Berne advised them to leave for home at once.

Today, Helen Ikle is an American citizen, and the godmother of the Prince scion, Jeremy, who was born two years after their return to America.

After the ordeal of the Atlantic crossing (they sailed the day the Athenia was torpedoed), Bill calmed down enough to look for a job. So he looked. A full year of unemployment later, Bill did a season of stock at Eaglesmere, Pa. Then, in order to insure three diapers a day for his new son, Bill took up his photographic hobby in earnest and went to work for a shutter-clicker in skirts.

"I did everything from mixing the 'soup' to asking wide-eyed kids to watch the you-know-what. Then, having served an apprenticeship of sorts, my employer, bless her, put me to work ringing doorbells and making plain and fancy photographic portraits of the neighborhood children.

"I left this job as soon as possible, to become an announcer at WQXR, the New York 'Classical Music Station,' and sandwiched in a few summer stock jobs on the side. As an announcer I was fine—I thought. I worked a 7:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. shift, and one night I was so darned tired that when I began a newscast, I muffed a line—and went right on muffing for the entire fifteen minute show. I couldn't get out of that building fast enough. And I've never been back. I just assumed I'd been fired.

"After that I had to buckle down hard. Jeremy was growing fast and his appetite was keeping pace. I finally sat down and wrote a letter to Eva Le Gallienne, who was casting for the Theatre Guild's production of "Ah, Wilderness." The next day she phoned me and I rushed over to read for her. That was my big break. I got the part of Richard. The revival was a success, and I did two more plays before 'The Eve of St. Mark' came along."

"St. Mark was the type of play he'd been working all his life to get. As Quizz West, Bill had every Hollywood talent scout sitting on the edge of his seat waiting for the third-act curtain, and sprinting backstage to sign him to that long, white legal paper.

Bill did sign—with Warner Bros. In his first picture, "Destination Tokyo," he scored a great personal success as the young Naval corpsman. In his fifth, "Pillow to Post" with Ida Lupino, he achieved stardom.

And in between he got feature billing in "Cinderella Jones;" "Objective, Burma;" and "Shadow of a Woman."

Meanwhile, too, he found time to pull two of the neatest tricks of the year. (1) He drove home over winding Laurel Canyon, after giving his blood to the Red Cross once too often; he blacked-out, hit another car head-on, and stepped out of the wreck without a scratch; and (2) he remembered his tin wedding anniversary and his gal (with almost no hints at all) and came trotting home with a shiny new tin garbage pail filled with long-stemmed American beauty roses, under which he'd hidden a full-length mink coat . . . Dorothy's well-earned reward for ten years of devotion, loyalty, financial and moral backing. And Dot's distinct pleasure was Bill's reward for having stepped from pauper to Prince to prove her faith in him.

over-emphasized mouth and Adrian shoulders which had been her trademark for years. This was the story of a woman who lived in Glendale, California—an American girl of just-average looks, not much education, no taste in clothes, who worked very hard and eventually made money, but never had time to improve herself. Both producer and star were tremendously excited at the prospect.

Mr. Wald approached Michael Curtiz with a story outline and found the director receptive. "For Barbara Stanwyck, of course," he said.

"No, for Joan Crawford."

Mike Curtiz waved the producer away, shuddering. "No-no-no! Not a dancing doll! Not a Noel Coward character! This woman is not Joan Crawford!"

"Never mind. Meet her—talk with her—you'll see!"

The director met Joan, arched a shoulder at her, belligerently, and cried: "If you do Mildred, y'understand, we want no long eyelashes, no funny mouth, no silly-foolish eyebrows, no shoulders to here!" Joan, who had already agreed to this, pretended to be hearing it for the first time, incredulously. The items became symbols between them. They had a running gag in which every time Joan appeared in a new outfit, Mike would groan, hold his head and mutter: "Shoulders—TOO MUCH SHOULDERS—fewer SHOULDERS!" Until one day a uniformed messenger girl set an enormous box, beautifully wrapped and be-ribboned, before him announcing: "From Miss Crawford!" Inside were two huge shoulder-pads, a pair of three-inch-long eyelashes, a Stop Red lipstick and a note from Joan reading: "They're all yours!"

At a luncheon celebrating the last day's shooting of what the whole company fondly believes to be a good picture, the director made a little speech confessing that he had been prejudiced against his star to begin with, had been reluctant to think himself wrong, but now admitted that it had never been his pleasure to direct an actress so cooperative, so hard-working, so determined to make a good picture, never late, never lazy, never too many shoulders!

The spirit of the picture was cooperation. No one had special favors; there was no offstage music to put temperamental actors "in the mood", no fancy service, just hours of hard work. Problems that seemed impossible were eventually resolved, and Ernest Haller, ace cameraman, and three leading men—Jack Carson, Zachary Scott and Bruce Bennett ("Not a tired old face among 'em!" exults Mike)—were lined up. Even bit parts fell into such capable hands as Eve Arden's and George Tobias'.

The choice of a girl to play Joan's daughter Veda almost stumped them. Hollywood teems with talented youngsters, and at first finding the right girl seemed mere routine. But they tested twenty-six before they found her. Girls read scenes day after day, and nothing happened. At last Mr. Wald telephoned Joan: "Will you come down and stand in for tests with a group of girls today?"

He was afraid Joan might consider herself too important to work with a young unknown, but she said "yes" eagerly.

At first, girls in the group to be tested were terrified at the idea of trying out before a big star, and one even broke down and cried, declaring she was too nervous to go on. Joan took her into a corner. "Listen, I know how you feel," she said soothingly. "I've been through all this. I know how tough it can be. You've got nothing to worry about—if you know you're good—and of course you know you are! You can do this scene."

She helped each contestant through her ordeal, but didn't demand to help decide on the girl to be chosen. "That's none of my business," she asserted to amazed executives who couldn't believe their ears. "My job is acting and my hands are full with my own part."

Ann Blythe was finally signed. Came time for Ann, as the rebellious daughter, to slap Joan's face. Ann was afraid to do it. "Come on, put your back into it," urged Joan. "I'll pull my head out of the way in time." Ann was quicker than expected, however, and the force of her blow knocked Joan to the floor.

Then the action was reversed. This time Joan must slap Ann, whereupon the star burst into tears. "It looks swell on the screen!" congratulated Mr. Wald. Which seemingly makes anything worthwhile.

Joan threw herself into the creation of "Mildred Pierce." That's her long-time habit. My first glimpse of her was when she was dancing for a cup at Cocoanut Grove. At that moment, nothing on earth mattered to Joan but winning that silver trophy, which she triumphantly did. She could always lose herself in what she was doing. I remember coming on her another time sitting under the cameras dissolved in tears, earnestly portraying the grief that should have been expressed by the picture's star in her big scene. Joan was only a featured player, but the director thought her emotional example might be catching. For some reason it was.
